In spite of this the name of Jerusalem does not appear on any list of conquered locations during the reign of Tuthmose III or any of his successors during the time period when Canaan was part of Egypt's empire. The Egyptians recognized Jerusalem by another name however which was "Qadesh". It is "Qadesh" that is mentioned in the lists of subdued Asiatic cities of most of the Egyptian kings of this period (M. Gadalla, The Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Egypt, p. 162-163).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the book of Nehemiah speaks of "Jerusalem the holy city" which in Hebrew is "Yurushalayim haQudesh"? The modern Arabic name for Jerusalem is "el-Quds" which becomes "ha-Qudesh" in Hebrew. This word means, both in Arabic and Hebrew "the holy ground" which, as I have previously shown you, becomes "holy" only because Tuthmose III positioned his Ark of Amen-Ra there during his 7 month siege of Megiddo.

In closing both the Bible and the Koran use the name "Qadesh" as a synonym for Jerusalem.

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen? Simply that instead of the Israelites or the Jews being responsible for making Jerusalem a "holy city of God" we must lay that distinction at the feet of the Pharaoh Tuthmose III, the true Biblical David and the nation of Egypt and not Israel.

WHO WAS THE TRUE FATHER OF ISAAC?

Let us not forget that we are trying to determine just why and how we find a lineage of Hebrew Pharaohs on the throne of Egypt during the 18th Dynasty. We ended the prior article asking a major question: "Who is the true father of Isaac?". Normally some might think that this "Egyptian-Hebrew" link began with the Biblical Joseph since he married the daughter of the Priest of Heliopolis and that would be a good guess but the truth is the link of which I speak began long before that as we shall see. It began with Abraham and Sarah.

Now we are all familiar with the story of Abraham and Isaac because the Old Testament assures us repeatedly that Abraham was the father of Isaac and also that Abraham was the founder of the twelve tribes of Israel. As we have seen Sarah was marrier to both Abraham and the Pharaoh Tuthmose III and the child that necessitated the "handmaid" could have belonged to either of them. So we need to go very carefully if we are to amass the evidence necessary to make a definitive decision as to whom the real father of this child might be.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that Abraham was only the adoptive father of Isaac and that Isaac's real father and the founder of the twelve tribes of Israel was Tuthmose III (King David)?

Before you think I and others who have studied this out have lost their minds understand as I have already stated that the Biblical chronology and identities of certain Biblical characters are purposely misrepresented and are presented out of proper chronological sequence by Ezra in the 6th century B.C.E. as well as other redactors which followed him. The reason for this as I have stated began primarily due to the then present contention between Persia and Egypt in Ezra's day. Wanting to conceal the true identities of the parents of these returning Jews and at the same time provide them with "roots" for their race Ezra purposefully concealed the true parentage of these "returning black-skinned Jews" and provided them with an alternate history as to their origins. The Egyptian heritage of these returning Hebrew-Jews was covered up for if Persia ever intended to use these Jews as a "buffer" between them and Egypt as they were positioned in the Fertile Cresent then they certainly could not tell them that at present Persia was at war with their family. This fact was addressed elsewhere in a prior article on this website.

Now we must turn to Abraham, Sarah, and Isaac if we are ever to get to the bottom of this puzzle. Modern scholarship will teach us today that Abram and his wife Sarai, who were both renamed by the Lord later as Abraham and Sarah, made their way to Egypt from Canaan at a time of famine. As we have previously stated if "food" was the only motive for the trip to Egypt then Abraham and Sarah had no need to travel so deeply into Egypt to the place where the Pharaoh lived.

Answer for yourself: Who was the Pharaoh in Egypt at this time? You will be surprised to know that it was Tuthmose III (whom we have identified with the Biblical King David). Take a seat for a second and catch your breath.

Again I must reiterate that if you read article 2 linked above then you saw beyond any doubt that the character named "David" in the Old Testament is in reality Tuthmose III, a ruling Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt.

Egyptian records indicate that this young King David-Tuthmose III was sharing a co-regency with his aunt-stepmother Queen Hatshepsut. On Abram's and Sarai's arrival, fearing he might be killed because Sarai's good looks, Abram took the precaution of introducing her as his sister as recorded in Genesis, 12:11-12). The precaution proved to be the right decision for Abram because this will provide ultimately the link to the throne of Egypt for the later Jewish race.

Gen 12:14-15 14 And it came to pass, that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld the woman that she was very fair. 15 The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before Pharaoh: and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house. (KJV)

On hearing of her beauty and good looks, Tuthmose III took Sarai as his wife, having paid Abram her bride-price.

Gen 12:16 16 And he entreated Abram well for her sake: and he had sheep, and oxen, and he asses, and menservants, and maidservants, and she asses, and camels. (KJV)

Gen 13:2 2 And Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. (KJV)

Love and affection sometimes played a role (Ancient Egypt is a good example), but marriage was always an economic union. Every business transaction has financial questions that have to be answered, and marriage is no exception.

Answer for yourself: What guarantee is there that the groom will not change his mind between the betrothal and the wedding? A "bride price" was paid to the family of the bride. This was usually a sum of money or property paid as a gesture of sincerity. This is similar to the modern engagement ring except that the bride price usually went to the bride's father and was usually just a token.

Answer for yourself: Is it a coincidence that the following verse after mentioning that Sarai "was taken into Pharaohs' house" is the description of the "bride price". Sarai became the wife of Pharaoh and you can expect that they "became one flesh".

Abraham was paid well according to the custom of Egypt. However, his transgression in having married another man's wife resulted in what the Bible describes as "a plague" descending on Pharaoh's house. When he eventually discovered the reason, the Pharaoh sent Abram and Sarai back to Canaan.

As marriage in those days meant having sexual intercourse with a woman after having paid her bride-price with the intention of keeping her. That being so there is no question of sex not having taken place between Sarai and the Pharaoh Tuthmose III. The very fact that the Bible confirms the marriage also means that it had been consummated. This idea is reinforced, moreover, by the punishment of the plague said to have descended on Pharaoh's house.

Now for the big, big question since we saw that Sarai and Pharaoh were "man and wife".

Answer for yourself: Was Isaac, the son born to Sarai after her return to Canaan, the child of Abram or Pharaoh Tuthmose III?

After this event we find that many things happened to this couple. We find that the names of Abram was changed to Abraham and Sarai's to Sarah.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this "name change" confirms that Pharaoh Tuthmose III was Isaac's father? Let us see how by examining some Hebrew Scriptures and thinking as we read them.

Genesis, 15:13

13 And He said unto Abram: 'Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years;

This passage speaks of Abram's descendants. Or does it? At this time if we are correct then "thy seed" refers to Sarai's seed and not Abraham since Abraham is not the biological father. Inn fact, only the descendants of Sarai are meant in the above passage. Although Abram fathered seven other sons, none of them is included here, and we have the promise that they will return to Egypt.

Genesis, 15:18

18 In that day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying: 'Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt (Nile) unto the great river, the river Euphrates;

Wait a minute. Here is this same promise that we saw in fulfilled in the prior articles on Tuthmose III (King David) and Amenhotep III (King Solomon).

If you missed it then I highly recommend that you re-read them right now.

Answer for yourself: Who was at this time the only "seed" of Abram? It was Isaac by the marriage of Sarai with Pharaoh Tuthmose III.

Answer for yourself: Having seen the unbelievable parallels between King David and Tuthmose III and King Solomon and Amenhotep III in these above article and that both recovered and managed the "land between the Nile and the Euphrates" which is described in both Egyptian records and the Old Testament when speaking about King David and King Solomon then does it not stand to reason that Egypt would not be giving it land to "Jews" but to those inheriting the legacy of Pharaoh? THINK!

This passage is terribly important is just another puzzle piece that helps us identity just whom this lineage of Abram is really all about. This passage, so often overlooked in reading the Old Testament, if of major importance since it contains the further promise that Isaac's descendants are later to inherit the Egyptian empire existing at the time of Tuthmose III, "from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates". In this case God's Covenant is not to be transferred to all of Abram's children, but only to those of Isaac. Now that sounds more familiar but lacking due to our confused genealogy is the real identities of Isaac's descendents who are to come later whom we read never realizing that they are Egyptian royalty.

Now we move on.

Genesis, 16:3

3 And Sarai Abram's wife took Hagar the Egyptian, her handmaid, after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to Abram her husband to be his wife.

Answer for yourself: Was Sarai now of Egyptian royalty, although she did not live with Pharaoh, even though she lived in Canaan and we not know it? Yes she is as we will soon see.

Let me remind you it was Sarai and not Abram "who took Hagar as her Egyptian handmaid".

Answer for yourself: Did Abram have the authority or power to do this or did only Sarai owing to her prior position as Pharaoh's wife and giving the Pharaoh a son?

What the typical reader of the Bible unfamiliar with Egypt and its customs fails to realize when reading the account of Hagar is that the only reasonable way for Sarai to have had an Egyptian maid in those days was if her royal husband, Tuthmose III and not Abram, had presented her with one and he would have been more likely to do that had he expected her to give birth to his child whom we now is beginning to see is Isaac. We make the mistake of thinking that Hagar was given to Sarai after ten years but in reality that is not true as she was given to Sarai to help with the birth of Isaac ten years earlier. Abram, failing to have his own offspring was after ten years given Hagar to provide his children.

Abram's and Sarai's name are now changed by the Lord to Abraham. Now this get really interesting!

Genesis 17:5

5 Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham; for the father of a multitude of nations have I made thee.

Answer for yourself: What was the new addition to the name of Abram? Well we see it was two letters..."ha". Abram became Abra-"ha"-am.

Answer for yourself: What does Egyptian hieroglyphs have to do with this if anything? A lot. According to Egyptian hieroglyphs, the insertion of "ha" into Abram's name gives us "ham" which means majesty, and his new name can be translated as "heart of the majesty of the sun god Ra".

That ought to take your breath away for a second.

Gen 17:15 15 And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What does "Sarah" mean?

At the same time, Sarai's name was changed to Sarah, which meant "queen" in the ancient languages of western Asia.

Strong's Concordance is a big help to us now:

The word in the text in Gen. 17:15 is "saw-raw":

8283 Sarah (saw-raw'); the same as 8282; Sarah, Abraham's wife: KJV--

Let us look at the root word which according to Strong's Concordance "is the same":

Sarah. 8282 sarah (saw-raw'); feminine of 8269; a mistress, i.e. female noble: KJV-- lady, princess, queen.

Answer for yourself: How in the world is Sarah a queen? Was it by Abram? Where does it say Abram was a King and a King of what? The text is completely silent on Abram being a King so we have to look elsewhere for the link to Sarah being a Queen. Or could it be that Sarah is a "queen by being previously married to to Tuthmose III? Well now you see it.

Answer for yourself: Was Sarai a Pharaohs' queen? The text would lead us to believe that she was purchased by the Pharaoh and became the wife of Pharaoh.

Genesis, 17:16

16 And I will bless her, and moreover I will give thee a son of her; yea, I will bless her, and she shall be a mother of nations; kings of peoples shall be of her.'

Answer for yourself: Were "kings" to come from Sarah or Abraham? They were to come from Sarah because she was the wife of Pharaoh. Were Pharaohs ever addressed as "sar" which is the masculine form for Sarah? Yes, in fact they were. The evidence keeps mounting does it not?

The Amarna letters, which are basically the foreign archives of the Eighteenth Dynasty of Pharaohs of Egypt, make it clear that the Pharaoh was sometimes addressed as "sar", the masculine form of Sarah: it was the term, for instance, that Tarkhun Dara, the Hittite prince, used in addressing Amenhotep III, the great-grandson of Tuthmose III (Conder, The Tell Amarna Tablets).

Answer for yourself: Does this foretelling of the royal character of Sarah's descendants (kings of peoples shall be of her) confirms the royal nature of their father, the Pharaoh, and therefore does this mean by default that Abraham must be only the adoptive father? It certainly does. Had Isaac been the natural offspring of Abraham then the text would have read "Kings of peoples shall be of Abraham" but it does not say that. It has to be of Sarah for the Pharaoh's blood runs through her first son Isaac and not the other children she was later to have.

But that is not all.

Answer for yourself: What does circumcision have to do with any of this?

Before the account of the change in Sarai's name, we are told that part of the Lord's covenant with Abraham involved the stipulation that, before the birth of the child to be born to Sarai, all male children should be circumcised when eight days old.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware at that time circumcision was a practice that had originally been confined solely to the Egyptians among ancient nations? Egypt was the only nation at that time to circumcise their male children of all the nations of the earth.

Answer for yourself: Since Isaac has the blood of the Pharaoh Tuthmose III then should we not expect that it necessary to circumcise him? You bet it was.

Gen 21:1-4 1 And the LORD visited Sarah as he had said, and the LORD did unto Sarah as he had spoken. 2 For Sarah conceived, and bare Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time of which God had spoken to him. 3 And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, whom Sarah bare to him, Isaac. 4 And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac being eight days old, as God had commanded him. (KJV)

A further indication that the line of descent from Abraham will be through Isaac rather than any of his other sons is to be found in Genesis, 21:12 where the Lord instructs him ". . . in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for in Isaac shall thy seed be called."

It is not surprising that Sarah has such authority in a time and in a place when women were not considered equals with men. It makes all the more sense when you realize that Sarah was of royalty and wife and queen to the Pharaoh Tuthmose III.

If you have followed the story up to now then you have seen that behind the traditional Biblical account we have the hidden story of the royalty of the Pharaoh Tuthmose III, the great military genius of the world at that time who had "recovered" the glory of past Egypt and ancestor Tuthmose I and who had fathered a son by Sarai who was the Biblical Isaac to whom promises of future inheritance was repeatedly reiterated in the Old Testament. Poor Abraham did not have much. His only son was not his and his wife when he looked at her was a daily reminder that she was the wife of Pharaoh and mother of Pharaoh's child. Not only that but she acted like royalty and carried the authority of royalty stemming from the throne of Egypt. She was after all "the queen" of the strongest man in the world...Tuthmose III. King Tuthmose III, let us not forget, is remembered as The Napoleon of Ancient Egypt. He succeeded his stepmother Hatshepsut to the throne and was then responsible for a number of highly successful military campaigns to expand and secure Egypt's boundaries. The reign of Tuthmose III marked an increase in the power, wealth and influence of Egypt which became the pre eminent power in the area at this time. So Sarai was no light weight and I always used to wonder when reading these accounts why Sarai/Sarah seemed to be the central and dominant figure in these stories with Abraham and why she was the catalyst that made everything go. Now I know why. Hidden behind the Biblical story is the real identity of Sarah....wife and Queen of Egypt.

Now for something somber. You can expect that human nature would eventually show up in the life of Abraham and it does in Genesis, 22:9-12. Genesis 22:9-12 records how Abraham took his son, Isaac, the heir of Egypt, to the top of a mountain where he proposed to sacrifice him as a burnt offering. That always bothered me for it is almost unbelievable that Abraham would kill his own son; that is if Isaac was his own son. But if Isaac was a constant reminder to Abraham of the Pharaoh's son then Abraham might not hesitate to remove this thorn in his flesh which reminded him daily of his failure as a man to sire children.

Answer for yourself: But now understanding the dynamics behind the story then is it not more reasonable to now understand the motives of Abraham in taking Isaac to the mountain to "sacrifice him"? Poor old Abraham had it up to here with Egypt. Isaac was a goner; that is until the Lord intervened (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 91.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that a tradition in the Talmud relates that Sarah's death, reported in the Bible after this event, came as a result of someone telling her of Abraham's intention to kill Isaac (Polano, Selections from the Talmud, p. 72).

Let us think and jump ahead for just a second.

Gen 25:33-34 33 And Jacob said, Swear to me this day; and he (Esau) sware unto him: and he sold his birthright unto Jacob. 34 Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles; and he did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: thus Esau despised his birthright. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What was this birthright?

When Esau, the elder of Isaac's twin sons, sold his "birthright" to his younger brother Jacob (Genesis, 25:33-34), Esau seems to have transferred to him some honorary position or title rather than material inheritance.

Gen 37:3 3 Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age: and he made him a coat of many colors. (KJV)

This honorary position in turn, appears to have been transferred from Jacob to Joseph, his favorite son, when he presented him with his many-colored coat (Genesis, 37:3), a gift which helped to increase the enmity of the half-brothers who, shortly afterwards, were to sell him into slavery in Egypt (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 91).

As you might be beginning to think something is going on behind the scenes of these simple stories that simply does not become revealed without much study into Egyptian history and archeology. You would be right.

Ahmed Osman, in his The House of the Messiah, p. 92-26, reminds us that this view that Isaac was not the son of Abraham but rather Tuthmose III and Sarai does not rest solely on interpretation of these biblical texts although they are helpful when examined through "Egyptian eyes and Egyptian history". Judaism teaches that since that time, the time of Sarah for instance, and even to the present day, a child cannot be regarded as a Jew no matter who the father may have been, unless the mother was herself Jewish.

Answer for yourself: Is this a hint that again indicates that the descendants of Sarah were not the biological descendants of Abraham? The idea expressed is that even if the husband (Abraham) is not the natural father the seed from the woman is what matters concerning primogeniture. Through the mother, in this instance the seed sown in her womb by Tuthmose III, we find the system of inheritance or succession by the firstborn, specifically the eldest son. This makes all the more sense when we know the Egyptian history and Biblical word origins of Sarah and if we read between the lines and compare all this with Egyptian chronology.

Now for a most enlightening piece of information.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Jewish Talmud preserves a tradition in its texts that nobody who knew Abraham believed that Isaac was his son? This is absolutely startling when you see this! The Jews have the truth of their origins but bury it out of sight so no one but the most dedicated students will ever find it.

It says: "On the day that Abraham weaned his son Isaac, he made a great banquet, and all the peoples of the world derided him, saying: 'Have you seen that old man and woman who brought a foundling from the street, and now claim him as their son? And what is more they make a great banquet to establish their claim'" (Moustafa Gadalla, Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, p. 145).

Answer for yourself: Could this verse give us a clue as to why the Bible states that after the birth of this child, Isaac, that Abraham built an altar and was ready to slaughter Isaac with a knife as a sacrifice to the Lord? If you are like me then you should find it rather difficult to believe that Abraham would want to kill his own son if Isaac was truly of his own blood. Even more startling is the fact that human sacrifices were not the custom of this time in this area of the world, and even if it was the custom one has to wonder why Abraham would not have sacrificed his supposedly oldest son names Ishmael.

A verse in the Koran (The Prophets, Sura XXI:72) says of Abraham:

We bestowed on him Isaac and, as an additional gift, (A grandson), Jacob.

Answer for yourself: Is this verse alluding to the fact that possibly Isaac is not the biological offspring of Abraham and since Jacob is the son of Isaac then neither is Jacob the biological offspring of Abraham but carries within him the blood of Pharaohs? If Jacob is the seed of Isaac and Isaac is the seed of an Egyptian Pharaoh then then lineage of Egypt runs through Isaac, Jacob, and the sons of Jacob culminating with David and Solomon, etc.

The verse indicates that Isaac and Jacob were not Abraham's originally. Muslim scholars interpret the passage by claiming that what it really means is: "We gave him Isaac because he was asking for a son, and another as a gift whom he was not asking for." It is easy to see, however, that this cannot have been the case because it goes much deeper than that and has biological ties with historical Egypt. In the first place, Jacob had not been born when Abraham died. Furthermore, at the time Jacob was born Abraham already had seven other sons - one, Ishmael, by Hagar, Sarah's Egyptian maid, and six by another wife, Keturah. A third point is that Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Tuthmose III, was not the first-born of Isaac's twin sons, but gained importance and ties to the throne of Egypt when Esau sold him his birthright (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 92-93. THINK. Jacob inherited primogeniture when he purchased the birthright of the Pharaoh from Esau. Little did Esau value such a promise and position and figured that such a reality would never materialize itself since being a half-blood and the odds were not in his favor that he could ever ascend to the throne of Egypt since not being of pure Egyptian blood.

Another Sura of the Koran, having mentioned three of the prophets - Moses, Aaron and Ishmael - speaks of them in Mary, Sura XIX: 58, as being:

The posterity of Abraham And Israel (Jacob)...(Ibid., p. 92-93).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the "and" separating the posterity of both Abraham and Jacob? Why does this passage separate Abraham from Jacob? The Koran is making a simple statement that leads the reader to believe that there exists "two" separate posterities; one belonging to Abraham and one belonging to Jacob. What we have here is two completely different bloodlines and they are not the same.

The Koran states that Moses, Aaron, and Ishmael are associated with two "different" posterities or succeeding - future generations. These three, Moses, Aaron, and Jacob are not from the "same" lineage!

Answer for yourself: Does this fit perfectly with our understanding of Isaac being fathered by Tuthmose III and Ishmael being fathered from Abraham with Hagar as his mother? It sure does!

What I am telling you is that we have discovered a hidden bloodline connected to the throne of Egypt that will find expression through later Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty. No wonder Moses had a Pharoanic staff in the wilderness.

We have literally two different bloodlines. We know that Ishmael carried the blood of Abraham through Hagar but we also know that through Isaac we have the bloodline that flowed originally through Tuthmose III and later flowed through the veins of Moses and Aaron. It was through this bloodline that we have the later "Messianic Prophecies"! They find historical fulfillment with Tuthmose III and Tutankhamun. Thus if you follow the storyline then you see that the Koran is telling us that Moses and Aaron came from a different blood line than Abraham; a royal blood tied to the throne of Egypt that came through the marriage of Sarai with Pharaoh Tuthmose III.

So we must keep in our minds this separation if we are ever to put this puzzle together correctly. We know that Ishmael comes from the loins of Abraham but the line of Moses (Pharaoh Akhenaten) and Aaron are descendants of Isaac and Jacob whom we saw is the offspring of Tuthmose III! This has unbelievable ramifications when we get to the 18th Dynasty of Pharaohs of Egypt.

The only possible explanation of this verse is that some of these three prophets were descendants of Jacob, but not of Abraham. Now we have to put our thinking caps on and leave them on if we are to continue to see this twisting road laid out for us in the Old Testament; especially in light of our prior teachings to the contrary.

The above passage from the Koran literally names two sets of people:

- two ancestors (Abraham and Jacob) and
- three named descendants (Moses, Aaron and Ishmael).

Answer for yourself: Does it not strike you rather odd that Jacob (Israel) is not listed as a descendant of Abraham but rather as separate posterity and complete other line of ancestry? We usually think of Abraham being a "father of nations" and he surely was through Ishmael but now we must re-think that Jacob is now a separate "father of nations" as well.

Had Jacob been of the bloodline and loins of Abraham he should have been listed among the descendants along with Moses, Aaron, and Ishmael but he is not. Instead the Koran lists him as a separate family lineage (coming from Tuthmose III and Sarai and not from Abraham's loins). But instead we find Jacob (the son of Isaac who is the son of Tuthmose III) listed separately as we do Abraham as the fountainhead of a different people; a people of royalty tied to the greatest nation of the world...Egypt. The fact that Jacob's name is placed in an equal position as an ancestor as Abraham signifies that we are dealing with two separate lines of descent, in which case Jacob himself could not have been descended from Abraham (by default that means that Isaac, his father, could not have been descended from Abraham as well). The correct interpretation is that Ishmael was descended from Abraham, and Aaron and Moses were descended from Jacob whose father was Isaac whose father was Tuthmose III, a 18th Dynasty Pharaoh.

The fact that the Koran gives Abraham and Jacob equal position as ancestors - the former of the Ishmaelites, the latter of the Israelites - is also a strong indication that the Israelites were not to be regarded as descendants of Abraham. That blows the Old Testament and what we have been taught about Israel from "tradition" completely out of the water!

The confusion that surrounds the identity of Isaac's father has, I believe, historical roots that go beyond the "adulterous and sinful" marriage between Sarah and Tuthmose III. We must remember that the biblical account of these events was not put down in writing until many centuries after the Israelites' Exodus from Egypt. By that time Egypt and its Pharaoh had become a symbol of hatred for the Israelites. As I have repeatedly referred in prior article the biblical redactor, in this case Ezra, took great pains to conceal any bloodline connection between Israel and Egypt and often painted Egypt in the worst of colors. This is all the more understandable as our studies into the true identity of Israel progress. Ezra, and other redactors and creators of the Hebrew Old Testament, were faced with a very difficult task, for the information available confirmed that Sarah had been married to an Egyptian Pharaoh, then returned with Abraham to Canaan, where she gave birth to Isaac. Anyone who reads the story, told in this form, would conclude automatically that Pharaoh must have been Isaac's father. However, at a time when the oral tradition and cornerstone of biblical teaching was to emphasize how God saved the Israelites from their Egyptian oppressors, the narrator had to find some means of separating the two events; the departure of Sarah from Egypt and the birth of Isaac. In so doing he hid the identity of the real father of Isaac.

Ezra, or other redactors of the Old Testament have a problem. They have to separate the birth of Isaac from the time-frame of historical events that might expose the marriage and conception of Isaac by Tuthmose III. In so doing they decide to cover it up and bury it in a forged and man-made history as we now see. The texts teach us that once Sarah and Abraham had resettled in Canaan, we have the interjecting of another story in which is described how Abraham sought to free his nephew, Lot, who had been captured by some enemies. But that is not all. Following the Lot story we have the appearance of the Lord to Abraham, foretelling what can only be the birth of Isaac, whose descendants are said would return to Egypt. After such a promise of a son by the Lord we should expect an account of Isaac's birth to follow, but it does not. Instead it is stressed in Genesis, 16:1 that Sarah was unable to bear children.

Answer for yourself: Is this "barrenness" story used to again cover up any and all attempts to connect the birth of the soon coming child with the possibility of having an Egyptian father let alone a Pharaoh for a father?

This is very connivent and serves the purpose to separate any and all attempts to connect the birth of Isaac with Tuthmose III as his possible father. Now a great length of time will passes to further separate Tuthmose III from the coming "child" of promise. Now ten years passes since Abraham and Sarah returned to Canaan and we now find Sarah giving Abraham her Egyptian maid, Hagar, as a wife, and lshmael was born of their union. This again separates any and all ideas that the "child of promise" was the son of a Pharaoh. But the redactor is not through. Fourteen more years are allowed to pass, according to the biblical narrator, who again stresses that Sarah was barren for the second time, and adds to the picture her advancing age. At ninety we are conditioned to believe that she was too old to give birth. Now enter three messengers of God appear and announce that Sarah will have a son the following year.

It would appear in light of what we have learned up to now concerning King David and King Solomon that the biblical narrator did not feel safe in introducing the birth of Isaac so close to Abraham and Sarah leaving Egypt. Certainly he feared that someone might still relate him to his real father, so he presents us with yet another character, Abimelech, king of Gerar. On a visit to Gerar, we are told, Abraham again took the precaution of claiming that Sarah was his sister and, although we have been assured that she was an old woman of ninety, Abimelech fell in love with Sarah and was about to marry her when the Lord appeared to him in a dream and warned him not to marry a woman who was already someone else's wife. And it is only at this point when a great deal of time had been made to pass and great number of other events took place that the Biblical redactor and narrator felt it at last safe to introduce the birth of Isaac (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 92-96).

Answer for yourself: In spite of these "cover-ups" can we see through these clumsy attempts to conceal the truth about the identity of Isaac and Jacob? We sure can. The birth of Isaac has been purposely delayed over and over again through adjustment and tinkering with part of the chronology and not with others. But in so doing the biblical narrator has betrayed himself; that is if you have a keen eye for such detail.

If you caught it we have a period of over ten years that is made to pass since Abraham and Sarah returned to Canaan before Sarah gives Abraham her Egyptian handmaid Hagar to sire offspring.

Answer for yourself: Why give Sarai a handmaid in the first place? What was her need that necessitated such a gift of the handmaid in the first place? We are led to believe that Sarah received the services of an Egyptian handmaid but no need or mention of "why" is mentioned in the text. This is confusing especially in light of the tampering with the chronology.

Answer for yourself: Could it have been a pregnancy that necessitated the giving of the handmaid to Sarah by the Pharaoh within the first year of their leaving Egypt and we miss it because the text has artificially separated such events by ten years?

If we put our thinking hats on again it seems likely that the reason for the gift of the handmaid was that she was expecting Pharaoh's child.

Answer for yourself: Now have you ever noticed the age of Ishmael in the Old Testament texts?

Therefore, if Hagar was given to Sarah to help with the birth of Isaac then one would expect Isaac to be older than lshmael, the child born to the maid, Hagar, after Sarah had given her to Abraham as a wife. But this is just opposite to what the received text of the Old Testament given us by the pen of Ezra. The biblical narrator tries to persuade us that the opposite is true by a wide margin. We are told (Genesis, 17:25) that Ishmael was thirteen years of age when he was circumcised, a year before the birth of Isaac (Ibid.).

Gen 17:25 25 And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Thinking hats still one? The biblical account four chapters later of Hagar's flight with her son, after Sarah had sent them away, gives quite a different impression of his age: "And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, putting it on her shoulder, and the child, and sent her away: and she departed, and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba. And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs. And she went, and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bowshot: for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lift up her voice, and wept. And God heard the voice of the lad; and the angel of God called to Hagar out of Heaven, and said unto her, What aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for I will make him a great nation. And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink" (Genesis, 21:14-19).

Answer for yourself: Does the above account make it seem if Ishmael is but a small child? If his mother had to carry Ishmael, and when she placed him under a bush and he was unable to move, then he cannot, unlike Isaac, have yet reached walking age. How strong was Hagar to carry a 13 year old child in the first place? Was she the female Sampson of the Bible? Seriously, if Hagar had to carry Ishmael, and when she placed him under a bush because he was unable to move then he cannot, unlike Isaac, have yet reached walking age. Although this story is not mentioned in the Koran, Islamic tradition agrees with the Bible in this account, representing Ishmael as a mere baby, carried by his mother and unable to move from the spot where she placed him; but a fountain of water, identified with the present Zamzam in Mecca, appeared suddenly beneath his feet.

If we look at Genesis 26:3 we read that the Lord told Isaac: "Go not down into Egypt". It is logical to assume that there is no reason for this instruction to Isaac unless it was to forbid him to see out his real father's identity and inheritance. The Bible goes on to relate that Isaac grew up and married Rebekah. This is the Biblical account of which we are all familiar. But there is much more to this simple story which will be revealed later so hang in there. Picking up this "simple story" we find that the Bible relates that Isaac and Rebekah has twins named "Esau and Jacob" and we all are familiar with Esau selling his "birthright". Jacob had eleven children and the youngest was Joseph who began the Israelite Sojoun into Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What are the meanings of these "key" names when translated back into the Egyptian language?

- Abraham=(in Egyptian) means "heart of the majesty of Ra"
- Sarah=(in both Hebrew and Egyptian) is the feminine form of "Sar"(Queen)
- Ysra/Sar=(in both Hebrew and Egyptian) means "Prince/Princess (Queen) or High Official)
- El=(in Hebrew) is the short from of Elohim (God)
- Ysrael (Israel)=means ("Elohim [God] rules"), which is the same title given to the ruling Pharaoh of Egypt

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen up to now?

If we look closely and read "between the lines" then we see that Sarai left Egypt with Abram, Sarai was already pregnant by Tuthmose III, who gave her Hagar as a maid to assist in the birth and subsequent nursing of Isaac. Abraham later took Hagar as another wife and she gave birth to Ishmael. Sarah, at this time regarded herself as a Kings wife, a Pharaoh's wife, and her son, Isaac, as a prince. Sarai, knowing her position of royalty and the bloodline that flowed in Isaac's veins was not prepared to grant equal status to Ishmael. This makes all the sense in the world. That is why she sent Hagar and Ishmael away and why only Isaac of Abraham's sons is to be regarded from the Israelite point of view as his heir and why Abraham had not reservations to sacrifice a "son" which was not his in the first place and who was a constant reminder to him of his humiliation.

Despite all the efforts of the biblical narrator to distort his account of these events, the Israelites knew the truth about Isaac and never lost sight of the true identity of their great ancestor, Tuthmose III (the Biblical King David).

Later, not long after Abraham's death, we are told, Jacob assumed the role of this ancestor when the Lord changed his name to Israel: "And God appeared unto Jacob again. . . And God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel" (Genesis, 35:9-10).

Answer for yourself: What is so important about this passage? The name Israel. The significance of this passage lies in the name as we saw briefly above.

- The Hebrew term "el" is the short form of Elohim (God)
- "Ysra" or "sar" indicates a prince/princess/ or a ruler.

Therefore "Ysraei" means "Elohim" rules, like Egyptian gods (Pharaoh, too, was looked upon as a ruling god).

In the early centuries, Abraham appeared in Israelite writings as their great ancestor. However, from the time of Saul's subsequent Israelite kingdom, five centuries later, and even into Christian times, the warrior King David (Tuthmose III) came to be regarded as the only accepted ancestor for any legitimate king or Messiah.

Answer for yourself: Did you ever notice that the first messianic promise of a savior in the Book of Isaiah is given to Egypt?

Isa 19:20 20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Who is this "savior" who will deliver these Egyptian-Israelites? Is this a reference to the Hebrew Pharaoh of Egypt known as Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses)? Is this a reference to the 18th Dynasty of Egypt?

Well I hope I have made you think. The messianic implications for what we have learned is staggering. The more study you do the more you will come to see and understand the incredible links between Judaism and Egypt and the truth behind the "messianic prophecies" which were given to Egypt first. Sadly the bottom line is that our inherited religious texts are not reliable in all parts but let us be encouraged that with study and perseverance we can find the truth behind the stories we cherish. I hope you gathered an appreciation for the awesome 18th Dynasty of Egypt and their legacy of monotheism to the world. Let us believe "the truth".

TRACING THE BIRTHRIGHT THROUGH ISAAC, JACOB, AND JOSEPH

Our search for the Hebrew Pharaohs of Egypt continues. It is important that we set the scene correctly since having dealth previously with Abraham, Sarah, and the true "father" of Isaac whom we saw was Pharaoh Tuthmose III whom we spend a great deal of time proving was the Biblical David. We pick up the story following the expulsion of Abraham, Sarai, Hagar her handmaid to Palestine. It is important to keep these events in their proper time frame especially in light of the fact that as stated before the Biblical chronology is contrary to the actual historical records of Egypt and their King lists. While Tuthmosis III was creating the richest and most powerful empire the world had yet seen and at the same time establishing his own enduring reputation as the greatest of all the Pharaohs we must remember that Abraham and Sarah and her descendants had returned to Canaan and were leading a nomadic life. We are helped by the Book of Genesis to put all these puzzle pieces together. A careful reading of the Book of Genesis gives the reader hints that there exists distant links with the royal house of Egypt although with the passage of time these links growing fainter with each passing year. We now turn our attention to Sarah's side of the family since we again showed that Abraham is not the biological father of Isaac but rather Pharaoh Tuthmose III.

THE BLOODLINE AND THE BRITHRIGHT

Let us never forget that Isaac is the son of the bigamous marriage of Sarai to Tuthmosis III. This is the bloodline of a Pharaoh and the throne of Egypt. When Isaac grew to manhood the Book of Genesis, in chapter 25, describes that Isaac married Rebekah. Like Sarah before her, Rebekah is described as unfertile, but this may be simply an extravagant scriptural way of saying that, at a time when early marriage was the norm, a girl had been taken as a bride long before she reached child-bearing age. This was the common practice in these Asiaic lands in those days.

We are told that eventually Rebekah would give birth to twin sons. The first to be born was named Esau, the second to be born was Jacob. If we take time to remember the most important event in the life of Isaac is Esau, his brother, selling the birthright to Jacob over some soup. The special blessing of the elder or eldest son is a theme that we find in many biblical stories, but this is the only case where a birthright is mentioned.

Answer for yourself: What was entailed in Esau selling the birthright to Jacob?

What we are dealing with here is the inheritance of property or title.

Now for somethings very interesting.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Talmud states that Jacob did not receive any of Isaac's property after his father's death?

"When Isaac died, and Jacob and Esau wept together for their father's demise. They carried his body to the cave of Machpelah, which is in Hebron, and all the kings of Canaan followed with the mourners in the funeral train of Isaac . . . Isaac bequeathed his cattle and his possessions to his two sons. Esau said then to Jacob, 'Behold, this which our father has left us must be divided into two portions, then I will select my share.' Jacob divided all his father's possessions into two portions in the presence of Esau and his sons, and then addressing his brother, said: 'Take unto thyself both these portions which thou seest before thee. Behold, the God of Heaven and Earth spoke unto our ancestors, Abraham and isaac, saying, "Unto thy seed will I give this land as an everlasting possession." Now, all that our father left is before thee; if thou desirest the promised possession, the land of Canaan, take it, and this other wealth shall be mine; or if thou desirest these two portions, be it as it is pleasing in thy eyes, and the land of Canaan shall be the share for me and mine.' . . . Esau . . . taking the personal substance, he gave Jacob for his portion the land of Canaan from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the River Euphrates." (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 40).

There we have this saying again: "the land of Canaan from the river of Egypt (Nile) to the great river Euphrates".

Answer for yourself: Is this not the very same saying that we say with the territory controlled by the 18th Dynasty Pharaohs of Egypt and the very same land "reclaimed" in the military exploits of Tuthmose III (King David). Is this not the land promised to Abraham which was to be given to his descendants? It sure was however the Biblical texts did not tell us that the promise of Abraham's offspring inheriting the land from the Nile to the Euphrates would be from Sarah and Tuthmose III. It was from the union of Tuthmose III and Sarah that seed was to come from the throne of Egypt and the loins of the Pharaoh that would enter Abraham's family via Sarah and not Abraham.

Having this fact squarely before our eyes then the only apparent alternative, therefore, is that the birthright that passed from Esau, the elder twin, to Jacob was the princely title that flowed from the identity of their grandfather, Tuthmosis III.

The price Esau is said to have accepted for his birthright was "a pottage of lentils" (the Hebrew original is nazidadash, literally, 'soup of lentils').

Answer for yourself: What should this tell us? This is best interpreted as an indication that he did not value his birthright very highly. The Bible gives us a contrary picture of the events in the lives these sons of Isaac than extra-Biblical records indicate. Let us not forget that is was said of Abraham that he had 318 officers indicating that he had power and wealth. Yet the Bible paints for us a picture of simple nomadic life. Such a life is depicted in order to cover up the fact of the real situation at hand.

Gen 15:18 18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates: (KJV)

Living in Canaan, now separated from the thone of Egypt and being a "half-blood" linked to Egypt did not bode well for succession to the throne of Egypt. Being separated from Egypt and the thone and realizing that they were of a "mixed blood lineage" makes us think, as I am sure they did, that it had to be almost impossible for Esau or for Jacob to believe the promise given their family that one day their descendants would rule over a vast kingdom stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates.

Answer for yourself: Is there some connection to the fact with the reason the son of Sarah and Tuthmose III was named "Isaac"? Did we forget that "Isaac" means "laugher"?

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

3327 Yitschaq- Isaac="he laughs"; a Abrham's wife Sara, and the father of Jacob and Esau

No wonder Isaac laugher and you can imagine how his children must have felt when the promise of the Throne of Egypt was brought up in their hearing. No wonder Esau did not see any worth in such an outlandish promise that, as he must have felt, had no chance of ever being kept since there were "half-bloods" and not likely to be received on the throne of the world's mightest nation at that time.

Yet, of the two, the Old Testament suggests that Jacob would have more faith in the fulfilment of such a promise at some time in the future. We are told in the Book of Genesis that the twin brothers had vastly different characters. Esau was 'a skilful hunter, a man of the open country': in contrast, Jacob, like the son Joseph who would be born to him, seems to have been more of a dreamer, 'a quiet man, staying among the tents' (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 41).

The Talmud confirms that, when it came to dividing Isaac's estate, the cattle and all the rest of their father's possessions were inherited by Esau while Jacob chose the kingdom. After Isaac's possessions had been divided into two equal portions, Jacob is reported to have said to Esau:

"...Behold, the God of Heaven and Earth spoke unto our ancestors, Abraham and Isaac, saying: 'Unto thy seed will I give this land as an everlasting possession.' Now all that our father left is before thee; if thou desirest the promised possession, the land. . . take it; or. . . the land...shall be the share for me and mine.' After seeking advice, Esau chose his father's possessions and left Jacob with the promised land 'from the river of Egypt (Nile) to the great river, Euphrates..."* (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 41).

Answer for yourself: Is this not the same territory which we have seen repeatedly not only conquered and restored by the Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty but the same territory promised to the son of Sarah by Tuthmose III? It sure is!

The Biblical texts then tell us that Esau seems to have had second thoughts about his decision and, after a dispute about their father's blessing, threatened to kill Jacob. Jacob, in fear of his life, fled on his mother's advice to the home of her brother in Haran. It is strange how fate often picks us up and settles us in the will of God. We now find that in fleeing for his life Jacob will find the love of his life. He promptly fell in love with Rachel, the younger of his two cousins, but his uncle made him marry her elder sister, Leah, before he was allowed to marry Rachel. Rachel, too, proved to be unfertile, but in the course of the years Jacob is said to have fathered eleven children. Recorded for us is six sons and a daughter by Leah, two sons by Rachel's maid, Bilhah, and two more sons by Leah's maid, Zilpah. At last Rachel, his first love, gave him an eleventh son. They named him Joseph. More is coming on Joseph very soon.

Shortly afterwards, Jacob decided to return to his homeland, Canaan. It was on this journey that he is said to have had an encounter with the Lord which resulted in his name being changed, from Jacob to Israel.

Answer for yourself: What is so signifacant about the name Israel anyway? Well get ready.

The name "Israel" is made up of 3 syllables:

- Is-
- Ra-
- El-

IS-RA-EL

Answer for yourself: Do we see hidden in this name the faith of Jacob that one day his seed would one day not only inherit the land from the "Nile to the Euphrates" but that they would set upon the throne of Egypt?

During the days of Abraham, the family of Abraham and later offspring were subject to the religion of Egypt.

Before the worship of Amen-Ra (God) was instituted, Egyptians worshipped Isis (the Mother of God). When the Hebrews left Egypt and arrived in Canaan, their religion was influenced by the Canaanite religion whose God was named El (the planet of Saturn). The Star of David is a symbol which comes from the Egyptian religious concept of "so as above, so beneath". Hidden within the name of Israel, we find the hidden influence of the religions of Egypt (Isis and Ra) as well as the influence of Canaanite religion since the Canaanite God was named El (the planet of Saturn). Hidden deeper is the concept of Mother (goddess) and Father and Son (the Sun and the "son" or child of the Sun). Hidden even deeper as you can see is the Cosmological and Astronomical concepts hidden within the name "Israel". The Hebrews named their nation Is-Ra-El, or Israel. The Hebrews adopted Saturday (from Saturn's day) as their day of worship. Christians, whose astrological influence was the sun (also from Egyptian origin), worshipped on Sunday (or the sun's day). The significance of this event lies in the name Israel. The Hebrew term el is the short form of Elohim (God) and Ysra (or sar) indicates a prince or ruler. The bottom line to all of this is to note the Egyptian links to their religion in the life of this heir-apparent named Jacob or "Israel". We should expect so since he was to provide offspring which will set upon the Throne of Egypt.

JACOB AND THE BLOODLINE

We need take notice of the fact that if Isaac was the son of the Pharaoh III then the royal bloodline flowed in his veins and in the veins of his sons. We see that with Esau and Jacob whose name was latter changed to Is-ra-el. We must also take note that Jacob, or Israel, had a number of children by different women. Eventually Israel will have a son named Joseph by his first true love named Rachel. It is in this story of Jacob's/Israel's return to Canaan that the biblical scribes chose to emphasize again a special relationship between God and the Israelites.

Answer for yourself: How much of the Biblical account regarding Joseph is factual history? Well we are not sure as some things are verifiable and some things are not. We do know however that Jacob's son Joseph by his favorite wife Rachel was appointed by an unnamed Pharaoh as his minister of state, the second most powerful man in Egypt. The biblical account (Genesis 37:3) goes on to make it clear that Jacob loved Joseph more than any of his other sons and gave him his celebrated coat of many colours. The Biblical account also announces that Joseph's half-brothers hated Joseph because of Jacbo's favouritism since he was the son of his favorite wife, and even more when Joseph is said to have related two dreams to his brothers that made them jealous even more since they indicated that Joseph's brothers were to be subserviant to Joseph. The first dream was about sheaves of grain (symbolic of Joseph's brohters) bowing down to one sheaf that was supposed to be Joseph. The second dream was where eleven stars (symbolic of Joseph's brothers) bowed down to his star. The Sun and the moon too bowed to his star (symbolic of his father and mother). They were thinking Joseph had designs on ruling over them, even over their father and their mothers so they plotted in the beginning his murder but the grace of God allowed Joseph to be sold into slavery in Egypt instead.

Once in Egypt the Ishmaelite merchants who bought Joseph sold him to Potiphar, the captain of Pharaoh's guard, who found him a faithful servant and entrusted to him everything he owned. However, Joseph was not only efficient but handsome, and after a while Potiphar's wife tried to seduce him. Joseph rejected her advances but incriminating circumstances landed him in jail where the king's prisoners were kept. Joseph proved such a model prisoner that he soon became a trusty, running the affairs of the prison with the same efficiency he had shown in running Potiphar's home. It was thus that he met Pharaoh's chief cupbearer and chief baker, who had been locked up in the same prison after giving offence to the king. When both of them had strange dreams, they asked Joseph to interpret their significance. Joseph interptred these strange dreams and predicted accurately that the cupbearer would be released and restored to his position but the baker would be hanged. Some two years later, according to the Book of Genesis (41:1), Pharaoh himself had two mysterious dreams that none of the wise men or magicians of Egypt could interpret for him. It was then that the cupbearer explained to Pharaoh how Joseph had interpreted his and the chief baker's dreams and events had turned out exactly as predicted. Pharaoh sent at once for Joseph to have him interpret his dreams and hearing Joseph's interpretation the Pharaoh certainly recognized the truth and reality of the Joseph's dream interpretations and liked the solution he proposed. It was a plan that, while it would not eliminate the problem, it would manage and minimize the harmful effect to the land and the people of Egypt.

39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph: 'Forasmuch as God hath shown thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou. 40 Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in the throne will I be greater than thou.' 41 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph: 'See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt.' 42 And Pharaoh took off his signet ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck. 43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; and they cried before him: 'Abrech'; and he set him over all the land of Egypt. 44 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph: 'I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man lift up his hand or his foot in all the land of Egypt.' 45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphenath-paneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-phera priest of On (the centre in Lower Egypt of the sun-god Ra). And Joseph went out over the land of Egypt.-- 46 ¶ And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt. --And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt. (Tanakh, 1917).

Joseph is thought to have been 30 years of age when he entered the service of Pharaoh.

Answer for yourself: Why is this marriage to the daughter of the Priest of Heilopolis so important?

There are many reasons. First we need to consider the mixing of bloodlines between the Pharaoh and royalty of Egypt with that of a Hebrew; in particular the heir apparent son of Sarai named Isaac. But Abraham and Sarah being sent banished from Egypt physically removed the "seed of the promise" from Egypt proper (through Sarah and Tuthmose III). Yet the hand of God is seen not only in Isaac but in Jacob receiving the birthright from Esau with the promise of the "land" between the "Nile and the Euphrates" being given to the family and also in his favorite son (Joseph) being sold into slavery back into Egypt proper. As if that is not enought we see not only "the seed of the promise" returning to Egypt proper but being positioned next to royalty and authory, next to Pharaoh through the exaltation of Joseph to the position of vizer to the Pharaoh. Again we are not done. We have also Joseph being married to the daugher of the Priest of Heilopolis which is one of the very 4 highest theological centers of Egypt. In Joseph's children the "bloodline" for the later Hebrew Pharaohs is not only strengthens but is being positioned next to royality and authority in Egypt; next to Pharaoh.

Two sons were born of Joseph's marriage to the daugher of the Priest of Heilopolis: Manasseh (Anen in Egyptian) and Ephraim (Aye).

ISRAEL COMES TO EGYPT

The Bible and secular history recounts a huge famine was expierended in that part of the world during this time. Many countries were affected at the time of the famine including Canaan. Jacob, experiencing the famine in Canaan, sent some of his sons to Egypt in hopes of buying grain. I prefer not to recount the entirity of the story but the end result is that learing that Joseph is alive Jacob packs up his entire family and heads out to Egypt.

The souls who accompanied Jacob into Egypt in response to this invitation are described as numbering 'three score and ten' (46:27). They include Joseph and his two sons, Manasseh (Anen in Egyptian) and Ephraim (Aye), amounting to three, who were already there. The list in the Book of Genesis provides the names of another 66 immigrants who actually accompanied Jacob: the 70th name is missing.

Answer for yourself: Why?

The last name is mission because the later biblical editor attempted to conceal any blood connection between the Israelites and the Egyptians once again.

Joseph settled his family at Goshen in the extreme Eastern Delta for they were not allowed into Egypt proper because Asiatic shepherds had been 'anathema' to Egyptians since the century-long Hyksos occupation two centuries earlier.

Answer for yourself: What is the time frame for this?

The Israelites had lived at Goshen for 17 years during the early part of the reign of Amenhotep III (c. 1405-1367 BC) who happens to be the great-grandson of Tuthmosis III whose Biblical name is King Solomon.

I know this convuluted chronology between the Biblica account produced in order to confuse the accounts beyond recognition and the Egyptian records of events is difficult to grasp; especially when trained your whole life to think otherwise by a forged text. But let us contiue on.

Some 17 years after living at Goshen Jacob felt that the time of his death was approaching and thus sent for Joseph and asked not to be burried in Egypt but instead carried out of Egypt and buried where his forefathers are buried. Joseph promised to do as he wished. Joseph was granted his wish and with 'a very great company' of Egyptians and Israelites departed for Canaan where Jacob was buried in a cave.

The closing verses of the Book of Genesis are taken up with Joseph's own death but lacking is any indication of how much time had elapsed since the burial of Joseph's father in Canaan. But we have an important promise:

24 And Joseph said unto his brethren: 'I die; but God will surely remember you, and bring you up out of this land unto the land which He swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.' (the Nile to the Euphrates...which includes Canaan and Palestine) 25 And Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying: 'God will surely remember you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence.' 26 So Joseph died, being a hundred and ten years old. And they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt. (Genesis 50:24-26).

Answer for yourself: What are we talking about here? We are talking about an Exodus during the 18th Dynasty during the reign of Akhenaten which we will deal with later.

Answer for yourself: Can we find this Joseph in Egyptian records? Yes we can but only by another name; that name being Yuya. This account of Joseph's experiences and his exploits are paralled with an Egyptian historical person by the name of Yuya who was buriled in the Valley of the Kings next to Phaoahs. It is to Yuya we now turn.

REINTRODUCING THE HEBREW BLOODLINE TO THE THRONE OF EGYPT: JOSEPH

If you have kept up with these articles then you have seen how we determined the true father of Isaac and how we was the offspring of Tuthmose III (the Biblical King David) and his wife Sarah as "hinted" at in the Book of Genesis. Being expelled from Egypt after finding out that Sarah was actually the wife of Abram, we find the "seed" of union of the Pharaoh and Sarah being carried in her womb returning to Palestine only to find its way back to Egypt through Joseph. We pick up the story there remembering the Biblical text tells us in the Book of Genesis that Joseph had been made "a father to Pharaoh". This is the bombshell that is missed by most people when reading the Biblical texts and it is this passage and its implications that we will examine in this article.

First some necessary background.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there exists no historical records of the biblical Joseph and his family in any place in the Middle East? There is, however, historical accounts and evidence in Egypt, of Yuya and his family, which parallels exactly the story of the Biblical Joseph.

INTRODUCING YUYA

Answer for yourself: Could Joseph the Patriarch and Yuya be the same person?

Found in Egypt, in the Valley of the Kings, on the west bank of the Nile at Luxor, in 1905, are the remains and treasures of one named "Yuya".

Answer for yourself: Why is it that one, this Yuya, who is not of royal blood, and not even an Egyptian, but a Semite, was buried in the Valley of the Kings (the burial ground of the Pharaohs)?

We have noticed over and over before in prior articles that we are dealing with the 18th Dynasty of Egypt and we find again that this Yuya was an official during the 18th Dynasty in the courts of both Tuthmose IV and Amenhotep III (the Biblical King Solomon). The time period for the Biblical Patriarch Joseph and this very important 18th Dynasty overlap which is the first evidence that we have for this Joseph being in the time period that we find this Yuya as well. For our purposes not only Joseph but Joseph's daughter is extremely important as we shall see. Yuya's daughter, in reality the daughter of the Biblical Joseph, became Queen Tiye, the wife of Amenhotep III (the Biblical King Solomon) and we find her father being exalted in Egypt carrying many titles during his life several titles; some of which were "Master of Horse", a title which carried the name "Father of the God". Yuya, the Biblical Joseph, served as chancellor of the North and as a priest of both Hermonthis and Amon during his career. His wife, Tuia, was of Egyptian descent. His mummified remains indicate that he was not of Egyptian descent but rather has distinctive Semitic characteristics. There are many scholars today which make the identification between Yuya and the Patriarch Joseph.

Answer for yourself: Why is this Joseph so very important in our studies of the Hebrew Pharaohs? Yuya is a particularly important figure because it was the marriage of his daughter Tiye to Amenhotep III, the Pharaoh served by Yuya, that restored the link between the Israelites and the royal house of Egypt, which had been severed nearly a century earlier when his great-grandfather, Tuthmose III (the Biblical David), sent the pregnant Sarah back to Canaan. The "bloodline" has with Joseph returned to Egypt and positioned itself next to the throne of Egypt.

Answer for yourself: But is there more? Oh yes.

Joseph is a "key" figure in our study tracing the Hebrew Pharaohs of Egypt because his daughter marries a Pharaoh and from this union will come a grandson from the marriage of Amenhotep III and Tiye named Pharaoh Akhenaten whom again many believe to be the Biblical Moses through whose actions births the Israelite nation.

This Yuya is the only person we know of in Egyptian history to claim the same title, "it ntr n nb tawi" which is translated as "the holy father of the Lord of the Two Lands" which is the Pharaoh's formal title.

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? It simply means that this semitic Yuya was "the holy father of a later Pharaoh". The major title in Yuya's tomb, "ntr n nb tawi, means "the holy father of the Lord of the Two Land (Upper and Lower Egypt)". "The Lord of the Two Lands" was the formal title of a Pharaoh. Thus Yuya's title is the same title for Joseph we see in Genesis 45:8:

Gen 45:8 8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Who was this "Hebrew Pharaoh"? Let me give you a clue....he leads the Exodus but not for the reasons you think so stay tuned.

This unique term occurs once on one of Yuya's ushabti (royal funeral statuette No. 51028 in the Cairo Museum catalogue) and more than twenty times on his funerary papyrus (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 49).

Yuya also carried other titles:

- Prince
- One Attached to the Person of The King
- Friend [of The King]
- First Among The King's Companions
- Prophet of Min
- Superintendent of the Oxen of Min,
- Overseer of the Cattle of Mim,
- Lord of Ipu
- Master of The Horse
- Divine Father
- The Wise One
- He whom The King has made Grand and Wise
- For Whom The King has Made His Double
- Master to Do What Pleases Him
- The Favorite Excellent Above All Favorites
- The Favorite of The Good God/ Lord of The Two Lands
- The Great of The Great Ones

Answer for yourself: Could Joseph the Patriarch and Yuya, the man with all these above titles, be the same person?

In order for such an identification to be made conclusively then for this to be true then the biblical story of Joseph the Patriarch must be dated to the 18th Dynasty (when we know Yuya lived). Let us do that now.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Old Testament texts describe both a time period of "four generations" and "four hundred years" for the Sojourn of the children of Israel in Egypt? Which time period is correct and does it have any bearing on when to date this Exodus let alone the time we find this Joseph in Egypt? Is that why many cannot find evidence for the Exodus and believe it to be false or a myth since they are looking at a time period almost 400 years off from the time it actually occurred? Are you aware that there are Egyptian records outside of the Bible that describe this Exodus?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Old Testament gives two conflicting time periods for the Israelite Sojourn and the length of time they spent in Egypt? That is right; it records 400 years as well as 4 generations.

In the light of what can be established about the later Exodus, when Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt on the first stage of their journey to the Promised Land, it became clear that of two periods (four generations or four centuries) that the Old Testament gives us for the Israelite Sojourn, the length of time they spent in Egypt, four generations is correct. This conclusion also demolishes the belief many scholars cling to, despite the evidence, that the Israelites' arrival coincided with the Hyksos conquest of the Eastern Delta, which began in 1683 BC and lasted for just over a century. Furthermore, this dating of only 4 generations for the Sojourn points to the possible identity of the missing name in the list of the 70 Israelites said to have made their way down from Canaan initially to settle in Egypt (Ibid., p.49-50).

Answer for yourself: Why would one name out of 70 "souls" listed that came down into Egypt be omitted from the Old Testament texts that list only 69?

Answer for yourself: Out of all the important accomplishments attributed to Yuya what is the key event in his life that allows us to make the connection to the later Hebrew Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty? Well there were many but it is the birth and later marriage of his daughter to the Pharaoh of Egypt where again we find the "bloodline" of the Hebrews being tied to the Throne of Egypt.

It is the marriage of Joseph's daughter Tiye to Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon), the Pharaoh served by Yuya, that restored the link between the Israelites and the royal house of Egypt, which had been severed nearly a century earlier when his great-grandfather Tuthmose III sent the pregnant Sarah back to Canaan with Abraham and Hagar the handmaid.

The tomb of Yuya and his wife, Tuya, was found in the Valley of the Kings in 1905. The site of their tomb was in itself considered to be a matter of some surprise. While both Yuya and Tuya were known from Egyptian historical sources, neither was considered to be of particular importance. Nor, as far as anyone was aware at the time, were they of royal blood, which one would expect to be the case if they were buried in the Valley of the Kings.

> Gen 45:8 8 So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me (Joseph) a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt. (KJV)

Because of this Yuya and his wife Tuya were accorded one of the greatest honors that could be afforded an Egyptian noble which was being buried in the Valley of The Kings.

Identification of Joseph the Patriarch as Yuya does not rest solely on the fact of the Biblical phrase that claimed for Joseph the title "a father to Pharaoh" and that he was buried next to Pharaohs.

Answer for yourself: What can we know about Yuya that would lead us to make the connection with the Biblical Joseph? I will give summary statements but I would like to refer the reader to another of Ahmed Osman's books entitled Stranger in the Valley of the Kings for a more through presentation of the evidence linking Joseph with the Yuya, the "father to Pharaoh" and vizier to Pharaohs.

Let us now look into the true identity of this Joseph of the Bible.

Genesis 41:39-40 states: And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art: 40 Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou. (KJV)

M. Gadalla states on page 167 of The Historical Deception Of Egypt: The Untold Story Of Egypt, that the Hebrew writer describes Joseph's position as "mshna" which means "to double". This is all the more astounding when we realized that one of Yuya's titles inscribed in his tomb was "whom the King has made his double".

We know Yuya was a Foreigner. Joseph, too, was a foreigner. Many scholars have commented on the fact after examining the mummies of Yuya and his wife Tuya that unlike his wife Tuya, who had conventional Egyptian looks, Yuya was remarkably foreign in appearance. Arthur Weigall made the point in his book The Life and Times of Akhenaten, published in 1910: "He was a person of commanding presence, whose powerful character showed itself in his face. One must picture him now as a tall man, with a fine shock of white hair; a great hooked nose, like that of a Syrian; full, strong lips; and a prominent, determined jaw. He has the face of an ecclesiastic, and there is something about his mouth that reminds one of the late Pope, Leo III" (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 51).

Many others have commented, like Henri Naville, the Swiss Egyptologist, that Yuya's face was "Semitic". Other scholars and experts in particular fields have voiced reservations about whether it is possible on the basis of appearance alone to argue that Yuya was a foreigner. However, there are other indications - his name, for instance, which was not known in Egypt before his time and proved difficult to render into hieroglyphics - which point to this having been the case (Ibid.).

Let us take note that Yuya was "mummified". Mummification was limited to the Royal family until this 18th Dynasty because of its prohibitive expense. Nobles and high officials were mummified from the 18th Dynasty on, i.e., after the Hyksos left. Mummification was associated with the belief in the resurrection of Ausar (Osiris). Ausar, Osiris, remained the symbol of resurrection until the belief in Jesus Christ replaced the ancient Egyptian doctrine (M. Gadalla, The Historical Deception: The Untold Story of Egypt, p. 173).

Answer for yourself: Is there any connection between the resurrection of Ausar, Osiris and Lazarus? When you get time you need to study out this other website to see how the complete "Jesus Story" we have been taught and received from tradition was taken originally from the Stars!

There is much that we can learn from Yuya's name. We have found 11 different versions of Yuya's name on his sarcophagus, the three coffins and other funerary furniture. They are: Ya-a, Ya, Yi-Ya, Yu-Ya, Ya-Yi, Yu, Yu-Yu, Ya-Ya, Yi-Ay, Yi-a, Yu-y.

Answer for yourself: Why? Why so many different names? What were they trying to inscribe on his sarcophagus, coffins, and furniture that was so difficult?

First of all it was a common practice for the ancient Egyptians to have several names. It was also the custom to use pet names as well as abbreviated names for longer and more complex names. The name was not a mere label, as per our modern thinking. Each name had a specific meaning and function. As such, each person had a composite-type name. The name usually indicated the neter (god) under whom the person concerned was placed. Let us look at some examples. First of all Egyptian names usually indicated the name of the god under whose protection the person was placed; for example Ra-mos, Ptah-hotep, Tutankh-amun or Tutankh-amen,

Let us look again at the various names for Yuya: They are: Ya-a, Ya, Yi-Ya, Yu-Ya, Ya-Yi, Yu, Yu-Yu, Ya-Ya, Yi-Ay, Yi-a, Yu-y.

Answer for yourself: What is common to all of them? Namely the repetition of "Ya" or the "Yi" or the "Yu". If we removed the vowel we are left with "Y". Does this have any possible connection with the more familiar name we know today entitled "YHWH"? Let us see.

What these names tell us is that Joseph accepted protection from an Egyptian god (neteroo) that is described with the letter "Y" and this reminds us of YHWH (Jehovah) or YHWA (the final h is read as an a in Hebrew). What these craftsmen were writing on Yuya's sarcophagus, the three coffins and other funerary furniture, following Egyptian tradition, was the name of his God. We will speak of this YHWH more in just a second.

The two parts of Yuya, "Yu" and "Ya", are both short. The letter "J" in both Egyptian and Hebrew, and even German, is read "Y" in English, so these parts can be read "Ju" or "Jo" and "Ja".

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this "Ja" is a short form of the Israelite God "Yahweh" or "Jehoveh"?

The biblical story tells us that Pharaoh gave Joseph an Egyptian name on his appointment as his minister, which starts with "Zef" or "Sef".

Gen 41:45 45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphnath-pa'aneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Potipherah priest of On. And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt. (KJV)

This was actually a real Egyptian name, and the Egyptian historian Manetho, who wrote an account of Egypt's history in Greek for Ptolemy II to be part of the Alexandrian library, confirms that Amenhotep III, who appointed Yuya as his minister, had a minister called "Se". So we have both the two elements of Joseph's name, the Israelite "Yu" and the Egyptian "Se", related to Yuya. The Hebrew and Arabic name for the Patriarch is "Yosef" or "Yusef". We know this Yuya today as "Joseph". From this it should be noted that both Joseph's biblical name and the name of Yuya are composite names, i.e. Yu-seph where "Y" in Egyptian and Hebrew becomes "J" in English., and in both languages "O" and "U" are written with the same sign. Since both the Hebrew and Ancient Egyptian name have no written short vowels, the consonante of the Hebrew name will be:

[Z ph] nth ph 'nh

The Egyptian original of this Hebrew name is

[S ph] ntr iw-f 'nh

If we try to translate this we get: "success/creation god is he live"

Now notice if you will that the first two elements "s" and "ph", or "seph" from the second part of Joseph's name. The word"seph" has no Hebrew origin, and therefore it is likely that the name Joseph was not his birth name, but a later name in his life. "Seph", however, was a common Egyptian name at that time. The whole name could mean "creation/success/medicine of gods/ may he live".

Now if we look at the biblical name, Yu-seph (Joseph in English) and the name Yu-ya we see that Yuya's name was spelled in eleven different ways, on the items inside his tomb. But the spelling always begins with the letter

"Y", which has to be read as a consonant because an Egyptian syllable cannot start with a vowel. The variety of spellings suggests that Yuya's name was a foreign one, which the scribes found difficult to translate into hieroglyphics.

Now get seated for the shock of your life as we chase a rabbit for a second.

WHO IS THIS YHWH?

Let us chase an important "rabbit" for a second. The studies on the Old Testament point to the fact that there were two different writers of the the first five books of the Old Testament along with the book of Joshua.

Answer for yourself: How do we know this? Well the different writers of these books are discerned by the variant uses of the name for God. In these six books we are presented with two different names of God: Elohim and YHWH which is usually rendered Jehovah (Yehova) or Lord in English Bibles. When considering the other name for God, Elohim, the "Eloh" is god and the "im" makes the word plural in Hebrew. Therefore Elohim means gods in the "plural". But it may also mean god, false god, angels or even man. Though the name is not changed in the Biblical texts, it is customary for those who read aloud the name YHWH substitute it with the Hebrew words Adonay (this word may have had the meaning of lord in the sense of a deity, or master in the sense of human royalty) or hashem (literally means the name).

According to the Hebrew Scriptures the name "YHWH" is the name first revealed to Moses.

Answer for yourself: Should we not expect that this Moses, since being reared in the house of the Pharaoh, might possibly already know of this "god" who is the "I am that I am"? Was this "god" already known in Egypt but now only given a different name of sorts? Well let us see.

The God of Moses was the God of the Partriarchs, known to the Israelites as El Shadday (God dwelling on the mountain, god of the mountain). According to some scholars YHWH, or Yahweh in the Old Testament, is said to be derived from the verbal root "to be", "to exist" and means "he who is". YHWH is said to have the meaning "I am what I am" or "I am who I am" which is "ehyeh asher ehyeh" in Hebrew. This Hebrew idiom, "ehyeh asher ehyeh" expresses a deliberate vagueness. When one meets an expression like "they did what they did" or "they said what they said", or "they went where they went" one should understand that the writer hasn't the slightest idea about what they did, said or where they went. In this context God's declaration "I am who I am" means something like "Never mind who I am" (...just listen, or ...do as you are told). Therefore this expression could not be a name. It could be interpreted as a name only by the incognizant people (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 52).

But this situation is different when we look at Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Was Moses reiterating with his "Aten" religion nothing really new in Egypt but only focusing on the unity of God; the "All in the One"? He sure was.

There are those scholars who find the origin of the sole God (the "father-God" of the code books of Judaism, Christianity and Islam in Egypt) in the Aton/Aten belief system of Akhenaten of the 18th Dynasty! Many western historians maintain Moses was a historical person who has lived in Egypt at the time of this religious reform attempt by Akhenaten and is in reality Akhenaten himself. We do not know much about the Aton/Aten belief system, but if Moses was an Egyptian and his true identity is Akhenaten, then the belief system he has imposed on the Hebrews must have been nothing but the Aton/Aten religion (THINK).

One should know that Moses is not the initiator of monotheism as monotheism had been the backbone of Egyptian region in Egypt since the beginning of time. This One God without equal was referred to in Egypt as "the nameless," "the One Whose name cannot be spoken."

Answer for yourself: Does this not sound familiar in Judaism since they forbid the saying of the name "Yahweh"? Is the "Aten" and "Yahweh" the same? Is Akhenaten's "Sun Disk" religion the same as "Yahweh"? Before you say "no" you better do more study into this and you will find as I did that this "Sun was always understood as a "picture" of the Only Uncreated Intelligent Divine Energy of the Cosmos whom we call "God" today. Nothing new under the Sun is there (pardon the pun)?

As stated the name of the God of Moses also cannot be uttered freely. That is why YHWH the "tetragrammaton" (four letters) and eventually Jehovah have replaced it in daily use. When the Egyptian God's name was "unspeakable" Moses was not around. It was long before him. Most important of all this Egyptian God has called himself "Nuk pu Nuk". Now get ready for the shock of your life!"

When "nuk pu nuk" is translated into English it means exactly, "I am who I am" which is almost the identical phrase that is seen from Exodus 3:14

Exod 3:14 14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you. (KJV)

You see the understanding of "Yahweh" is much older than the time of Moses. It began in Egypt for Egyptian religion understood this Invisible Creator as the "I Am That I Am" long before the time of Moses and the Hebrew nation. The Bible speaks of a much earlier institution of his worship. It is absolutely logical to accept the assumption that Moses was an Egyptian, that he made the people around him accept his religion, which must be the Aten religion of Akhenaton or a version of it shaped by the "man called Moses". We do not know how the Mosaic belief system was like thousands of years ago. What we know is only the last form of the Aten religion was reshaped by the Jewish priests over a period of 800-900 years.

Answer for yourself: Ever heard of the Shema? The Shema is an affirmation of Judaism and a declaration of faith in one God. The obligation to recite the Shema is separate from the obligation to pray and a Jew is obligated to say Shema in the morning and at night. The first line of the Shema, "Hear O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One" (Shema Yisrael Adonai eloheinu Adonai ehad) (Deuteronomy 6:4) is repeated throughout the prayer services. It is said in the morning blessings, in the musaf Amidah of Shabbat and holidays, when the Torah is taken out of the Ark on Shabbat and holidays, as a bedtime prayer, as part of the deathbed confessional, and at various other times.

It can be said that the "Shema" which is the Jewish confession of faith, in Deuteronomy 6:4-9: "Shema Yisroel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Echod" or "Shema Israel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Ehad" (Adonay replaces the unspeakable YHWH). The proper English translation of which seems to be: "Hear Israel, our Lord is Adonay, only Adonay". If the uncanny similarity of the Egyptian Aten/Aton and the Hebrew Adonay, and the Greek Adonis is not pure chance, and something which originates from a common root or a common identity in the prehistory, then replacing "Adonay" with "Aton" gives us the following confession of faith:

"Shema Israel Aten elohenu, Aten ehad."

The English translation of which is "Hear Israel our God is Aton, only Aton."

The implications of what I have just described is startling and breathtaking. What we see here is that Joseph accepted the same religion as did Egypt and worshipped the same "God" as did Egypt! Both Egypt and Joseph (Yuya) had a belief in monotheism whereby they both recognized this same God by simply different names yet the identify of this "All in the One" was the same. Different names expressing different attributes of this one single God or "First Cause" does not polytheism make. Hopefully you are familiar with the Egyptian concept of the "neteroo" which explains perfectly this concept of the "All in the One". So we see that we have Joseph being given a name similar to his understanding of this same God know by Egypt but expressed by a different word (Ya, Yi, Yu) from which we get YHWH, the name for the "God" of the later Israelites.

I must say a word about these "neteroo". The ancient Egyptian word "neter", and its feminine form "netert", have been wrongly, and possibly intentionally, translated to "god" and "goddesses," by almost all scholars. There is no equivalent word in meaning, to the word "neter," in the English language. Honest translators would use the native word, if they cannot find its equivalent in their language.

Neteroo (plural of neter/netert) are the divine principles, forces, powers, and functions that operate the entire universe. They are all aspects and functions of the One Supreme God regardless if He/She is called "Aten, Amun, Amen, Aton, Ptah, or YHWH). The word erroneously translated "gods" and "goddesses" leave the impression that ancient Egyptians had a multitude of gods which is absolutely untrue. As we see above Joseph knew and worshipped this one true God as did Egypt; they only had a different name for this same God.

Now we return to the study of Joseph, Yuya, and his relationship to the Hebrew Pharaohs.

The Pharaoh gave Joseph an Egyptian wife, Asenth, daughter of Potipher-ah, the priest of On which is the present day Heliopolis a suburb of Cairo, and the center of the worship of lower Egypt of the neter god "Ra". The position of Joseph's father-in-law, as "Priest of On" contradicts the theory of Joseph living during the Hyskos era. Most scholars, if not all of them, affirm that the Hyskos honored only Set (Seth).

Answer for yourself: If the Hyskos were governing Egypt during the time of Joseph then should we expect that a Hyskos ruler who himself worshipped Set (Seth) to marry his deputy to a daughter of a Priest of the hated neter "Ra"? It is almost beyond doubt that the story of this marriage occurred many years after the Hyskos time.

The Bible states that Joseph became the father of two sons, Manasseh and Ephriam. No mention was made of any daughter and this does not mean that he could not have fathered a daughter and that she simply was not mentioned. The Bible mentions very few women as expected in a Patriarchial society but yet the Bible does give us an indication that Joseph had a daughter. When Joseph revealed himself to his brothers, on their second trip to Egypt the Bible states that "the house of Pharaoh heard" (Genesis 45:2).

In both Ancient and a large portion of modern Egypt, it is improper to refer to a married woman by her name. They are often referred to as "the house of "so and so", "so and so" being the husband's name. Therefore "the house of Pharaoh" meant the Pharaoh's wife. Let us not forget that Egyptian records state that Yuya's (Joseph's) daugher married a Pharaoh. Along this same line Genesis 46:27 states that the number in Jacob's family, including Joseph and his two sons, is seventy. If we add up the number of Jacob's descendants from Genesis 46:15,18, 22, and 25, in addition to Jacob himself, the total number is only 69. Also in Genesis 46:26 , the number of Jacob's descendants, who went down to Egypt, is given as 66, which means that 4 were already in Egypt. However we are given the names of only three.

Answer for yourself: Is is possible that the 70th person was already in Egypt, and it was Joseph's daughter, Queen Tiye? Many scholars today believe it was and this was done to cover up the link with Egypt, the Hebrews, and the Throne of Egypt let alone the many links with Egyptian religion and Judaism. M. Gadalla states in his book that "it is reasonable to conclude that the 70th person was already in Egypt, and it was Joseph's daughter, Queen Tiye". It would be this Queen Tiyu who later marries Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, and who give the world a "boy-king", the Biblical Moses.

The way Yuya was buried points to his NOT having been Egyptian. His mummy reveals many things to help us see that he again is not Egyptian. His ears, unlike those of most royal mummies of the 18th Dynasty, were not pierced, and the position of his hands, the palms facing his neck under the chin, is different from the usual Osiris form in which the dead man's hands are crossed over his chest. Osiris was the Egyptian god of the underworld and judge of the dead . Yuya is the only Egyptian mummy to be found with his hands in a different position (Ibid., p. 53). In other words he was buried differently than other Egyptians.

Yuya's "insignia of office" helps us determine his identity as well. Yuya's tomb contained Pharaoh's ring and a gold chain. Pharaoh gave Joseph three objects as a sign of his office: "And Pharaoh took off his ring from his hand, and put it on Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vestures of fine linen, and put a gold chain about his neck" (Genesis 41:42). There were two attempts to steal small objects from Yuya's tomb, one in ancient times, just after the burial, and the other just after the tomb was opened in 1905. The ring might have disappeared because of either robbery, but we do have written evidence that one existed in the tomb. Yuya, like many other ministers, was "bearer of the seal of the king of Lower Egypt" as well as "bearer of the ring of the king of Lower Egypt".

Now notice the time frame once again linking this Joseph and Yuya to this important 18th Dynasty. The honor bestowed on Joseph by the presentation of a gold chain was a custom mentioned in texts before the New Kingdom (the period from the 16th to the 11th centuries BC, the 18th and 19th Dynasties), but it is not until the reign of Tuthmose IV (c. 1413-1405 BC), the father of Amenhotep III, that such a presentation was produced by the artist on the tomb walls. Receiving gold was looked upon as one of the highest distinctions of the time, and, when excavating Yuya's tomb they found that Yuya had a gold necklace that had fallen inside his coffin and come to rest under his head when the thread was cut by robbers (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 53).

And then we have mention of the chariots. Yuya's tomb contained a chariot. In the biblical account of Joseph's life we find three references to chariots.

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence?

At the time of Joseph's appointment as minister we are told that Pharaoh "made him ride in the second chariot he had; and they cried before him, Bow the knee..." (Genesis 41:43). Again, when Jacob and his family arrived in Egypt, "Joseph made ready his chariot and went up to meet Israel (Jacob) his father, to Goshen . . ." (Genesis 46:29). Finally, when Joseph set out after Jacob's death to bury his father in Canaan, "there went up with him both chariots and horsemen..."(Genesis 50:9).

The first of these references suggests that Joseph had a responsibility for the chariotry. Alan Richard Schulman, the American Egyptologist, has made the point, in an article published in the Journal of the American Research Centre in Egypt in 1963, that '. . . in the later 18th Dynasty two ranks are attested which indicate that such a technical nuance' - chariotry as distinct from infantry - "has come into being: Adjutant of the Chariotry, the earliest occurrence of which is known from the Amarna period (of Yuya, who was appointed as Adjutant (Deputy) of His Majesty in the Chariotry as well as Officer for the Horses)... which dates, most probably, to the early years of the reign of Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon)". Just look at one of Yuya's titles above and you will see one title was "Master of the Horse". Thus the first person in Egypt to be appointed to the position ascribed to Joseph in the Bible was Yuya, the minister to Amenhotep III (Ibid.,p. 54).

The fact that a chariot was found in Yuya's tomb is another indication of his position. It was the custom in ancient Egypt to place in a tomb objects that had a special significance in the life of the dead person. This particular chariot is too small to have been Yuya's, yet too big to have been a model. It is possible that it belonged originally to Tuthmose IV when he was the young crown prince or to the young Amenhotep III, who was only about 12 when he came to the throne. This would explain why, although ornamented in gold, it was not inscribed.

Although we have no written evidence to confirm it - none of the titles found in the tomb of Yuya (Joseph) mentions Tuthmose IV - strong indications exist that it was this king who first appointed him as his minister, and his son, Amenhotep III, confirmed Yuya in the post. While in the case of Joseph the Book of Genesis does not make this clear, the Talmud states that the Pharaoh who appointed Joseph died before him and Joseph continued in office during the reign of his successor: "And it came to pass that Pharaoh the friend of Joseph died. . . Before his death Pharaoh commended his son, who succeeded him, to obey Joseph in all things, and the same instructions he left in writing. This pleased the people of Egypt, for they loved Joseph and trusted implicitly in him' (Ibid.).

Interestingly the Pharaoh ordered citizens to "bow the knee" before Joseph (Genesis 41:43).

Answer for yourself: Does this not remind you of one of the two dreams of Joseph where his brothers and father and mother bowed to him (the sheaves bowed to him as well as the sun, moon, and stars bowing to him)?

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence again?

The expression "bow the knee"' is an English translation of the Hebrew word abrek. It is an imperative, meaning "do obeisance", that entered Egyptian vocabulary during the 18th Dynasty and was not known before that time.

Answer for yourself: Is this but a coincidence that we are dealing with the right time period in Egypt for the Hebrew Pharaohs?

Gen 41:45 45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphnath-pa'aneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Potipherah priest of On. And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt. (KJV)

For our studies the main issue is the bloodline and its connection to the Throne of Egypt and this comes again through Yuya's Wife. While it is easy to see how the name Joseph could have been transcribed into Yuya, the transformation of Asenath into Tuya, the wife of Yuya, can only be a matter of conjecture. The Egyptian origin of the name Asenath for Joseph's wife is "Nes-net", which means "belonging to the goddess Nut". Nut was the sky-goddess. However, it is a fact that it was a common practice at the time for Egyptians to have several names, some of which were kept secret. It was also the custom to use pet names as well as abbreviated forms for longer and more complex names. Some allowance must be made, too, for the fact that many centuries passed between the events described and the time they were set down in the Bible.

Two more of Yuya's titles provide a further link with the biblical story of Joseph. One involves the cattle of Goshen. After the Israelites had arrived in Egypt, Pharaoh is said to have told Joseph: "... in the best of the land of Egypt make thy father and brethren dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell; and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them rulers over my cattle" (Genesis 47:6).

Answer for yourself: Is it another coincidence that one of the titles found in Yuya's tomb was Overseer of the Cattle of Mim, Lord of Akhmin (a town on the east bank of the Nile, in Upper Egypt), and a second was Overseer of the Cattle of Amun which reminds us of what the Biblical texts said of Joseph?

Another identifier that Joseph and Yuya is the same is Yuya's life-span. Of Joseph's burial in Egypt, the Book of Genesis says: "So Joseph died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they embalmed him and put him in a coffin in Egypt" (50:26). From the medical report made by Sir Grafton Elliott Smith, the anatomist who examined Yuya's mummy after its discovery, we know that Yuya was probably not less than 60 at the time of his death. Smith was unable, judging by facial appearance alone, to decide the exact age, but Henri Naville, who translated Yuya's copy of The Book of the Dead, wrote in his subsequent commentary upon it in 1908: ". . . the artist wished to indicate that Iouiya (Yuya) was a very old man when he died: therefore he made him quite a white wig..."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that Joseph revered and had buried with him the only Bible he knew; the Egyptian Book of the Dead (THINK). What are we to learn from the Book of the Dead? Could it be as I found out upon my studies that the whole book is an allegory for the birth, maturation, spiritual development of the soul within this matter we call "flesh" and its ultimate demise and death followed by the judgment of the dead? Is this Book of the Dead a manual to prepare us on how to live and how to die?

Looking back at the age of Yuya we find that the average age to which people lived at the time was about 30 and that Ancient Egyptians considered old age to be a sign of wisdom, and those who attained long life were looked upon as holy figures. Both Joseph and Yuya were considered wise by Pharaoh. Of Joseph he said: ". . . there is none as discreet and wise as thou art" (Genesis 41:39). Yuya is also described on his funerary papyrus as 'the only wise, who loves his god'. The age Egyptians ascribed to those who lived to be wise was 110, irrespective of how old they actually were when they died.

Answer for yourself: Is this just another coincidence?

Amenhotep, son of Habu, an Egyptian magician in Yuya's time, was said to have lived 110 years although the last information we have about him puts his age at 80. Since 1865, when the British scholar Charles W. Goodwin suggested that the age the biblical narrator assigned to Joseph at the time of his death was a reflection of the Egyptian tradition, this idea has become more and more accepted by Egyptologists.

In the Old Testament narration Joseph's brothers are said to have used money to pay for provisions but, before sending them on their way, Joseph restored "every man's money into his sack" (Genesis 42:25). It used to be thought that money did not come into use in Egypt until around 950 BC and the authors of the Genesis story were reflecting the customs of their own era when they referred to money rather than payment in kind. However, recent studies have found evidence to support the idea that, at least from the reign of Amenhotep II (c. 1436-1413 BC), sixth ruler of the 18th Dynasty, pieces of metal - gold, silver and copper, of a fixed weight or value - were used as a means of exchange. Again we have another line to the 18th Dynasty with Joseph (Yuya). Abd EI-Mohsen Bakir, the Egyptian scholar, makes the point in his book Slavery in Pharaonic Egypt that a reference in a legal document of the 18th Dynasty indicates that "two debens [about 90 grams of silver' were paid as the price of a slave. The role that money played in the brothers' grain purchase again conforms with the situation in Egypt during the New Kingdom.

According to the Koran, before their second visit to Egypt, accompanied by Benjamin (Joseph's younger brother), Jacob advised his sons not to enter the city by one gate: Further he said: "my sons! enter not All by one gate: enter ye By different gates..." [Chapter 12:67] The same story is found in Jewish traditions: "His brothers, fearing the evil eye, entered the city at ten different gates" (Midrash Bereshith Rabbah 89).

As this was to be the brothers' second visit, it is reasonable to assume that Jacob could not have known anything about the city except through hearing details of his sons' previous trip.

Answer for yourself: Which city had they visited?

The evidence suggests that their encounter with Joseph took place at Thebes, the capital of the 18th Dynasty kings on the Upper Nile. Thebes was known throughout the ancient world as "the city with many gates" and the Greek poet Homer mentioned it around the 8th century BC as "the hundred-gated city". This does not refer to entrances through the city's walls, but to gates belonging to its temples and palaces.

M. Gadalla, in his The Historical Deception: The Untold Story of Egypt makes mention that the story of Joseph, in the Bible, was written, rewritten, and added to, three times between the 9th century B.C.E. and the 2nd Century B.C.E., at which time an editor came along and made one story out of three prior accounts, and even added another section dealing with Joseph's death and his desire to be re-buried in Canaan (p. 166). There is absolutely no reference in the Bible of the time when Joseph was in Egypt. After the Exodus, which is the divorce between Egypt and the Jews, both parties proceeded to erase their ties to each other. One example of this is the fact that there is not one example or a single reference to the name of any Pharaoh throughout the entire Bible. Biblicists, however, choose to believe the teach the account of the Jewish historian who suggested in his book, Contra Apionem, written towards the end of the 1st century C.E., that the Israelites' Descent into Egypt and their Exodus took place during the Hyskos rule (1663-1550 B.C.E.). Josephus, who was writing about the events 1700 years older at that time had relied on information attributed to Manetho, an Egyptian Priest of the 3rd century B.C.E. (1300 yrs after the Hyskos era). Manetho, according to Josephus, provided the account of Moses and the Exodus based solely on Egyptian folk tales. Some theorized that the Hyskos and the Israelites were the same and when such a theory contradicted many parts of the Bible, Biblicists adopted a modified theory of Josephus's account. The current modified and unfounded theory was that Joseph was sold into slavery, during the Hyskos era, and that all his family followed him later to Egypt (Ibid.). I have found that if you follow the Bible closely and matching it to Egyptian history, the generally accepted "theory" will be proven to be less than reliable.

Well we have learned a lot about the Biblical Joseph and have seen his importance in Egypt. Joseph was rescued and honored in Egypt and was allowed to bring his family and tribe to Egypt. This begins the 4 generation Sojourn of Israel in Egypt.

Answer for yourself: So why is all this important? Because Joseph had a grandson named Akhenaton who is better known to day as Moses.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that the identification of Joseph as Yuya provides further support in the form of chronology for our earlier identification of Tuthmose III (King David) as the father of Isaac. Joseph, you see carried the bloodline of the Hebrews from Isaac and it is through the Biblical Joseph and his daughter we make the connection of the Hebrew blood line to the Throne of Egypt.

It is to these matters we now turn as we begin to focus upon the grandson of Joseph (Yuya)....Akhenaton, the Biblical Moses.

THE BIBLICAL JOSEPH AND HIS DAUGHTER....THE BLOODLINE RETURNS TO THE THRONE OF EGYPT

Now we established above the fact that Joseph's daughter, Tiye, was married to Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon.

Answer for yourself: Does the book of Genesis mention anything about Joseph having a daughter and that through this daughter and her marriage to the Pharaoh that their children provide the link between the Israelites and the royal house of Egypt? No but they do.

The Book of Genesis makes certain that it does not mention Joseph as being the father of a daughter as well as two sons, Manasseh (Anen) and Ephraim (Aye), who were already with him in Egypt at the time the tribes of Israel made their Descent from Canaan to join him.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that this "unknown" daughter be the 70th name missing from the list of Israelite immigrants in the Book of Genesis?

Many scholars today point out that once the identification of Joseph as Yuya is accepted then a more believable explanation of why Joseph's daughters' name is absence from the Biblical record is because that Joseph's daughter is in reality Yuya's daughter "Tiye" who, despite being half-Israelite, became Queen of Egypt. Where as before Sarah had the "title" but exiled now we have the actual heiress of the Israelite bloodline married and on the throne of Egypt with her husband. Her name and its absence from the list of names of Israelites in Egypt is because it absence helps to mask the Israelite-Egyptian connection and such absence was crafted when the Book of Genesis was set down in writing many centuries after the events it describes. Tiye's name was excised from the Old Testament as a result of bitter memories of the Exodus.

If, as we saw earlier, it was Tuthmose IV who appointed Yuya (Joseph) initially to the post of minister, this sequence of events would make sense of what happened after the death of Amenhotep III's father in 1405 BC when Amenhotep III was only about 12 years of age. Records indicate that in accordance with Egyptian custom Amenhotep III married his sister, Sitamun, in order to inherit the throne, but shortly afterwards he also married Tiye, the daughter of Yuya (Joseph) and Tuya, and made her rather than Sitamun his Great Royal Wife (queen). At the time of these marriages Sitamun is thought to have been about three years of age and Tiye eight (Ibid., p. 59).

The childhood romance between Amenhotep III and Tiye can be easily explained by the posts held by both her parents, which meant that the two children grew up together. As a minister to both pharaohs, responsible for the chariots, a similar unit to the king's guard, Yuya would have been required to live in the royal residence. This was also true of his wife, Tuya, who was the king's "ornament", a position which might be said to combine the duties of a modern butler and lady-in-waiting, and could also indicate that she had been the king's nanny. It has also been suggested that Tiye was acceptable as a bride for the young king because Tuya, her mother, was herself of royal blood. Arthur Weigall makes the point in his book The Life and Times of Akhenaten that she "may have been . . . the grand-daughter of Tuthmose III [David], to whom she bears some likeness of face" (Weigall here refers to Tuya's mummy). This view is supported by three titles found in her tomb - "favored of the good god (the king)", "favored of Horns in his house (the king in his palace)", "favored of Horns, Lord of this land" - and the fact that Tiye, the daughter of her marriage to Yuya, is often referred to as "royal daughter". This, Weigall argues, would also help to explain why she and Yuya were given such a fine tomb in the Valley of the Kings (Ibid., p. 60).

The fact that the marriage of Amenhotep III and Tiye took place early in his reign is established by two of five commemorative scarabs (sacred beetles) issued by the king and discovered in the latter part of the last century. After their wedding, Amenhotep III presented Tiye with the frontier fortress of Zarw (in the area of modern Quantara East of the Suez Canal) as a kind of summer palace so that she could be near her Israelite relatives, settled at Goshen (beyond Egypt proper, because shepherds were still "an abomination"). Goshen was in those days linked with the fortress of Zarw by water. The last of the above scarabs describes the construction of a pleasure lake for Queen Tiye at Zarw in 11th year (1395 BC) of Amenhotep III's reign. Six versions of the scarab have been found. Although there are some minor differences, they all agree on the main points of the text.

These scarabs suggest that Queen Tiye enjoyed an idyllic marriage to an immensely rich, powerful and indulgent husband, happy to grant her every wish, even to presenting her with a summer palace, so that she could be close to her Israelite relatives in Goshen, together with a pleasure lake. However, the man at her side on that October day, when they were enjoying a kind of second honeymoon, could foresee, because his wife was not the heiress and only half-Egyptian, a serious crisis ahead over his line of succession if his wife's expected child proved to be a boy, a crisis that would not be easy to resolve, even for Amenhotep III. Today, 3,500 years later, he still enjoys the reputation of someone who was infinitely wise. Amenhotep III, you see, was Solomon.

At this part of our study I refer you to the article that is on this website dealing with King Solomon/Amenhotep III. A few things need be said before we leave this study. King Solomon is presented to us in the Old Testament in a number of semblances: King of Israel, who succeeded his father, David, in the 10th century B.C.E.; the son of David and Bathsheba, adulterous wife of Uriah the Hittite; commander of a vast army of men and a host of chariots ("a thousand and four hundred" and "twelve thousand horsemen" according to I Kings 10:26); overlord of a vast empire that underwent decline during his reign; the husband of Pharaoh's daughter; and the lover of "many strange women, together with the daughter of Pharaoh" (I Kings 11:1).

Answer for yourself: Does this sound familiar?

Here we find ourselves facing a similar situation to that encountered earlier in this book where the Old Testament presented us with two contrasting characters for David; a mighty warrior who created an empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates (Tuthmose III, c. 1490-1436 BC) and a modest tribal chief who lived in the 10th century B.C.E. who accomplished the same events which were problematically separated by five centuries which are lumped together as if they happened at the same time. Now we have to deal with two Solomons. To examine briefly some of the attributes ascribed to him in the Book of I Kings:

Solomon cannot have succeeded his father David in the 10th century B.C.E. as the Bible depicts it because David (Tuthmose III), as we have seen, lived five centuries earlier and was, in fact, not his father but his great-grandfather

In the Old Testament one often comes across accounts where the oral memory of ancient events is retold in a fictionalized form with different characters and a different time-scale. 1 believe the David (Tuthmose III-Bathsheba-Uriah story found in the Book of II Samuel should be seen as another version of the David (Tuthmose III)-Sarah-Abraham story, related in the earlier Book of Genesis, in which the king married Sarah and, on discovering that Sarah was Abraham's wife, sent the couple back to Canaan where the pregnant Sarah gave birth to Isaac, the king's son.

The David-Bathsheba-Uriah story is set in the fortress of Jerusalem while Tuthmose III was staying there during the siege of Megiddo (Armageddon), the first military encounter of his campaign, shortly after Hatshepsut's death, to restore the Egyptian empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates. It is said that he made inquiries about the identity of Bathsheba after seeing her bathing. Despite being told that she was the wife of Uriah the Hittite, who was serving with the king's forces at Megiddo, David sent messengers to bring her to his house where "he lay with her" (II Samuel 11:4).

As a result of this liaison, Bathsheba became pregnant. In the hope of disguising his guilt, David had Uriah brought to Jerusalem, but the warrior refused to sleep in the comfort of his own home while the king's army suffered the hardships of living in tents outside besieged Megiddo. David therefore sent him back to the front accompanied by the order: "Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle.. . that he may be smitten and die"' (II Samuel 11:15). Once Uriah had met his death, David married Bathsheba, who bore him a son.

Up to this point, both stories are remarkably similar. Both Abraham and Uriah are foreigners, Abraham a Canaanite in Egypt, Uriah a Hittite in Jerusalem. In each case their wives are made pregnant by a king and give birth to a son. The fate of the two "children of sin" is different, however. In the case of Abraham we have a hint of moral disapproval of the circumstances that led to the birth of Isaac: he is said to have been tempted by God initially to offer Isaac as "a burnt offering" (Genesis 22:2), but after Abraham responded to the temptation Isaac's life was spared and Abraham took a ram "and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son" (22:13).

In the case of David we find a more precise moral judgement. We are told that after David had caused the death of Uriah and married Bathsheba, who bore him a son, "the thing that David had done displeased the Lord. And the Lord sent [unto David] Nathan [the prophet] who said to David, . . Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his sight? thou hast killed Uriah with the sword, and has taken his wife to be thy wife. . . Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house.. . the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die" (II Samuel 11:27, 12:1,9-10,14).

These condemnations were followed by the promise that the awaited child, which proved to be very sick, would not survive. This un-named boy died on the seventh day and David "comforted Bathsheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son: and he called his name Solomon...? (12:24).

Scholars are divided over the authenticity of the story of Uriah and his wife as recorded in the Bible. Hermann Gunkel, the distinguished German biblical scholar, dismisses the whole story of Uriah and his wife as having no historical basis. Ahmed Osman disagrees. Mr. Osman maintains that the names used in these fictional accounts are based on real events and such events usually point to the identity of the original historical characters and, as a rule, provide evidence that we are dealing with fact disguised as fiction. He believes that this is clearly the case with the name Uriah. Mr. Osman goes on to describe that the name Uriah is composed of two elements - Ur, a Mesopotamian word meaning "city" or "light", and Yah (iah), which is the short form of Jehovah, the Israelite God. The meaning of the name could therefore be "Jehovah's light". Yet in spite of this he is described as being a Hittite.

Answer for yourself: How can we accept that a Hittite, a traditional enemy of Egypt and the Israelites, could be a worshipper of the Israelite God and one of the heroes of David's army?

Nor do we have any information to explain the sudden appearance of this foreigner and his wife in Jerusalem, where they seem to have had their home.

To look at the matter from another point of view, Ur, the first part of Uriah's name, relates him to the birthplace of Abraham. The first reference to this in the Bible describes how Abraham and Sarah "went forth . . . from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan" (Genesis 11:31).

Answer for yourself: This could mean either "a city of the Chaldees" or, if the word Ur was used as a proper noun, "Ur of the Chaldees". Whatever the situation regarding this early reference, later on Ur certainly became a proper noun indicating the birthplace of Abraham. Thus the name Ur-iah relates the invented character both to the God of Abraham and to the city of Abraham's origin.

We have a similar situation with the name Bathsheba. Here again we have two elements - Beth, meaning "a girl" or "a daughter", and Sheba, an area to the south of Canaan that takes its name from the local well, Beer-Sheba. The name Beth-Sheba can therefore be interpreted as "a girl (or daughter) of Sheba", which was the area in which Sarah and Abraham settled after their return from Egypt.

The statement that Solomon commanded a vast army and was overlord of a huge empire that underwent decline during his reign finds no historical support in the 10th century B.C.E., by which time the empire founded 500 years earlier by Tuthmose III, the great-grandfather of Amenhotep III, had ceased to exist. The description of Solomon as the husband of Pharaoh's daughter also cannot be true. He would have had to be a member of the royal house of Egypt rather than King of Israel before he was able to marry an Egyptian princess.

We know from the Amarna letters - the foreign archives of the 18th Dynasty, a period of rule that lasted roughly from 1575 to 1335 BC, that it was not the custom of Egyptian kings to give their daughters in marriage to foreign rulers. The reference to marriage to Pharaoh's daughter reflects the fact that Amenhotep III married his infant sister, Sitamun, in order, as was the Egyptian custom, to inherit the throne.

The Old Testament also assures us that Solomon was both rich and extremely wise: "So King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom" (I Kings 10:23). The best-known story about the wisdom of Solomon is the dispute between two mothers over the parenthood of a child, to be found in I Kings 3:16-28. Each of the women, who lived in the same house, gave birth to a baby boy. One of the babies died, however, and both women claimed the surviving child as her own and eventually came before the king with their dispute. Thereupon Solomon ordered the child to be cut in half with a sword, and one half to be given to each woman. This immediately helped to identify the real mother, who tried to save the boy's life by asking for the child to be given to the other woman.

It is hardly to be believed that the king, who had professional judges and officials, would involve himself personally in such a dispute between two women, who are described in the Bible as harlots. In fact, I believe that we are dealing here with another story that is being told with a different cast: the real story concerns the circumstances surrounding the birth of Moses and Pharaoh's threat to kill him, which will be dealt with later.

Solomon's reputation for wisdom, as well as the name by which he is known, does not rest on resolving a dispute over the motherhood of a child, but on the masterful way he - or, rather, Amenhotep III - ruled Egypt and the vast empire founded originally by his great-grandfather, Tuthmose III (David), an empire that encompassed "all the kingdoms from the river (Euphrates) unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt" (I Kings 4:2 1). An important element of his rule was his marriages to "many strange women" who were princesses from neighboring states with whom, because of these marriages, Egypt enjoyed peaceful relations and avoided costly wars.

JOSEPH'S DAUGHTER....QUEEN OF EGYPT

Now we established above the fact that Joseph's daughter, Tiye, was married to Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon. This is where we pick up once again our interest in the "bloodline" for our study of the Hebrew Pharaohs of Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Does the book of Genesis mention anything about Joseph having a daughter and that through this daughter and her marriage to the Pharaoh that their children will provide the link between the Israelites and the royal house of Egypt? No. But this is what happens as we shall see.

If we recall we remember the promise made to Abraham that his descendants will inherit the land from the "the river of Egypt (Nile) to the Euphrates" but the Old Testament does not tell us that this promise is because of Sarah' seed from Thutmose III the Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt. But all looks lost when she and her husband are expelled from Egypt with Hagar a handmaid given to Sarah to help in her pregnancy. Later we find Isaac's own son despising the promise made to his ancestors and believing it an impossibility Esau sold this "birthright" to Jacob. As we also remember it would be Jacob's favorite son Joseph who would be the envy of his brothers and with the interpretation of 2 dreams and their implications for his brothers then the sons of Jacob revolted against their brother and got rid of him by faking his death and sold him into slavery to Midianite travelers who ironically took him back into Egypt where through unusual circumstances he finds himself in time setting next to Pharaoh and second in importance in all of Egypt. Through Joseph's marriage with the priest of On's daughter he has a family of sons and a daughter which the Old Testament is completely silent concerning. It is this daughter of Joseph which will later marry the Pharaoh and from their union comes the Hebrew Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty which are part Hebrew and part Egyptian. This is where we meet the most famous of them all.....Akhenaten....Pharaoh of Egypt....the Biblical Moses. We pick up the story with Joseph.

The Book of Genesis makes certain that it does not mention Joseph as being the father of a daughter. We are all aware of his two sons, Manasseh (Anen) and Ephraim (Aye), who were already with him in Egypt at the time the tribes of Israel made their Descent from Canaan to join him but the Biblical text is completely silent concerning the existence of a daughter.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that this "unknown" daughter be the 70th name missing from the list of Israelite immigrants in the Book of Genesis?

Many scholars today point out that once the identification of Joseph as Yuya is accepted then a more believable explanation of why Joseph's daughters' name is absence from the Biblical record is because that Joseph's daughter is in reality Yuya's daughter "Tiye" who, despite being half-Israelite, became Queen of Egypt. Where as before Sarah had the "title" but exiled from Egypt and living a nomadic existence in Palestine now we have the actual heiress of the Israelite bloodline married and on the throne of Egypt with her husband who is the reigning Pharaoh of the time in this 18th Dynasty. Her name and its absence from the list of names of Israelites in Egypt is because it absence helps to mask the Israelite-Egyptian connection and such absence was crafted when the Book of Genesis was set down in writing many centuries after the events it describes. Tiye's name was excised from the Old Testament as a result of bitter memories of the Exodus which is just around the corner.

If, as we saw earlier, it was Tuthmose IV who appointed Yuya (Joseph) initially to the post of minister, this sequence of events would make sense of what happened after the death of Amenhotep III's father in 1405 BC when Amenhotep III was only about 12 years of age. Records indicate that in accordance with Egyptian custom Amenhotep III married his sister, Sitamun, in order to inherit the throne, but shortly afterwards he also married Tiye, the daughter of Yuya (Joseph) and Tuya, and made her rather than Sitamun his Great Royal Wife (queen). At the time of these marriages Sitamun is thought to have been about three years of age and Tiye eight (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 59).

The childhood romance between Amenhotep III and Tiye, the daughter of Yuya (Joseph), the vizier of Pharaoh and father of Amenhotep III, can be easily explained by the posts held by both her parents, which meant that the two children grew up together. As a minister to both pharaohs (father and son), responsible for the chariots, a similar unit to the king's guard, Yuya (Joseph) would have been required to live in the royal residence. This was also true of his wife, Tuya, who was the king's "ornament", a position which might be said to combine the duties of a modern butler and lady-in-waiting, and could also indicate that she had been the king's nanny. It has also been suggested that Tiye, Joseph's daughter, was acceptable as a bride for the young king because Tuya, her mother, was herself of royal blood being the daughter of the priest of On (Heliopolis). Arthur Weigall, referring to Tuya's mummy, makes the point in his book The Life and Times of Akhenaten that she "may have been . . . the grand-daughter of Tuthmose III [David], to whom she bears some likeness of face". This view is supported by three titles found in her tomb:

- "favored of the good god (the king)",
- "favored of Horus in his house (the king in his palace)",
- "favored of Horus, Lord of this land"

Also we must consider the fact that Tiye, the daughter of Joseph (Yuya) and Tuya, is often referred to as "royal daughter". This, Weigall argues, would also help to explain why she and Yuya were given such a fine tomb in the Valley of the Kings (Ibid., p. 60). What again is important for our study is that the "bloodline" of the Hebrews, beginning with Isaac, the son of Tuthmose III, reunites with the throne of Egypt in the daughter of Joseph (Yuya) whom is the historical Tiye, wife of the Pharaoh and from this marriage will come the Biblical Moses.....know also as Akhenaten, Amenhotep IV.

The fact that the marriage of Amenhotep III and Tiye took place early in his reign is established by two of five commemorative scarabs (sacred beetles) issued by the king and discovered in the latter part of the last century. After their wedding, Amenhotep III presented Tiye with the frontier fortress of Zarw (in the area of modern Quantara East of the Suez Canal) as a kind of summer palace so that she could be near her Israelite relatives, settled at Goshen (beyond Egypt proper, because shepherds were still "an abomination"). Goshen was in those days linked with the fortress of Zarw by water. The last of the above scarabs describes the construction of a pleasure lake for Queen Tiye at Zarw in Year 11 (1395 BC) of Amenhotep III's reign. Six versions of the scarab have been found. Although there are some minor differences, they all agree on the main points of the text (Ibid., p. 61).

These scarabs suggest that Queen Tiye enjoyed an idyllic marriage to an immensely rich, powerful and indulgent husband, happy to grant her every wish, even to presenting her with a summer palace, so that she could be close to her Israelite relatives in Goshen, together with a pleasure lake. However, the man at her side on that October day, when they were enjoying a kind of second honeymoon, could foresee, because his wife being the daughter of a Hebrew (Joseph-himself of a mixed blood line with Egypt) was herself an extension of this mixed blood lineage and was not the "legal" heiress and only half-Egyptian. This mixed blood lineage was the beginning of a serious crisis ahead over the Pharaoh's line of succession if his wife's expected child proved to be a boy, a crisis that would not be easy to resolve, even for Amenhotep III. Today, 3,500 years later, he still enjoys the reputation of someone who was infinitely wise. Amenhotep III, you see, was the Biblical Solomon.

THE TWO SOLOMONS

At this part of our study I referred you to the article that is on this website dealing with King Solomon/Amenhotep III. A few things need be said before we leave this study. King Solomon is presented to us in the Old Testament in a number of semblances: King of Israel, who succeeded his father, David, in the 10th century B.C.E.; the son of David and Bathsheba, adulterous wife of Uriah the Hittite; commander of a vast army of men and a host of chariots ("a thousand and four hundred" and "twelve thousand horsemen" according to I Kings 10:26); overlord of a vast empire that underwent decline during his reign; the husband of Pharaoh's daughter; and the lover of "many strange women, together with the daughter of Pharaoh" (I Kings 11:1).

Answer for yourself: Does this sound vaguely familiar?

Here we find ourselves facing a similar situation to that encountered earlier in the Old Testament when we saw that the Old Testament presented us with two contrasting characters for David; a mighty warrior who created an empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates (Tuthmose III, c. 1490-1436 BC) and a modest tribal chief who lived in the 10th century B.C.E. who accomplished the same events which were problematically separated by five centuries which are lumped together as if they happened at the same time. Now we have to deal with two Solomons. To examine briefly some of the attributes ascribed to him in the Book of I Kings:

Answer for yourself: Is the Biblical Solomon the literal son of King David? Well no he is not. Solomon cannot have succeeded his father David in the 10th century B.C.E. as the Bible depicts it because David (Tuthmose III), as we have seen, lived five centuries earlier and was, in fact, not his father but his great-grandfather.

In the Old Testament one often comes across accounts where the oral memory of ancient events is retold in a fictionalized form with different characters and a different time-scale. Many scholars today will write and tell you that the David (Tuthmose III-Bathsheba-Uriah story found in the Book of II Samuel should be seen as another version of the David (Tuthmose III)-Sarah-Abraham story, related in the earlier Book of Genesis, in which the King married Sarah and, on discovering that Sarah was Abraham's wife, sent the couple back to Canaan where the pregnant Sarah gave birth to Isaac, the king's son.

David therefore sent him back to the front accompanied by the order: "Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle.. . that he may be smitten and die"' (II Samuel 11:15). Once Uriah had met his death, David married Bathsheba, who bore him a son.

Up to this point, both stories are remarkably similar;

- Both Abraham and Uriah are foreigners, Abraham a Canaanite in Egypt, Uriah a Hittite in Jerusalem.
- In each case their wives are made pregnant by a king and give birth to a son.

The fate of the two "children of sin" is different, however. In the case of Abraham we have a hint of moral disapproval of the circumstances that led to the birth of Isaac: he is said to have been tempted by God initially to offer Isaac as "a burnt offering" (Genesis 22:2), but after Abraham responded to the temptation Isaac's life was spared and Abraham took a ram "and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son" (22:13).

In the case of David we find a more precise moral judgement. We are told that after David had caused the death of Uriah and married Bathsheba, who bore him a son, "the thing that David had done displeased the Lord. And the Lord sent [unto David] Nathan [the prophet] who said to David, . . Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his sight? thou hast killed Uriah with the sword, and has taken his wife to be thy wife. . . Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house.. . the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die" (II Samuel 11:27, 12:1,9-10,14).

These condemnations were followed by the promise that the awaited child, which proved to be very sick, would not survive. This un-named boy died on the seventh day and David "comforted Bathsheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son: and he called his name Solomon...? (12:24).

Scholars are divided over the authenticity of the story of Uriah and his wife as recorded in the Bible. Hermann Gunkel, the distinguished German biblical scholar, dismisses the whole story of Uriah and his wife as having no historical basis. Ahmed Osman disagrees. Mr. Osman maintains that the names used in these fictional accounts are based on real events and such events usually point to the identity of the original historical characters and, as a rule, provide evidence that we are dealing with fact disguised as fiction. He believes that this is clearly the case with the name Uriah. Mr. Osman goes on to describe that the name Uriah is composed of two elements - Ur, a Mesopotamian word meaning "city" or "light", and Yah (iah), which is the short form of Jehovah, the Israelite God. The meaning of the name could therefore be "Jehovah's light". Yet in spite of this he is described as being a Hittite.

Answer for yourself: How can we accept that a Hittite, a traditional enemy of Egypt and the Israelites, could be a worshipper of the Israelite God and one of the heroes of David's army?

Nor do we have any information to explain the sudden appearance of this foreigner and his wife in Jerusalem, where they seem to have had their home.

To look at the matter from another point of view, Ur, the first part of Uriah's name, relates him to the birthplace of Abraham. The first reference to this in the Bible describes how Abraham and Sarah "went forth . . . from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan" (Genesis 11:31).

Answer for yourself: This could mean either "a city of the Chaldees" or, if the word Ur was used as a proper noun, "Ur of the Chaldees". Whatever the situation regarding this early reference, later on Ur certainly became a proper noun indicating the birthplace of Abraham. Thus the name Ur-iah relates the invented character both to the God of Abraham and to the city of Abraham's origin.

We have a similar situation with the name Bathsheba. Here again we have two elements - Beth, meaning "a girl" or "a daughter", and Sheba, an area to the south of Canaan that takes its name from the local well, Beer-Sheba. The name Beth-Sheba can therefore be interpreted as "a girl (or daughter) of Sheba", which was the area in which Sarah and Abraham settled after their return from Egypt.

The statement that Solomon commanded a vast army and was overlord of a huge empire that underwent decline during his reign finds no historical support in the 10th century B.C.E., by which time the empire founded 500 years earlier by Tuthmose III, the great-grandfather of Amenhotep III, had ceased to exist. The description of Solomon as the husband of Pharaoh's daughter also cannot be true. He would have had to be a member of the royal house of Egypt rather than King of Israel before he was able to marry an Egyptian princess.

We know from the Amarna letters - the foreign archives of the 18th Dynasty, a period of rule that lasted roughly from 1575 to 1335 BC, that it was not the custom of Egyptian kings to give their daughters in marriage to foreign rulers. The reference to marriage to Pharaoh's daughter reflects the fact that Amenhotep III married his infant sister, Sitamun, in order, as was the Egyptian custom, to inherit the throne.

The Old Testament also assures us that Solomon was both rich and extremely wise: "So King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom" (I Kings 10:23). The best-known story about the wisdom of Solomon is the dispute between two mothers over the parenthood of a child, to be found in I Kings 3:16-28. Each of the women, who lived in the same house, gave birth to a baby boy. One of the babies died, however, and both women claimed the surviving child as her own and eventually came before the king with their dispute. Thereupon Solomon ordered the child to be cut in half with a sword, and one half to be given to each woman. This immediately helped to identify the real mother, who tried to save the boy's life by asking for the child to be given to the other woman.

It is hardly to be believed that the king, who had professional judges and officials, would involve himself personally in such a dispute between two women, who are described in the Bible as harlots. In fact, I believe that we are dealing here with another story that is being told with a different cast: the real story concerns the circumstances surrounding the birth of Moses and Pharaoh's threat to kill him, which will be dealt with later.

Solomon's reputation for wisdom, as well as the name by which he is known, does not rest on resolving a dispute over the motherhood of a child, but on the masterful way he - or, rather, Amenhotep III - ruled Egypt and the vast empire founded originally by his great-grandfather, Tuthmose III (David), an empire that encompassed "all the kingdoms from the river (Euphrates) unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt" (I Kings 4:2 1). An important element of his rule was his marriages to "many strange women" who were princesses from neighboring states with whom, because of these marriages, Egypt enjoyed peaceful relations and avoided costly wars.

TRACING THE HEBREW PHARAOHS OF EGYPT...WHO WAS THIS KING SOMOMON?

I assume that the reader of this article has previously read articles #1 and #2 in this series. If you have read article #2 dealing with the Biblical King David we saw a preponderance of evidence that teaches us that King David of the Old Testament is the historical Pharaoh Thutmose III.

Answer for yourself: If King David is to be properly identified as an adaptation of the Pharaoh Thutmose III, then should we not expect that from through his loins, one way or the other, would come one whom we know today as King Solomon? Should we expect that he should also be a Pharaoh and also be found in Egypt?

Our study will focus on the most important Pharaohs of the 18th dynasty:

- Ahmose
- Amenhotep I
- Thutmose I
- Thutmose II
- Hatshepsut
- Thutmose III (King David)
- Amenhotep II
- Thutmose IV
- Amenhotep III (King Solomon)
- Amenhotep IV (Akhenaten-Moses)
- Neferneferuaten
- Tutankhamen
- Ay
- Horemheb

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that out beside three names of these 18th Dynasty Pharaohs are the more familiar Biblical names of familiar Jewish heroes and Kings? What could we possibly mean by that? Have we lost our mind at Bet Emet Ministries? Are we insinuating that the real identities of these Biblical characters are possibly Egyptian Pharaohs? Yes that is exactly what we are saying and we have the evidence to prove such an identification as you will see if you continue to study.

You should have noticed one other thing that is quite startling considering what we have been taught by the Old Testament. It must be said at the beginning that the chronology of the Bible represents Solomon as the son of King David. However when we get to Egypt we see that the Biblical chronology is questionable due to highly detailed and accurate Egyptian records and as you study you will see this for yourself. As our study progresses and the evidence mounts that the King Solomon of the Bible is in reality Amenhotep III. We will also begin to notice that unlike what we have led to believe; for example, that King Solomon is the son of King David, such is not the truth. We will find that King Solomon is not the son but rather the grandson of Tuthmose III (King David of the Bible).

Answer for yourself: So what is the truth? Well let us do our study and examine the historical evidence and and assorted historical facts we find outside the Old Testament and then you will see quite clearly which is true and let me give you a hint...it is not the Biblical account. Now on with the study.

The Hebrew Old Testament contains a lot of information about King Solomon. Much of it is true and some is not. In the Hebrew Scriptures it is said of King Solomon:

- Solomon inherited a enormous empire conquered by his father King David that extended from the Nile in Egypt to the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia;

I Kings 4:21 21 And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If we can prove that King Solomon is a Pharaoh then what does that say about about the same promise made earlier to the Hebrew "Patriarchs"; for example the one which we find in Gen 15:18 which was made to Abraham?

Gen. 15: 18 18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Could Abraham have been a Pharaoh and we not know it? Would this explain why Josephus writes that Abraham had 318 "officers" indicating an vast army of legions when the inherited Hebrew Texts given us by Ezra says "318 servants"? Did Ezra cover this up? I again refer you to article #2 to begin to see the truth about Ezra. Now let us look at more of the "same" promises in the Hebrew Texts and to "whom" they were made.

Deut 1:6-7 6 The LORD our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount: 7 Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south, and by the sea side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did Moses get the authority to promise this land which was owned by Egypt to these "fleeing" Hebrews? Could it have been that Moses was a Pharaoh and we not know it?

Josh 1:1-4 1 Now after the death of Moses the servant of the LORD it came to pass, that the LORD spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, 2 Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. 3 Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses. 4 From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did Joshua get the authority to promise this land which was owned by Egypt to these "fleeing" Hebrews? Could it have been that Joshua also was a Pharaoh and we not know it?

2 Sam 8:1-3 1 And after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Metheg'ammah out of the hand of the Philistines. 2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. And so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts. 3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did King David get the ownership of this Egyptian land? Could King David have been a Pharaoh? Well we saw that he was in article #2. That determination is not hard for you now once reading article #2. We will deal with these other Patriarchs in future articles. Now let us get back to Solomon.

The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon accumulated great wealth and wisdom.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and in wisdom. (1917 Tanakh)

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon administered his kingdom through a system of 12 districts (1 Kings 4:7).

7 And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, who provided victuals for the king and his household: each man had to make provision for a month in the year.

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon possessed a large harem, which included "the daughter of Pharaoh"

1 ¶ And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh king of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of the LORD, and the wall of Jerusalem round about (I Kings 3:1)

1 ¶ Now king Solomon loved many foreign women, besides the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites; (I Kings. 11:1)

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart. (I Kings 11:3)

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon honored other gods in his old age:

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his heart was not whole with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father. 5 For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the detestation of the Ammonites. (I Kings 11:4-5).

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon was a master builder who created buildings of royal proportions like the Egyptians. He built "the house of the Lord, and his own house as we know. devoted his reign to great building projects;

15 ¶ And this is the account of the levy which king Solomon raised; to build the house of the LORD, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer. (1 Kings 9:15).

17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether, 18 and Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness, in the land, 19 and all the store-cities that Solomon had, and the cities for his chariots, and the cities for his horsemen, and that which Solomon desired to build for his pleasure in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion. (I Kings 9:17-19).

Answer for yourself: What were some of these building accomplishments:

- The Temple (I Kings 6)
- The Royal Palace (I Kings 7:2-12)
- The walls of Jerusalem
- The millo (an eastern fill made to enlarge Jerusalem (I Kings 11:27)
- The Royal Cities of Megiddo, Hazor, and Gezer,
- Many garrisons and fortifications
- The store cities, the cities for his horsemen and the cities for his chariots throughout his empire.

Answer for yourself: In reading a book entitled Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times by Redford he asks a good question so let me paraphrase it: Since archeology and history testifies to a pattern where other great Bronze and Iron Age cultures in the ancient Near East (Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, and Hittite) left as a legacy numerous documents, art, and inscriptions on buildings or public monuments would should we not expect to have such testimony left by such a great king and master builder let alone by the descendants and admirers of King Solomon in order to honor him? Of course we would expect this to occur yet the hard facts of archeology and history hits us right between the eyes. No article of any king bearing the name of "King Solomon" has ever been found as of today (Ibid. p. 309) anywhere!

The cities of Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer, which as we have seen were built by King Solomon, have now been extensively excavated and all artifacts discovered examined and categorized. Hazor was a large Canaanite city state in Upper Galilee and has been identified as modern Tell el-Qedah only 14 kilometers north of the Sea of Galilee. It was one of the major commercial centres in the Fertile Cresent and we find references to it in both Egyptian and Mesopotamian texts going as far back as the eighteenth century B.C.E. Megiddo, which has been identified as modern Tell el-Mutesellim, was the largest of he ancient fortified city states in Canaan, overlooking the Jezreel Valley of Central Palestine, while Gezar, located in the foothills of the Judean Rang east of Jerusalem, was another important fortified city. A stratum containing large palaces, temples and strong fortifications was found in each of these cities. The name of Solomon, however, was not found.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that all three of these cities were conquered by Tuthmose III (King David) in the middle of the fifteenth century B.C.E.? This has been confirmed by archeological digging , which has produced evidence of the cities' destruction in the right strata for this period (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 212).

Answer for yourself: Now since King Solomon is King David's grandson, and we know that King David is really Thutmose III, then should we not expect to find compelling evidence and parallels between the lives of the Biblical King Solomon and Thutmose III's grandson named Amenhotep III? We should and we do.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in all three cases evidence has been found of large-scale reconstruction work 50 years later during the reign of Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) who was Tuthmose III's (David's) grandson?

Answer for yourself: Can you guess what of earth shattering proportions was also found in the excavations of these three cities? A cartouche containing the name not of Solomon but Amenhotep III. A Cartouche is an oval band symbolizing continuity which enclosed a god's or Pharaoh's name (nomen and prenomen) similar to a modern logo, and which was the symbol of an Egyptian name in hieroglyphics. A cartouche of the 18th Dynasty Pharaoh Amenhotep III, Thutmose III's grandson (King David) was found in the strata belonging to this period and nothing was found indicating a "King Solomon" had been connected with any of these 3 cities in any way whatsoever. (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 212).

In Jerusalem, it has not been possible to excavate the temple mount, however, extensive excavations in the city, including the areas adjacent to the temple mount have not revealed the existence of a Solomaic palace complex (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 216). Moreover, excavation of the Millo has revealed (due to pottery found in the Millo) that its original construction was also contemporary with the Egyptian 18th Dynasty of Amenhotep III (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 200-201; Rohl, Pharaohs and Kings, p. 181).

Amenhotep III of Egypt, Pharaoh of the Egypt's glorious 18th Dynasty, was known in ancient times as the "King of Kings" and "Ruler of Ruler's" (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 35). He, like the Biblical Solomon, inherited a vast empire whose influence extended quite literally from the Nile to the Euphrates (Osman, House of Messiah, p. 202).

Answer for yourself: Does it stand to reason that any Jewish king would ever inherit the Nile in Egypt? (THINK).

In contrast to the empire of Solomon, which we can find no trace outside of the inherited adulterated Hebrew texts bequeathed to us by Ezra, the empire of Amenhotep is indisputable (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43). The buildings, monuments, documents, art, and numerous other vestiges of his reign are universal and unparalleled (with the possible exception being those left by the 19th Dynasty Pharaoh, Ramses II).

The entire reign of Amenhotep III was devoted to monumental construction throughout Egypt, Canaan, and Syria (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 147). In addition to the ancient world's most glorious temple at Luxor (Osman, The House of Messiah, p. 216), he built many other temples of similar design throughout Egypt and in the rest of his empire (Ibid. p. 217), including the Canaanite garrison cities of Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer (Ibid, p. 212), Lachish and Beth-shean (Ibid., p. 218).

According to Egyptian records, Amenhotep's father Thutmose IV and grandfather Amenhotep II deported over 80,000 Canaanites. The Canaanite inhabitants of Gezer were specifically included in this deportation (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 165, 208). It was during Amenhotep III's reign (King Solomon) that Gezer and other major Palestine cities were refortified as royal Egyptian garrisons, and endowed with fine temples and palaces.

The Bible states that in Solomon's day, the Pharaoh of Egypt captured the Canaanite city of Gezer and presented it to his daughter as a dowry upon her marriage to Solomon (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 205; Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 310).

16 Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a portion unto his daughter, Solomon's wife. 17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether,

We made mention in earlier articles that sons of Pharaohs inherited the throne by marrying their "sisters". And we saw in the case of Tuthmose III, being of mixed blood, distanced from the throne of Egypt by failing to marry the daughter of Pharaoh thus necessitating his "adoption" by Amun in Psalm 2:6. Here we find again this example but now it applies to King Solomon. It stands to reason, if we recall, that if Tuthmose III, the grandfather of Amenhotep III, was of mixed blood then his grandson, be it Amenhotep III or Solomon would be of mixed blood and it would again be necessary to marry "the throne" by marring a daughter of a Pharaoh and this is exactly what the Hebrew Scriptures tell us Solomon did. Thus we now better understand why it was customary and obligatory for Amenhotep III to marry "the daughter of Pharaoh" in order to secure the throne (Osman, House of Messiah, p. 204-205). This is precisely what was done when he was married to Sitamun, the daughter of his father, Pharaoh Thutmose IV.

The network of Egyptian 18th Dynasty garrison cities also included the most important city of all.

Answer for yourself: Can you guess which city I am speaking about?

I bet most of you guessed it as I am speaking concerning Jerusalem. If construction by Amenhotep III at Gezer, Hazor, Megiddo and other garrison cities is any indication, then a magnificent temple undoubtedly was also built by Amenhotep II on Jerusalem's venerated Temple Mount (Osman, The House of Messiah, p. 218; Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 310).

Answer for yourself: Should we not be surprised to learn that the structure adjacent to Jerusalem's Temple Mount, known traditionally as "Solomon's stables," is consistent with the architecture of Amenhotep's garrison cities according to Osman? (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 218). Archaeology has also confirmed that chariots were kept in these cities during his reign in groups of between thirty to one hundred and fifty each (Ibid., p. 207).

Answer for yourself: Was Israel or Egypt known for their chariots? They both were! Is this a link between Solomon and Amenhotep III?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the ancient mining operations at Timna in the Negev desert, known as "Solomon's mines," "are much earlier than the Biblical dating for King Solomon by some three hundred years [in the conventional chronology]? This little know fact, given to us by Mazar, Archaeology of the Land of the Bible, is but one more piece of puzzle that is showing us that Amenhotep III is the Biblical Solomon.

Answer for yourself: This should expect and do we find that the date and times of Amenhotep III correspond exactly to the Biblical dating for "Solomon's mines? Yes we do!

Copper from Timna, gold from the Sudan, other precious metals, jewels and high quality stone were used in great abundance in Amenhotep's temples, just as they were in Solomon's (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 217). A stela from Amenhotep's mortuary temple boasts that the temple was "embellished with gold throughout, its floor shining with silver ... with royal statues of granite, of quartzite and precious stones." The list of materials used in another temple built by Amenhotep is also "staggering: 3.25 tons of electrum [an alloy of silver and gold], 2.5 tons of gold, 944 tons of copper..." (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 45, quoted by Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 217).

The Hebrew Scriptures, in Ecclesiastes 2:4-11), teach us that the Biblical Solomon's greatest satisfaction is said to have been the challenge of completing grand projects.

Answer for yourself: Can the same be said for Amenhotep III? Yes. A royal Egyptian text of the period reads, "Lo, His Majesty's heart was satisfied with making very great monuments, the like of which had never come into being since the primeval age of the Two Lands" (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43).

Only an enormously wealthy king of a long established empire could have built so splendidly and in so many widely distributed locations in the ancient world. Amenhotep III was arguably the ancient world's wealthiest king. The completion of such magnificent projects required management of a considerable and constant source of labor and revenue extending over a period of many decades.

Earlier we mentioned that the Biblical Solomon had, I Kings 4:7:

7 And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, who provided victuals for the king and his household: each man had to make provision for a month in the year.

Answer for yourself: Should we expect and do we find that Amenhotep III had a similar if not exact administration and taxation system with 12 districts as did King Solomon as described in the Bible? Yes we should and we find the exact system in Egypt under Amenhotep III.

Amenhotep III also dedicated himself to rediscovering the wisdom, mysteries and traditions of earlier Egyptian Dynasties (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 151, 162, 164; Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 52).

Answer for yourself: If Solomon is Amenhotep III as were are seeing then does this explain his strong admonition to get knowledge and wisdom as we see in Proverbs and as was exhibited by Amenhotep III when studying intensely to rediscover ancient wisdom and the hidden mysteries of earlier Egyptian dynasties?

Answer for yourself: Do you recall in an earlier article that I mentioned when taking Proverbs in Seminary I ran across the connection between Solomon and Amenhotep III in the Anchor Bible Commentary on Proverbs? That being the case then this explains the strong relationship has been established between the "Proverbs of Solomon" in the Bible and the "Maxims of Amenhotep III" found in Egypt (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 222; quoting from Bright, A History of Israel, p. 199).

In addition to the projects already mentioned, Amenhotep III also built a completely new palace complex in Thebes.

Answer for yourself: Should we be surprised by now to find that this new royal residence included all of the elements contained in the palace complex of Solomon which are described in the Bible in 1 Kings 7:2-12)? Not at all really; at least not by now having previously read the article on Tuthmose III and having read this far into the article on Amenhotep III

Answer for yourself: What were these elements? Osman, in his House of the Messiah, p. 214-216, states that they were:

- a house made almost entirely out of cedars of Lebanon (built for Amenhotep's Jubilee festival);
- a colonnade (hall of columns) fronted by a portico (porch) and surrounded by a column-lined courtyard;
- a throne room built with many wooden columns and whose floor was a painted lake scene (identical to the one crossed in wonder by the Queen of Sheba when she approached the throne of Solomon, as described in the Koran);
- a separate palace built for Sitamun, "the daughter of Pharaoh;"
- a royal palace (consisting of his own residence, the residence of his Great Wife, Tiye, and a residence for the royal harem).

Answer for yourself: Should we be surprised any longer that Amenhotep III, like Solomon, were relentless in their pursuit of women for their harem, especially beautiful foreign women of both royal and common backgrounds alike (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 37). No; not really.

Amenhotep III's harem included two princesses from Babylon, two princesses from Syria, two princesses from Mitanni, and like Solomon's harem.

Answer for yourself: Should be any longer surprised that Amenhotep III's harem included a princess from each of the seven nations listed in 1 Kings 11:1 which is mentioned for King Solomon as well? (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 204). As the mightiest king of the Middle East, Amenhotep did not send any of his own daughters to other kings in exchange, nor did any other Pharaoh of this dynasty (or likely any other throughout Egypt's history). He specifically denied a request by the king of Babylon for an Egyptian wife (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 37). Importantly, the Bible emphasizes Solomon's Egyptian bride, but does not mention that Solomon had any Hebrew wives (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 204-205). Rehoboam, who is said to have succeeded Solomon, was the son of an Ammonite princess and not a Hebrew wife (Ibid., p. 2040205).

The court of Amenhotep III was an extremely liberal one, and reflected every possible excess of an affluent and secure kingdom (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 46). Eroticism in art and court life reached its height during the reign of Amenhotep III (Aldred, Akhenaten King of Egypt, p. 132). The famous "nude dancing girls" mural dates to Amenhotep's reign (Aldred, Egyptian Art, p. 176; Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 131-132).

As with Solomon, Amenhotep III denied himself nothing "his eyes desired" and "refused his heart no pleasure" (Ecclesiastes 2:10).

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy, for my heart had joy of all my labour; and this was my portion from all my labour

However, the last years of Amenhotep III's thirty-eight year reign were not pleasant ones. The long years of indulgence had taken their toll and he had many ailments.

Answer for yourself: What have we seen?

The "inescapable conclusion" to any "thinking believer" is that the story of Solomon was patterned specifically after the life of Amenhotep III. The name Solomon itself, which literally means "peace" or "safety" points to Amenhotep III whose long and pervasive reign in the 14th Century B.C. did not include any major military campaigns, but was characterized by unprecedented stability throughout the Near East (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 202). After the Egyptian 18th Dynasty, the region between the two great rivers was not controlled by a single power again until the Assyrian empire of Ashurbanipal (the grandson of Sennacherib) who invaded Egypt and pillaged Thebes in the 7th Century B.C. (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 364), and the 6th Century B.C. empire of Cyrus, who also conquered Egypt and made it a Persian province (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 88). There is no evidence of any empire at any time controlling this region whose capital was Jerusalem.

COMPARING THE BIBLICAL KING SOLOMON WITH AMENHOTEP III: ARE THEY THE SAME PERSON?

Answer for yourself: Is the Biblical King Solomon actually Amenhotep III, Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt? Well let us see.

The task before us, that of identifying the historical Solomon as Amenhotep III, is made difficult for us right from the start because there exists no historical record of a king of that name outside of the Biblical record. It is only when we match in detail the Old Testament account of his exploits with the reign of Amenhotep III that it becomes clear we are dealing with the same person.

The actual name "Solomon" as used in the Bible for the character under study derives from the Semitic word "salaam" and means "safety" or "peace".

Answer for yourself: Do you remember from our other previous studies that an amazing characteristic of Amenhotep III's reign is that it was almost devoid of any military campaigns and one of relative peace and safety?

Other than a minor military operation in northern Sudan during his Year 5 (1401 BC), Amenhotep III's reign was almost entirely peaceful. He was the first ruler of the Egyptian empire who did not launch any military campaigns in western Asia. Instead, he relied on alliances and exchanges of gifts and diplomatic letters between himself and other leaders of the then-known world to create a climate of international friendship. He also furthered the cause of peace by a series of judicious marriages to "strange women" or "foreign women" in order to solidify and secure the peace between nations.

The passage about Solomon's marriage to "strange women" is followed by a warning from the Lord that "surely they will turn away your heart after their gods: Solomon clave unto these in love" (I Kings 11:2). Shortly afterwards we are told that "it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God. . . For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcor the abomination of the Ammonites" (11:4-5).

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

This above diversification of worship on the part of the Biblical Solomon is in line with the other historical evidence relating to the reign of Amenhotep III. Although there are many indications that he became converted to the worship of Aten, who was to be introduced into Egypt a few decades later as a monotheistic God, he also worshipped other gods. But as we have seen this is not "polytheism" as so many Christian writers suggest since their understanding of Egyptian Religion is terribly deficient of the facts of this faith. Failing to understand correctly the Egyptian concept of the "neteroo" they label Egypt's understanding of the "All in the One" as polytheism when in fact it is the ultimate expression of "Monotheism".

The possession of a large and secure empire, and not having to fight any wars, are said to have enabled Solomon (Amenhotep III) to embark on a large number of projects an administrative reforms. According to Otto Eissfeldt, the German biblical scholar, there were five characteristic features of Solomon's reign:

- Change in his kingdom's military organization and the introduction of chariotry as an essential arm of war;
- The creation of new administrative districts;
- Changes in the taxation system;
- The refinement of court procedure and the maintenance of diplomatic relations with foreign courts; and
- Building activity on a large scale, including the royal palace and its adjoining temple, and fortified barrack for his garrisons in the north.

Answer for yourself: Can we find the above accomplishments attributed to King Solomon also attributed in Egyptian records to the life and times Amenhotep III and if so does this help support and confirm that the Biblical King Solomon is actually Amenhotep III? The answer is "yes" to both questions.

Let us make some very important comparisons between these two men. We saw before when looking at the Biblical King David, or Tuthmose III as we know him now, that Tuthmose III was responsible for founding the the great Egyptian empire in the 15th century B.C.E. that extended from the "river of Egypt (Nile) to the Euphrates". In accomplishing this he had to have had a strong, well-trained, well-organized army equipped with the best chariots of his age, otherwise he would not have been able to establish his extended empire. However, the American Egyptologist Alan Richard Schulman has shown that the chariotry formed only a part of the army at this time. It was not until the early part of the reign of Amenhotep III that the chariotry became identified as a separate entity from the infantry, with Yuya (Joseph), as we saw earlier, the first minister we know to bear the title "Deputy of His Majesty in the Chariotry".Thus it was Amenhotep III (Solomon) who organized the chariotry as a separate unit of warfare.

Now let us examine the administrative aspects of the reign of both men. The Bible teaches us that the administrative system up to the time of King Solomon was of a tribal nature. King Solomon did away with tribal divisions and united Israel, together with other parts of the empire, in one political entity: "And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, which provided victuals for the king and his household: each man his month in a year made provision" (I Kings 4:7).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this above Biblical description of the administrative system employed by a supposed King Solomon does not belong to the Palestinian Israel but to the Egyptian empire?

From as early as 3000 BC, the Egyptian administration controlled the activities of the Two Lands of Egypt. It organized the royal court as well as the economy in the name of the king, the official owner of all the land. Palace officials were responsible for each administrative region, where there was another high official with a local bureaucracy under his control. During the empire period, and particularly during the time of Tuthmose III (David), the administrative system was reorganized to suit the needs of the age, and later further developed by Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon). It was then that, for the purposes of taxation, the empire was arranged in 12 administrative sections, an arrangement that the biblical narrator drew on for his account of the king the world now knows as King Solomon.

Almost all scholars agree that the taxation system that the Bible says was introduced by Solomon matches precisely the system that was used in Egypt after Tuthmose III had established the new Egyptian empire. Each of the 12 areas was the responsibility of a high official and was expected to contribute sufficient tax to cover the country's needs for one month of the year.

Answer for yourself: Are the above similarities just coincidence?

Now let us focus on how these two men administered their nation. As you might imagine coping with the administrative burdens of a vast empire needed a highly developed administration. The sudden appearance of such a supposed administration in Israelite tribal society during the "United Monarchy of David and Solomon" in the 10th century BC, without any roots in the nation's previous history and followed by its sudden disappearance after Solomon's death, has been a source of puzzlement to scholars. The apparent contradiction is resolved, however, once identification of the historical David (Tuthmose III) and Solomon (Amenhotep III) makes it clear that the sophisticated administration described in the Old Testament is the administration established by these two monarchs in the 15th and 14th centuries BC to deal with the day-to-day task of ruling Egypt and its empire (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 71).

We find among the list of officials the priests, the scribes, the commander-in-chief of the army, the official in charge of the palace and another in charge of the tribute. All of these new offices are similar to appointments made by Amenhotep III. Even the forced labor pressed into service in Egypt for the king's building projects is said to have been imposed for the first time by Solomon (Amenhotep III) on native Israelites as well as foreigners: "And king Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men" (I Kings 5:13). The number of senior officials argues for a large number of minor ones. I Kings 9:23 gives a figure of 550 simply to supervise labor (Ibid.).

According to the Bible, the empire inherited by Solomon became to some extent weakened during the course of his reign. He faced troubles in Edom (in southern Palestine). His influence in Syria was also weakened when Rezon is said to have seized Damascus and made himself king there.

Answer for yourself: Can we expect and do we find the same weakening of the empire of Egypt under the reign of Amenhotep III? We sure do.

These rebellions echoed in the Bible find their echo in the Amarna letters, the foreign archives of the 18th Dynasty, relating to the reign of Amenhotep III. Frederick J. Giles, the Canadian Egyptologist who made a study of them, came to the conclusion that "most of the letters that deal with the alleged collapse of the Egyptian empire during the Amarna period" come from the period of his rule. Thus the biblical account of changes in King David's (Tuthmose III's) empire during the time of Solomon can be seen to agree with historical records relating to events during the reign of Amenhotep III (Ibid.). What we are describing is the simultaneous decline of both the empire of King Solomon and Amenhotep III. Letters sent by Canaanite kings, especially Abdi-khiba of Jerusalem, speak of continuous trouble in the area of Edom and southern Palestine: "All the king's land is rebellious." These problems in southern Palestine were not so serious that they led to any weakening of the king's control in the area, but the situation in northern Syria was far more critical. Even before Amenhotep III came to the throne, the northern Mesopotamian kingdom of Mitanni, to the east of the Euphrates, defeated by Tuthmose III, had begun to reassert its influence over city states in northern Syria. Amenhotep III responded to this threat by a peace treaty with the King of Mitanni and marriage to two Mitannian princesses. He also sent the King of Mitanni thirty units of gold each year in return for his protecting the north Syrian section of the empire. However, Amenhotep III's problems in the region were not yet over. Towards the end of his reign, the king's authority over the northern part of the empire, including Damascus, was endangered by the powerful Hittite king, Suppiluliuma. He also posed a threat to Mitanni, Egypt's ally in the area. Akizzi, ruler of the northern Syrian city of Qatna, a few miles north of Qadesh, spoke of these dangers in letters to Amenhotep III: "To King Annumuria (Amenhotep III), Son of the Sun, my Lord, thus [says] this thy servant Akizzi . . . I am afraid . . . men who are destroyers serve the king of the land of the Hittites: he sends them forth..." (Ibid., p. 73).

In a following letter, Akizzi informed the king that the land of Ubi, west of Damascus, was under threat: "Just as Damascus. . . is terror-stricken at the league of the enemy, and is lifting up its hands in supplication at the feet of the king, so likewise does the city of Qatna lift up its hands" (Ibid.).

In 1887 an Egyptian peasant woman discovered a collection of cuneiform tablets at Tell El-Amarna in Middle Egypt. They were located in a room of a palace buried in sand. They contained the archives of the Asiatic campaigns of the Pharaoh Akhnaton in the mid-fourteenth century BC. Amarna had been newly built as Akhnaton's capital. The tablets were letters of correspondence to Amenhotep III, the father of Akhnaton (Amenhotep IV), and to Akhenaten himself. A very few were to Tutankhamen, his successor and son-in-law. They were written by Canaanite scribes who were located in Palestine, Phoenicia, and southern Syria. They were mostly in the Akkadian language, "full of canaanitisms in grammar and vocabulary." Occasionally a letter was written in Canaanite with scattered Akkadian formulas and ideograms. They described mostly a state of anarchy then in Palestine. The Amarna letters reveal a state of unrest at the end of the Eighteenth Dynasty, with a constant threat of invasion from the Hittites to the north. The Amarna letters testify to considerable rivalries and hostilities among the city-states. Canaan was politically organized in a system of petty kingdoms - usually referred to as city states. None of the city-states enjoyed self-rule, but owed their allegiance to Egypt. The Amarna letters indicate around 15-17 major city-states. These varied in size, but were all fairly small. King Ribaddi of Byblos wrote frequently; 70 of the surviving letters were written by him. Egyptian power in Palestine collapsed during the reign of Akhenaten (Amenhotep IV), and letters from Ribaddi no longer arrived at the court.The Amarna letters, alluding to unrest in the reign of the 18th Dynasty Pharaoh Amenhotep III also throw some light on the biblical account which states: "King Solomon gave to Hiram (the king of Tyre) twenty cities in the land of Galilee" (I Kings 9:11). Notice with me that Egypt is no longer the governing power over these cities which formally were under Egyptian rule. The name of Tyre's king in these letters is not Hiram, but Abimilichi. From his letters we know that:

- "The king, my Lord, hath appointed me the guardian of the city of Tyre..."
- In another letter, No. 99, in the Berlin Museum, Abimilichi asked the king to "give the city of Huzu to his servant".
- In yet another letter, No. 29, which is to be found in the British Museum, the King of Tyre indicated that another of the Egyptian cities had been placed under his control: "And now the city Zarbitu is to be guarded by the city of Tyre for the king, my Lord."

These measures were done because the power of Egypt had so drastically fallen in this time that they were unable to govern these territories in Palestine as they had previously. These historical records show that Egypt had previously taken control of Canaan but that law and order had deteriorated; local princes and tribal chiefs were trying to overthrow their Egyptian rulers. Later we see the son of Amenhotep III, Akhnaton, so preoccupied with other matters such as vigorously pursuing a program to reform the religion of Egypt that few if any efforts were made to control these territories slipping from their power. With his mind and energies devoted to that enterprise, and to the establishment of his new city at Amarna, he may have had little time to tend to the affairs of the empire. Furthermore, he had antagonized the powerful Egyptian priesthood; they were intent on removing him from power. Amidst this unsettled period Habiru tribes were on the move in Canaan. So what we see here is that both men, Solomon and Amenhotep III, were besieged by political and military demise of their empires at the same time in Palestine which is but one more puzzle piece that helps us identify King Solomon with Amenhotep III.

It is a fact that both King Solomon and Amenhotep III were "master builders". Solomon is said to have been a master creator of spectacular buildings. He built "the house of the Lord, and his own house, and Millo (the filling material used to enlarge the surface area of Jerusalem on the top of the mountain), and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer" (I Kings 9:15), and "Beth-horon the nether, And Baalath and Tadmor in the wilderness... And all the cities of store that Solomon had, and cities for his chariots, and cities for his horsemen, and that which Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion" (I Kings 9:17-19). Further reference to this mass of building work, including "store cities, which he built in Hamath", is to be found in II Chronicles 8:4-6. From these biblical accounts we can conclude that Solomon built:

- garrisons and fortifications;
- the Millo;

- a royal palace; and
- a temple.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Egyptian records indicated that Amenhotep III did considerable reconstruction work on these same cities of Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer which the Bible records were reconstructed by King Solomon?

We have archaeological evidence in the case of only three of the places listed - Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer. All were among the western Asiatic cities conquered by Tuthmose III in the middle of the 15th century B.C.E. This has been confirmed by archaeological digging, which has produced evidence of each city's destruction in the right strata for this period. In addition, in all three cases evidence has been found of large-scale reconstruction work half a century later during the reign of Amenhotep III. New royal palaces, temples, ordinary houses and fortifying walls were established just as the Bible records was also done by King Solomon. In each case a local ruler was appointed, paying tribute to Pharaoh and enjoying the support of an Egyptian garrison.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in the very areas where the Bible says King Solomon ruled that we have found Egyptian objects, including a cartouche of Amenhotep III, which was found in the strata belonging to this period in various cities in Palestine? Is this another coincidence or is this just more evidence that Amenhotep III is the Biblical Solomon?

Now this next "tid-bit" is very interesting. One of the major building achievements attributed to Solomon was the new royal house, reputed to have taken 13 years to complete. This great palace is said to have been constructed to the north of the ancient city of Jerusalem and south of the temple area.

Answer for yourself: Is there a problem with this? Yes simply we cannot find any evidence of this structure ever having been built north of the ancient city of Jerusalem and south of the temple area.

The Bible, after mentioning this one time, makes no further biblical mention of it and many believe that it might have been constructed following King Solomon's death. Troubling is the fact that although Jerusalem has been extensively excavated there are no remains of such a palace that can be found to this day.

Answer for yourself: Can this temple of King Solomon (Amenhotep III) be found in Egypt? It sure can. When we compare the biblical description of Solomon's royal palace with the great palace of Amenhotep III at Thebes, it becomes clear that they are both the same temple and that the temple in Thebes is the very same royal residence described by the biblical narrator.

From the account in I Kings 7:2-12 we can see that Solomon's palace consisted of five elements

- the king's palace;
- the house of Pharaoh's daughter, "whom he had taken to wife";
- the throne room;
- a hall of columns; and
- the house of the forest of Lebanon.

The foundations were of costly stones while pillars of Lebanon cedarwood supported the roofs.

Up to the time of Amenhotep Ill, although Thebes was the religious and administrative capital of Egypt, the main royal residence was at Memphis, on the west bank of the Nile a few miles to the south of the Great Pyramid of Giza. With the vast wealth of his empire at his disposal and no wars to fight, Amenhotep III embarked on the construction of a great royal complex at Thebes. His own palace was ready in the 8th year of his reign (1398 B.C.E.), but the whole complex was not completed until towards the end of his third decade (1375 B.C.E.). The area of the palace was excavated between 1910 and 1920 by the Egyptian Expedition of the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York. From the result of these excavations we can see that, although they form part of a much larger complex, the five elements ascribed to Solomon's palace are to be found in Amenhotep III's palace at Thebes.

Answer for yourself: Are the above similarities just coincidences?

Amenhotep III is known to have built many temples, both in Egypt and in Canaan. He began his building program in the second year of his reign. The sites of his temples for different deities (neteroo), including himself, were at Hermopolis, opposite Amarna (the new capital that would be founded by his son, Akhenaten), two temples at Karnak to the north of Thebes, the great Luxor temple in Thebes itself, three temples in Nubia, his mortuary temple north of his palace complex in western Thebes, and temples in almost all the Canaanite cities that had Egyptian garrisons.

According to the Bible, much precious material was used in the construction of Solomon's temple. This is equally true of the mortuary temple that Amenhotep III built at western Thebes. The king himself has given a description of it on the other side of the stele known as the Israel Stele, which came from this temple and was used later by Merenptah, the fourth king of the 19th Dynasty, to give an account of the Libyan war in the 5th year of his reign.

On the subject of the riches used by Amenhotep III in his construction of temples, Donald B. Redford of Toronto University says in his book Akhenaten the Heretic King: "The recorded figures of metals and precious stones that went into the Montu temple (one of the Karnak temples) is quite staggering: 3.25 tons of electrum (alloy of gold and silver), 2.5 tons of gold, 924 tons of copper, 1,250 pounds of lapis lazuli, 215 pounds of turquoise, 1.5 tons of bronze and over 10 tons of beaten copper. Such was the return on Egypt's investment in an empire!"

It is time to draw all our puzzle pieces together for a summary statement. We have seen the evidence from both historical and archaeological sources describing various buildings during the reign of Amenhotep III that matches the buildings attributed to Solomon, who ruled four centuries earlier than the present composition of the Old Testament would have us believe. Now we can see why, despite diligent efforts by biblical scholars, historians and archaeologists, no single piece of evidence has been found in Palestine to support what has become known as the period in the 10th century B.C.E. of the United Monarchy of David and Solomon. It simply cannot be found in the historical record of this planet in the 10th century B.C.E. but it surely can be found under different names in the 15th century in Egypt. The absence of such evidence does not mean that they are not historical characters, but that scholars have been confused by the nature of the biblical account and have been seeking their evidence in the wrong century and the wrong nation.

The 18th Dynasty was the golden age for Egypt. Sleeping in the background was a hidden secret of major proportions; namely that through the "seed of the promise" given to Sarah and Abraham would come one to rule on the throne of Egypt and inherit the land from the Nile to the Euphrates. We have traced this "seed" from Isaac through Jacob and through Joseph and his daughter, wife of Amenhotep III, to the very throne in their child Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses).

Along the way we have seen how in this article that Amenhotep III, known in ancient times as the "King of Kings" and "Ruler of Ruler's," was a Pharaoh of Egypt's glorious 18th Dynasty (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 35). He, just like King Solomon, inherited a vast empire whose influence extended quite literally from the Nile to the Euphrates (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 202). In contrast to the empire of Solomon, the empire of Amenhotep is indisputable (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43). The buildings, monuments, documents, art, and numerous other vestiges of his reign are ubiquitous and unparalleled (with the possible exception being those left by the 19th Dynasty Pharaoh, Ramses II).

We have seen how the cities of Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer have now been extensively excavated and see that a stratum containing large palaces, temples and strong fortifications was found in each of these cities. We have seen also that the name of Solomon was not found, but the cartouche of the 18th Dynasty Pharaoh Amenhotep

III was located instead (Ahmed Osman, House of the Messiah, p.212). We also mentioned how that in Jerusalem it has not been possible to excavate the temple mount yet extensive excavations in the city, including the areas adjacent to the temple mount have not revealed the existence of a Solomaic palace complex (Osman, House of the Messiah, 216). Also we made mention of the excavation of the Millo and how it has revealed (due to pottery found in the Millo) that its original construction was also contemporary with the Egyptian 18th Dynasty of Amenhotep III (A. Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 200-201, 213; Rohl, Pharaohs and Kings, 181.) To be consistent with the pattern of other great Bronze and Iron Age cultures in the ancient Near East (Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, and Hittite), it would be expected that numerous documents, art, and inscriptions on buildings or public monuments would have been left by such a great king as King Solomon or by his descendants later in honor of him yet no article of any kind bearing his name has ever been found (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 304, 309). The entire reign of Amenhotep III was devoted to monumental construction throughout Egypt, Canaan, and Syria (Aldred, Akhenaten, 147). We saw that both King Solomon and Amenhotep III were master builders. In addition to the ancient world's most glorious temple at Luxor, Amenhotep built many other temples of similar design throughout Egypt and in the rest of his empire, including the Canaanite garrison cities of Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer, Lachish and Beth-shean. Let us not forget the temple in Jerusalem as well. According to Egyptian records, Amenhotep's father Thutmose IV and grandfather Amenhotep II deported over 80,000 Canaanites. The Canaanite inhabitants of Gezer were specifically included in this deportation. It was during Amenhotep III's reign that Gezer and other major Palestine cities were refortified as royal Egyptian garrisons, and endowed with fine temples and palaces. The Bible states that in Solomon's day, the Pharaoh of Egypt captured the Canaanite city of Gezer and presented it to his daughter as a dowry upon her marriage to Solomon (1 Kings 9:16-17). The network of Egyptian 18th Dynasty garrison cities also included Jerusalem. If construction by Amenhotep III at Gezer, Hazor, Megiddo and other garrison cities is any indication, then a magnificent temple undoubtedly was also built by Amenhotep III on Jerusalem's venerated Temple Mount (A. Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 218; Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 270.) Let us not forget that Jerusalem had been "holy" for Egypt since Tuthmose III took the Ark of Amun-Ra and put in on Mount Moriah. Thus the need for a Temple on that spot. The structure adjacent to Jerusalem's Temple Mount, known traditionally as "Solomon's stables," is consistent with the architecture of Amenhotep's garrison cities (Osman, House of the Messiah, 218.) Archaeology has also confirmed that chariots were kept in these cities during his reign in groups of between thirty to one hundred and fifty each (Ibid., p. 207).

The ancient mining operations at Timna in the Negev desert, known as "Solomon's mines," "are earlier than Solomon by some three hundred years [in the conventional chronology]," dating once again to the time of Amenhotep III (Mazar,Archaeology of the Land of the Bible, p. 397). Copper from Timna, gold from the Sudan, other precious metals, jewels and high quality stone were used in great abundance in Amenhotep's temples, just as they were in Solomon's.

The Biblical Solomon's greatest satisfaction is said to have been the challenge of completing grand projects (Ecclesiastes 2:4-11). The same was said of Amenhotep III. A royal Egyptian text of the period reads, "Lo, His Majesty's heart was satisfied with making very great monuments, the like of which had never come into being since the primeval age of the Two Lands" (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43. Quoted from Leipzig, Urkunden des Agyptishcen Altertums, IV, 1648). Only an enormously wealthy king of a long established empire could have built so splendidly and in so many widely distributed locations in the ancient world. Amenhotep III was arguably the ancient world's wealthiest king. The completion of such magnificent projects required management of a considerable and constant source of labor and revenue extending over a period of many decades.

The administration and taxation system of Amenhotep with its 12 districts is identical to that of Solomon as described in the Bible [1 Kings 4:2-7,27; 5:13; 9:23] (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 210). Amenhotep also dedicated himself to rediscovering the wisdom, mysteries and traditions of earlier Egyptian Dynasties (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 151, 162, 164; Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 52.) A strong relationship has been established between the "Proverbs of Solomon" in the Bible and the "Maxims of Amenhotep III" found in Egypt (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 222, quoting from Bright, A History of Israel, p. 199.)

In addition to the projects already mentioned, Amenhotep also built a completely new palace complex in Thebes. The new royal residence included all of the elements contained in the palace complex of Solomon which are described in the Bible (1 Kings 7:2-12) (Osman, House of the Messiah, 214).

Amenhotep, like Solomon, was relentless in his pursuit of women for his harem, especially beautiful foreign women of both royal and common backgrounds alike (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, 37). Amenhotep's harem included two princesses from Babylon, two princesses from Syria, two princesses from Mitanni, and like Solomon's harem, it included a princess from each of the seven nations listed in 1 Kings 11:1 (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 204). As the mightiest king of the Middle East, Amenhotep did not send any of his own daughters to other kings in exchange, nor did any other Pharaoh of this dynasty (or likely any other throughout Egypt's history). He specifically denied a request by the king of Babylon for an Egyptian wife. Importantly, the Bible emphasizes Solomon's Egyptian bride, but does not mention that Solomon had any Hebrew wives.

The court of Amenhotep III was an extremely liberal one, and reflected every possible excess of an affluent and secure kingdom. Eroticism in art and court life reached its height during the reign of Amenhotep. The famous "nude dancing girls" mural dates to Amenhotep's reign. As with Solomon, Amenhotep denied himself nothing "his eyes desired" and "refused his heart no pleasure" (Ecclesiastes 2:10). However, the last years of Amenhotep's thirty-eight year reign were not pleasant ones. The long years of indulgence had taken their toll and he had many ailments. As a compassionate gesture, his Mitanni brother-in-law sent him an idol of the goddess Ishtar (i.e., Asherah) (1 Kings 11:5).

The "inescapable conclusion" is that the story of Solomon was patterned specifically after the life of Amenhotep III (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 223) .The name Solomon itself, which literally means "peace" or "safety" points to Amenhotep III whose long and pervasive reign in the 14th Century B.C. did not include any major military campaigns, but was characterized by unprecedented stability throughout the Near East (Ibid. p. 202). After the Egyptian 18th Dynasty, the region between the two great rivers was not controlled by a single power again until the Assyrian empire of Ashurbanipal (the grandson of Sennacherib) who invaded Egypt and pillaged Thebes in the 7th Century B.C., and the 6th Century B.C. empire of Cyrus, who also conquered Egypt and made it a Persian province (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 364; Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 88.) There is no evidence of any empire at any time controlling this region whose capital was Jerusalem (Ibid.).

Solomon is said to have had "a thousand and four hundred" chariots (1 Kings 1:26). This represents a prodigious army by ancient standards, and one which could only have been amassed over a long period of time by an established civilization. Yet we are told that only five years after the great King Solomon's death, the Egyptian Pharaoh Shishak and his allies invaded Judah and captured its fortified cities with little or no military resistance (2 Chron. 12). The Bible adds that Jerusalem itself was spared only after delivering up the entirety of King Solomon's accumulated wealth to Shishak. The rapidness with which Solomon's empire was established, as described by the Bible, and the ease with which it shortly thereafter submitted to a foreign power is also not consistent with the pattern set by other great ancient civilizations.

Well there you have it. The evidence has been presented. The identities of Amenhotep III and King Solomon have been contrasted and the puzzle pieces sorted out and compared and to any "thinking believer" it should be obvious that the depiction of King Solomon is but a cover for Amenhotep III. Let us not forget that the "seed" of the promise to Sarah and Abraham has returned to Egypt through Joseph and with Divine providence we have Joseph marrying Tuya, the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis, and from their union we get Tiye, his daughter, who marries Amenhotep III (1405-1367 B.C.E.) who had earlier married Sitamum, his sister, in order to inherit the throne, as was Egyptian custom. It is here the "Hebrew bloodline" renters Egyptian royalty with the offspring of Amenhotep III and Tiye (daughter of Joseph) and the promise to Sarah and Abraham is almost fulfilled for in the child of Amenhotep III, the Biblical Moses, Amenhotep IV, otherwise known as the Biblical Moses, will Egypt experience a religious revolution that will impact the whole world. But it is such a world that this Moses, half-blooded heir to the throne of Egypt, will be thrown and we pick up the story next with the "seed of the promise"; none other than Akhenaten.

WHAT LAYS BEHIND THE TRADITIONAL STORY OF MOSES IN THE BIBLE?

You are in for the surprise of your life when you find out the real facts behind the "Moses Story" that we have heard our whole lives growing up in church. Whether we approach the "Moses Story" from the perspective of Judaism or Christianity it is the same but when we look at what modern archeology has to say about it then these "traditional" stories surrounding the Moses of the Bible are "highly suspect" and have all the characterstics of typical "Biblical redaction". I know most of us want to believe that the Jewish Tanakh is without error but that sadly is simply not the case as any careful and intensive scrutiny of the Jewish Bible will reveal but at the same time I want to caution the reader to not lose sight of the great divine and spiritual truths that are in this wonderful book that is filled with "Divine Truths". There is nothing like the Hebrew Torah and its authority expressed in the Laws and Commandments of this Divine Creator is unsurpased in wisdomI and knowledge so necessary for the proper moral and spiritual development of mankind. With that in mind my desire is only to "clarify" some things that are at best ambiguious which we find in this spiritual book that surround key "characters" and their "identities".

The average reader of the Old Testament is not aware that the story of the birth of Moses in Exodus is full of historical inconsistencies and is plagued by a muddled chronology that make disciphering the truth behind these "Moses Stories" quite difficult. This "muddled Biblical chronology" in the the Pentateuch is responsible for not being able find or accurately date the Exodus in world history. The annals of Rameses II (1304-1237 BC) specify that Semitic people were settled in the land of Goshen. It is further explained that they went there from Canaan for want of food.

Answer for yourself: Why would Rameses' scribes mention this settlement at Goshen? According to standard Bible chronology the Hebrews went to Egypt supposedly some three centuries or more before the time of Rameses, and made their Exodus in about 1491 BC, long before he came to the throne. So, by virtue of this first-hand scribal record, the standard Bible chronology as generally promotes is seen to be incorrect. Thanks to many scholars like M. Gadalla and Ahmed Osman who through their thorough research and wide knowledge of the relevant languages of both Hebrew and the Egyptian language help us today to makes sense of what we are reading in the Old Testament like never before.It seems that the benefits of archeology are making its impact in "cracking the egg" so-to-speak concerning the real truth behind these "Moses Stories" as it has with the later "Jesus Stories".

First let us refresh ourselves with the "traditional Moses Story" since we more than likely have all have heard the "traditional Moses Story" at one time or another in our lives. Let me set the stage for where we are going to go in this article. The story in Exodus goes that, to avoid the pharaoh's order to have all Hebrew boy-infants killed, the mother puts him afloat in a basket in the Nile. Here he is found by the pharaoh's daughter, who takes pity on him, adopts him and has him nursed by a Hebrew woman who is actually his real mother. He grows up in the palace, but when he sees an Egyptian beating a Hebrew and kills him, he has to flee the country to Midian. Here he marries Zipporah, daughter of Jethro, and takes care of Jethro's herds, until a voice from a burning bush, calling itself "The I am that I am", tells him to go back and bring the Hebrews out of Egypt to the land he will promise them. Moses goes to Egypt, and the story is that one of the miracles he employs to convince the pharaoh of his mission is to cast his staff onto the ground whereupon it turns into a snake. It still takes a series of seven plagues, however, before they are allowed to leave, and even then, they are pursued until the parted Red Sea is released to drown the Egyptians in their chariots. There follow the forty years in the wilderness, the manna, the golden calf, the giving of the Ten Commandments, etc. until Moses hands over his mission to Joshua, Son of Nun, who leads them into the Promised Land of Canaan. But as I have found there is a lot more to this story than "meets the eye".

BUT IS THIS THE WHOLE STORY?

Answer for yourself: What lays behind this story when we consult the Egyptian record? Get ready!

Highlighted above is the word "daughter" which is a very important word in the Hebrew text because the Hebrew word for "daughter" was indistinguishable, except by context, from the polite word for "wife". What we actually have here is the fact that it was actually Pharaoh's wife and not the Pharaoh's daugher who not only found him but was really his mother. Even that version of the story is put in question by another overlooked fact of history as we will see.

Answer for yourself: What is special about "setting a child afloat in a basket"? Well this same senario has been told about many great men of history like Sargon and others. There is hidden "gnosis" in such a rendering attributed to history's great men. The terminology of being "set afloat in a basked on the water" was in Ancient times understood as an allegorical image of initiation into the "Secret Mysteries" or the "Inner Mysteries" of which in this instance Egypt was so well known for and was the very basis of their religious undestanding of God.

The birth of Moses of Levite (priestly) parents, Pharaoh's threat to his life, his concealment and rescue from the river, differs only in setting from the story of the infant Krishna who escaped King Kansa's order that all male babies be slain, by having been hidden and carried by stealth across the river Junma. Or, from the Greek myth in which Zeus evaded his father Cronus' attempt to swallow him as he had his other children lest one grow up to supplant him. Or, of Jesus' narrow escape from Herod's merciless slaughter of the children of Bethlehem. The "mythos" is intact whether spoken of Krishna, Moses, Zeus, or Jesus. The reader needs to understand that behind such religious stories that line the pages of various "sacred books" around the world is a "pattern" adapted and modifed over centuries as applied to the "spiritual leaders" of many nations at various times in world history. These obvious similarities, while giving doubt to the veracity of any one particular incident, give increased importance to each as a symbolic type-story. Thus it makes little difference whether we accept them as the Word of God or as legend composed by the wise of their time as they attempted to relate to the masses a new presentation of truth for each era. Thus we find accordingly that the baby Moses was three months old, according to biblical story, and that he was placed in a basket of bulrushes upon the river's edge, rescued by an Egyptian princess, nursed by his natural mother, raised as a prince and trained in the temple mysteries. As stated such "patterns" closely parallels the stories of Romulus, Bacchus, Osiris, and that of Sargon who, preceding Moses by two thousand years, are seen today to have laid the foundations of civilization for the first Semitic empire. All these saviors were taken from the water or came out from the "water: " . . . she called his name Moses: and she said, because I drew him out of the water." Water is one of our oldest symbols. The water-wave glyph [illustration] is found in every land, representing the Great Deep, Chaos, Wisdom, and also Universal Mother: Mary, mother of Jesus, Maya, mother of Buddha, etc. In baptism ceremonies, whether along the banks of the Nile, the Ganges, Euphrates, or Jordan rivers, at the seashore, or within church or temple, water signifies purification, dedication and the commencement of a new way of life which is "symbolic" for each "initiate" into a higher spiritual life and represented a new way for man to follow in his spiritual evolution.

Elsewhere on this website I have many mentions concerning the fact that the Biblical Moses is the son of Amehotep III who is better known as the Biblical Solomon. On other articles I have even gone so far to show the very important link to the Hebrew people and the later Hebrew Pharoahs from Amenhotep III's marriage to Tiye, the daugher of Yuya, the Biblical Joseph and the daugher of the Heiolopian Priest. Of importance in this article is that the child Pharaoh from the marriage of Amenhotep III and Joseph's daugher Tiye is the very important Akhenaten of history better known as the Biblical Moses.

In consulting both the Hebrew Bible and Egyptian records we find that this child named Akhenaten from Amenhotep III and Tiye is not a full-blooded Egyptian and is not the son of the royal heiress since Tiye is from the marriage of the Hebrew Joseph and an Egyptian woman whose father was the Priest of Heilopolis (the House of the Sun). Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, was part Hebrew and is our first Hebrew Pharaoh. Amenhotep III, Akhenaten's father, will also marry Sitamun in order to solidify his claim to the throne but his favorite wife was Tiye and this gave preference to the child of this union which just happens to be the Biblical Moses (Akhenaten). Because of these events you can easily see how this Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), however, who is not a full blooded Egytpian posed a threat to the 18th Dynasty and would arouse the ire of other Priesthoods in Egypt and especially at Thebes. Following his marriage to Nerfertiti, Amenhotep III decided to make Akenaten his co-regent, which upset the priests of Amun. The conflict between Amhenhotep and the priests had started sixteen years earlier, as a result of his marriage to Tiye, daughter of Yuya and Tuya. This climate of hostility that surrounded Akhenaten at the time of his birth surfaced again after his appointment as co-regent. The Amun priesthood opposed this appointment, and openly challenged Amenhotep III's decision to appoint as co-regent a "half-Hebrew/half-Egyptian".

Akhenaten,the tenth king of the 18th Dynasty was perhaps the most controversial of all Egyptian Pharaohs because of his break with traditional religion. Some say that he was the most remarkable king to sit upon Egypt's throne. There can be little doubt that the new king was far more of a thinker and philosopher than his forebears. Akhenaten was traditionally raised by his parents, Amenhotep III and Queen Tiye (1382-1344 B.C.) by worshipping Amen. As a quick refresher when Pharoah Tuthmosis died, his son (the Biblical Solomon) married his sibling sister Sitamun (as was the Pharonic tradition) so that he could inherit the throne as Pharoah Amenhotep III. Shortly afterwards the Biblical Solomon, Amenhotep III, also married Tiye, daughter of the Chief Minister (Joseph/Yuya). It was decreed, however, that no son born to Tiye could inherit the throne. Because of the overall length of her father Joseph's governorship there was a general fear that the Israelites were gaining too much power in Egypt. So when Tiye became pregnant, the edict was given that her child should be killed at birth if a son. This provides all the intrigue you could want in seeing how this "half-breed" son will one day become Pharaoh of all Egypt; the Biblical Moses known as Akhenaten.

The boy, Amenhopte IV, the son of the Biblical Solomon, born around 1394 BC, was duly educated in the eastern delta country by the Egyptian priests of Ra. In his teenage years he went to live at Thebes. By that time, his mother had acquired more influence than the senior queen, Sitamun, who had never borne a son and heir to the Pharoah, only a daughter who was called Nefertiti.

Records indicate that at about 16 years of age, young Akhenaten (Moses) appears in Thebes and becomes co-regent with his father (Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon). His mother Tiye, in order to secure his claim to the throne, has him marry his half-sister, Nefertiti, daughter of Sitamun. As co-regent with Amenhotep III the young Moses begins to snub the priests of Amon-Ra and the other gods, and further arouses their hostility by building temples to Aten. When the Amun priests objected to his appointment, Akhenaten responded by building temples to his new God, Aten. He built three temples for Aten one at the back end of the Karnak complex and the other at Luxor near the Nile bank and the third at Memphis. Akhenaten snubbed the Aumn priests by not inviting them to any of the festivities in the early part of his co-regency and, in his fourth year when he celebrated his sed festival jubilee, he banned all deities but his own God (Aten) from the occasion. Twelve months later he made a further break with tradition by changing his name to Akhenaten in honour of his new deity. To the resentful Egyptian establishment Aten was seen as a challenger who would replace the powerful State god Amun and not come under his domination. In the tense climate that prevailed, Tiye arranged a compromise by persuading her son to leave Thebes and establish a new capital at Amarna in Middle Egypt, on the east bank of the Nile, some two hundred miles to the north of Thebes. Reacting further to that hostility, he starts building his own capital at Tell el-Amarna.

Answer for yourself: What was behind such conduct? Was it all about "race" or was some "theology" behind it as well?

While in Thebes this son of Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, could not accept the notion of Aten, an omnipresent God who had no image. Aten was thus an equivalent of the Hebrew "Adonai" (a title borrowed from the Phoenician and meaning 'Lord') in line with Israelite teachings. At that time Amenhotep IV (Hebrew equivalent of Amenhotep - 'Amun is pleased') changed his name to Akhen-aten (servant of Aten).

Akhenaten, however, preferred Aten oven the Thebes Priesthood understanding of God as Amun. For Akhenaten Aten was the sun god that was worshipped in earlier times which was symbolic for the Uncreated Intelligent Energy that animates all things and which is the basis of all thing that exist, both visible and invisible, and whom we call "God" today. Because of this stance to oppose the Priesthood of Thebes and adopt a different understanding of God, like his father Amenhotep III who also had recognized the growing power of the priesthood of Amun and had sought to curb it; Akhenaten was to take the matter a lot further by introducing a new monotheistic cult of sun-worship that was incarnate in the sun's disc, the Aten. All the "neteroo" were to be grouped as "the Aten". With this new and reolutionary understanding of the Creator he would change his name from Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten, meaning "He Who is of Service to Aten". He also renamed his queen to Nefer-Nefru-Aten, which is "Beautiful is the Beauty of Aten." When his father dies, Moses is 27 years old and now becomes sole ruler and Pharaoh of all of Egypt and at the same time he changes his name from Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten, and becomes more aggressive still, closing down the other temples and erasing the names of their gods (the neteroo). If you don't know what these "neteroo" are then stop right now and read the accompanying article before continuing for to fail to do this will ensure that you will arrive at the wrong conclusions from such studies that occupy us at present.

The idea of "the Aten" was not in itself a new idea: as a relatively minor aspect of the sun god Re-Harakhte, the Aten had been venerated in the Old Kingdom and a large scarab of Akhenaten's grandfather Tuthmosis IV (now in the British Museum) has a text that mentions the Aten. Rather, Akhenaten's innovation was to worship the Aten in its own right. Portrayed as a solar disc whose protective rays terminated in hands holding the ankh hieroglyph for life, the Aten was accessible only to Akhenaten, thereby obviating the need for an intermediate priesthood.

As you might suspect on many fronts he became unpopular - particularly with the priests of the former national deity Amun (or Amen) and of the sun god Ra (or Re). Plots against his life proliferated. Loud were the threats of armed insurrection if he did not allow the traditional gods to be worshipped alongside the faceless Aten. Following the death of his father, Amenhotep III, Akhenaten decided to abolish the worship of all gods in Egypt, except Aten. Akhenaten gave orders to his troops instructing them to close all the temples in Egypt, confiscate the estates, and sack the priests, leaving only Aten's temples throughout the country. Units were dispatched to excise the names of the ancient gods wherever they were found written or engraved, a course that can only have created mounting new opposition to his already rejected authority. This persecution, which entailed the closing of the temples, confiscating its property, the dispatch of artisans who entered everywhere to hack out the names of the deities from inscriptions, the banishment of the clergy, the excommunication of Amun's name, was supervised by the army. Each time a squad of workmen entered a temple or tomb to destroy the name of Amun, it was supported by a squad of soldiers who came to see that the royal decree was carried out without opposition. The loyalty of the army to Akhenaten was assured by the person of its commander Aye (the Biblical Ephraim), brother of the king's mother who held posts among the highest in the infantry and chariotry, posts held by Yuya (Joseph) his father. Such actions, as closing down the Amum temples and sending the Priesthoods home, was to eventually force him to abdicate in favour of his cousin Smenkhkare, who was to also be succeeded by Akhenaten's son Tutankhaten.

The persecution of the old gods, however, proved to be hateful to the majority of Egyptians, including members of the army. Ultimately the harshness of the persecution had a certain reaction upon the soldiers who, themselves, had been raised in the old beliefs, and rather than risk a wholesale defection and perhaps even a civil war. After all, the officers and soldiers themselves believed in the same gods whose images the king ordered them to destroy, they worshipped in the very temples which they were ordered to close. A conflict arose between the king and his army. Akhenaten's belief in one God, however, was too deep for him to allow any compromise with the priests. Horemheb, Pa-Ramses and Seti, planned a military coup against the king, and ordered their troops from the north and south to move towards Amarna. Aye, who received news of the troops' movements, brought his chariots to guard Amarna. When the army and chariots came face to face at Amarna's borders, Aye advised the king to abdicate the throne to his son Tutankhaten, in order to save the dynasty. Akhenaten agreed to abdicate and left Amarna with Pa-Nehesy, the high priest of Aten, and few of his followers to live in exile in area of Sarabit El-Khadem in southern Sinai.

Akhenaten, when his life is seriously threatened, responds to his mother's council and first flees to Goshen to live with his mother's Hebrew relatives who were living in Goshen at that time. We must take note of the fact that Moses grew up largely in the city of Zarw in Goshen where there is a temple and worship of Aten, in contrast to the worship of Amun-Ra, who at that time the dominant religion in Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Who else lived in Goshen? The Hebrews who were the family of Jacob that came to Egypt to buy food and found their lost son who had risen to the rank of Vizier to the Pharaoh.

Answer for yourself: What was the "god" worshiped in Goshen at this time? The Aten

Answer for yourself: Is there a connection between "the Aten" and the later worship of the Jewish God "YHWH"? You bet there is and we will get to this soon.

Akhenaten, meanwhile, was banished from Egypt. He would find it necessary to leave Goshen and flee to the remote safety of Sanai, taking with him his royal sceptre topped with a brass serpent and many of his loyal followers who were both Egyptians and Hebrews (the mixed multitude spoken of in the book of Exodus). To his supporters he remained very much the rightful monarch, the heir to the throne from which he had been ousted, and he was still regarded by them as the "Mose, Meses or Mosis (heir/born of)" - as in Tuthmosis (born of Tuth) and Rameses (fashioned of Ra).

Evidence from Egypt indicates that Moses (Akhenaten led his people from Pi-Rameses (near modern Kantra) southward, through Sanai, towards Lake Timash. This was extremely marshy territory and, although manageable on foot with some difficulty, any pursuing horses and chariots would have foundered disastrously. Among those who fled with Moses were the sons and families of Jacob (Israel). Then at the instigation of their leader, they constructed the tabernacle at the foot of Mount Sanai. Even Manetho, and Egyptian Priest (c. 300 BC) who wrote a valuable history of Egypt claims that the founder of monotheism, whom he called Osarsiph, assumed the name Moses and led his followers out of Egypt in the time of Akhenaten's reign. Afterwards, other writers such as Lysimachus, Tacitus and Strabo also alluded to this association between Akhenaten and Moses. In the modern era, Sigmund Freud (an active collector of Egyptian artifacts) also proposed this theory in an influential study of Moses and monotheism, and today there is no small number of web sites that likewise continue this argument.

To appease his enemies before he fled Egypt, Egyptian history records for us that Akhenaten had already appointed Semenkhkare as co-regent. This does not suffice, however, and in 1361 B.C.E. at 33, in order to avert a civil and religious war, he is forced to abdicate and flee the country. Akhenaten goes to the wilderness of Sinai, but Semenkhkare is soon killed, and the throne passes to Akhenaten's son, Tutankhaten.

We now better understand why Akhenaten is frequently referred to as the heretic king because on his attemp to revolutionize Egyptian religion, at least for a brief period, and in so doing created a system that was as close as ancient Egypt would ever come to monotheism with his worship of the Sun Disk called the Aten. Strict monotheism is first demanded of the Israelites in connection with Moses and the Israelite Exodus from Egypt, and therefore, writers throughout the ages have made the association between Akhenaten and Moses.

However, the Old Testament offers no evidence of a relationship between Moses and Akhenaten, and in fact there has never been any direct evidence of Moses discovered in Egypt. It is even questionable whether the Old Testament authors could have even known about him at all. Because of Akhenaten's revolutionary religious ideas, his successors largely eliminated his memory by hammering and hacking his name and the record of his reign from monuments throughout Egypt. Furthermore, as we have seen Akhenaten's religion was, at least to some extent, the culmination of a path established by earlier pharaohs who knew God as "the Aten". But perhaps even more importantly, it should be noted that, according to the Bible, only after leaving Egypt were the Israelites given the laws of god which required that their Lord be worshipped exclusively. In fact, prior to receiving the Ten Commandments, the Israelites worshipped more than one god or manifestations of the Creator; better understood now as various "neteroo" which comprised the "Many in the One". Akhenaten will be responsible for changing all that for these Hebrews and all of his followers.

Tutankhaten tries to make peace with both sides and this will eventually lead to his murder. We find in such "ecumenical" attemps at reconciliation between the two parties (the Amen-Ra priesthood and the Atenists led by his father) he manages at first to reconcile with the Amon-Ra priesthood, even changing his name from "Tutankh-aten" to the one we better know him by today; namely "Tutankh-amun" and in so doing he established his official residence at Thebes. In spite of these actions on his part Tutankhamun seems to have retained something of his Aten faith.

Answer for yourself: How was this?

Tuthankhamun, in spite of concessions to the Amen-Ra priesthood at Thebes he continued to see God, the Aten, as the supreme god, and the others as lesser intermediaries. This is the typical belief we have seen in our study of the "neteru". The article on the "neteru" is very important and should be read by every reader before he goes on in this article. This concession on the part of Tuthankhamun is found to be too much for his supposed allies, the Atenists. At 19 years of age and only after 9 years rule, when he attempts to convert the Atenists to his all-inclusive view, and bring back his father from his self-imposed exile at Sinai, he is killed by the priest Panehesy when he ventures to Sinai in an effort at reconciliation.

Answer for yourself: Why is Panehesy so important? Simply because he is also known by the name Phineas, who had been a trusted follower of his father. More about Tutankhamun later.

Following his death Tutankhamun is succeeded by his great-uncle and protector Aye (the Biblical Ephraim), who also only survives for four years, until an army general named Horemheb takes the throne.

Answer for yourself: Why is this Egyptian army general who assumes command in Egypt so important? This is the "new king over Egypt which knew not Joseph" and has no regard for the four Amarna rulers, Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), Semenkhkare, Tutankhamun and Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) whom had all been descendants of the Hebrew Joseph (Yuya), whom, as we have seen is called in the book of Genesis the "father of Pharaoh". These are our Hebrew Pharaohs of whom we have sought in these articles.

Horemheb erased the names of the above "Hebrew Pharaohs" from almost if not all the Egyptian records which has confused archaeologists for a long time but at last finally discerned. Horemheb also bolished the worship of Aten, and made it a crime to mention Akhenaten's name. This could explain how the latter came to be called Moses, for, as we saw, "Mos" means "child" but it can also mean "rightful son and heir", making it a useful euphemism by which to refer to him.

Horemheb began to persecute the Atenists. He closed off the area around their city, Zarw, and he is responsible for the oppression remembered by the Hebrews since they were the followers of Akhenaten and the Aten. He appointed Pa-Ramses (later Ramses I) as overseer, who forced them to rebuild the city and a new residence for himself.

When Horemheb died, Pa-Ramses prepared to claim the throne. On hearing about Horemheb's death, Akhenaten decided to leave his exile in Sinai and come back to Egypt, in order to reclaim his throne. Since his abdication, he had been living in exile in southern Sinai, with few of his followers, for about twenty five years, during the reigns of Tutankhamun, Aye, and Horemheb.

Akhenaten arrived at Pa-Ramses' residence in the border city of Zarw, his birthplace that has turned to a prison for his followers in his absence when he flew to Sinai. General Pa-Ramses, by now an old man, was making arrangements for his coronation, and getting ready to become the first ruler of a new 19th Ramesside dynasty, when he was informed of Akhenaten's arrival to reclaim his rightful throne "Mos...righful heir". Akhenaten challenged Pa-Ramses' right to the throne. The general, taken by surprise, decided to call a meeting of the wise men of Egypt to decide between them. At the gathering Akhenaten produced his scepter of royal power, which he had taken with him to exile, and performed some secret rituals, which only the king had the knowledge of since privy to the "inner mysteriles" of the Egyptian religion which even some Priests had not been exposed. Once they saw the scepter of royal authority and Akhenaten's performance of the rituals, the wise men fell down in adoration in front of him, and declared him to be the legitimate king of Egypt ("Mos). Ramses, however, who was in control of the army, refused to accept the wise men's verdict and decided to establish his rule by force.

Mention is made above of Moses rod. It seems he used his rod of power, which he had used as Pharaoh and which was topped by a brass serpent, and according to the Koran's version, convinced many of the priests of his legitimacy by demonstrating secret rituals. It is an understatement to say that the Priesthoods and Pharaohs of Egypt were know to operate in the realm of the Metaphsical which we misunderstand today and call it "magic" and is considered "taboo" by Christianity. It seems to me that we have failed to "take dominion of the garden" as we should. Hence the story of Moses casting down his rod and it turning into a serpent is not an allegory. This is why the study of Egypt is so "mind-blowing" as we learn just how much mankind has lost concerning the Ancient knowledge possessed by these "spiritual giants". These types of studies helps the reader understand the Egpyptain understanding and incredible link between the God of the Cosmos and the Laws of Science and Physics.

More to the point when Pa-Ramses intervened with his military might and staged a kind of coup, Akhenaten (Moses) gathered his followers and fled in 1335 B.C.E., in what is more commonly called today "the Exodus", towards the Promised Land of Canaan which was Egyptian owned and controlled territory in that day. When Akhenaten realized that his life was threatened by Pa-Rames, he escaped from and with some of his followers during the night, and rejoined his allies in Sinai. However, he refused to accept defeat and decided to carry on challenging Pa-Ramses' right to rule Egypt. Akhenaten gathered his allies in Sinai, and decided to cross the borders of Egypt into Canaan, where he could establish his rule in foreign parts of the Egyptian empire, in order to prepare an army to allow him to return and challenge Ramses. When Ramses got knowledge of Akhenaten's plan, he decided to go out at the head of his army and crush the Bedouin power before they crossed the borders to Canaan. Pa-Ramese, however, died at this moment and was followed by his son Seti I.

Seti I left the body of his father for the priests to mummify, and went out to chase Akhenaten and his followers in northern Sinai. After setting out on the route between the fortified city of Zarw and Gaza the king scatters the followers of Akhenaten, who from time to time gather in sufficient numbers to meet him. A military confrontation took place in the very first days of Seti I's reign, on the route between Zarw and Gaza in Canaan. Just across the Egyptian border he arrived at the fortified town of Pe-Kanan, (Gaza), and stopped the followers of Akhenaten from entering it. It is recorded that Seti I met Akhenaten in a face to face battle on top of a mountain, and was able to damage his eye before he killed him and left his body unburied on the mount.

Answer for yourself: Is this account of the confrontation between Seti I and Akhenaten, which resulted in Akhenaten's death and "damage to his eye" part of new version of the Osiris-Horus myth where a confrontation took place between Horus and Set (note the word play between "Seti" and "Set" who also damanged the eye of Horus in a battle)? Although the myth says that Horus won the battle, it was Set (whose name became Satan in later times) who killed Horus.

Answer for yourself: Is this were we get the concept of Satan which has plagued man and relieved him from his moral responsibilities from God ever sence? Now you can understand why the study of Egyptian religion is so very important for it is there we find these familiar religious concepts both in Judaism and Christainity today.

Now I would ask the reader to take a deep breath and set down for what comes next.

Answer for yourself: Now let us think hard for a minute. Does this "parallel" between Satan and Seti help us understand why we find similar accounts, sayings, and events taken from Egyptian religious writings that seem to be identical to the many "sayings" of the Christ found in the "Jesus Stories" as well as the many "events" depicted in the life of the New Testament Jesus? This should give us cause to think. It would appear that a "pattern" or "typology" taken from Ancient Egptian religious writings has been "replayed" down through history as applied to many different "characters" finding its ultimate resting place with the Jesus of the New Testament. When one digs into such studies he finds as I did hidden in Egyptian religious writings taken from various rituals and the walls of Temples let alone the Egyptian Book of the Dead identical stories and sayings that parallel "identically" the same events and sayings that we find on the pages of our New Testaments which we are taught to believe are "historical truths" about a first century Rabbi itenerant precher and "would be Messiah" when these same "sayings" and "evens" can easily be found to be written as stated in the Egyptian Book of the Dead and its rituals thousands of years before a supposed historical "Jesus Christ"? In case anyone doubts such a saying I direct them to do their own studies in this very diffult and challenging area of study by beginning such a study with such works available today:

Ahmed Osman, 58-year-old teacher of Arabic and author of The House of the Messiah and Out of Egypt brings forth massive evidence in these books as well as others that he has written (along with many authors) that has forced him to concluded that there was no historical "Jesus Christ" as described in the New Testament. Seeing such identical similarites between what is carved on Temple walls in Egptian temples and Pyramids along with the volumes of religious writings uncovered in Egypt in the last 150 yrs provided comprehensive and definitive evidence for Osman and others that the real-life model for the "New Testament Jesus" as well as that the successor to Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses known as the "Biblical Joshua", is really the son of Moses better known as the Pharoah Tutankhamen. Echoing what other scholars today are saying after serious study into the "historical Jesus" we find Osman, according to the May 30, 1992*The Washington Post*, saying, that "There is not a shred of historical evidence that Jesus lived at the time he is supposed to have done, and I believe the writers of the Gospels adapted a historical figure into their own time." This same sentiment is echoed today by a host of modern scholars as well as many dating back to the 1800's; the only problem is that in a "fundamentalist Christian" upbrining as I and many others have had growing up in this traditional "Christian" land the chances of running into this information is not great unless you browse the religious sections of secular book stores like Barnes and Noble and Boarders which you can get "enlightened". Of course the internet will help but one has to "think outside the box" for that to happen.

Having looked at the Egyptian Moses it is time we move on to looking intently into just whom this Tutankhamun really was and if Osman's theory that Tuthakhamun was the "prototype" for all later "slain messiahs" which of course finds its "historical" culmination in the "Jesus Stories" of the New Testament. It is to these ideas and issues we move currently.

AKHENATEN AND MONOTHEISM

Most people are not aware of this fact but the concept of monotheism has deep roots in Western Civilization, reaching as far back in time as the New Kingdom of ancient Egypt, well before the formation of the ancient state of Israel. When you begin to study the Egyptian religion and begin to correctly understand the concept of the "neteroo" then you see quickly that contrary to how the Egyptian religion has been "described" and "painted" by many writers it truly was Monotheistic to the core. The most common knowledge about Ancient Egyptian divinities comes to us as a result of the "interpretation" by western academic Egyptologists of the Ancient Egyptian texts. Their "interpretations" are constrained by their western and Judaeo-Christian paradigms. As a result, they report a confused religious system with a great number of "so-called" gods. Academic Egyptologists, while worshipping everything Greek or Roman, totally ignore the eyewitness accounts of Herodotus, Plutarch, Plato, Diodorus, and other historians who reported about the Ancient Egyptian traditions, and who were much closer to the scene than the further removed western academic Egyptologists whose agenda is to find "links" to today's existing religions of Judaism and Christianity instead of recognizing that key religious foundations common to both existed thousands of years earlier in Egypt long before there were ever the birth of the "Jewish" people. That being the case then understand that the Ancient Egyptian word, "neter", and its feminine form "netert", have been WRONGLY, and possibly intentionally, translated to "god" and "goddess", by almost all academicians. "Neteru" (plural or neter/netert) are not "gods" or "goddesses" but the Divine Principles and Functions and Energies contained in the One Supreme Creator. There is a common simple description that explains all of this: "The All who are One".

The Ancient Egyptians believed in One God whom was self-produced, self-existent, immortal, invisible, eternal, omniscient, almighty, etc. This One God was REPRESENTED through the functions and attributes of "His" domain. These attributes were called the "neteru". The term "gods" and "goddesses" are a MISREPRESENTATION of the Egyptian term "neteru". When we ask, "Who is God?", we are really asking, "What is God?". The mere name of noun does not tell us anything. One can only define "God" through the multitude of "His" attributes, qualities, powers, actions. To know "God" is to know the numerous qualities of "God". The more we learn of these qualities (neteru), the closer we are getting to our Divine origin. Far from being a primitive, polytheistic form, this is the highest expression of monotheistic mysticism.

Knowing this then was a pharaoh named Akhenaten who imposed on his people a religious belief-system centering around a single deity which was in principle a "grouping" of all Neteru whom he called the Aten or sun-disk. This was his way of expressing the "All in the One". Famous also for his capital city Akhenaten (modern el-Amarna) and his strikingly beautiful wife Nefertiti, Akhenaten's revolution in religion was short-lived, and the extent of its influence even within Egypt is hard to gauge, though it seems slight. Ironically, however, though the lasting effects of Akhenaten's religious revolution might have been short lived in Egypt we find that his "Aten" worship inspired or in some way sparked the development of monotheism later among the ancient Israelites surrounding their God "YHWH".

We in the western world today tend to associate monotheism with our own traditions, as if it were originally the invention of our European ancestors. It wasn't. Cultures rooted in the Near East and its environs not only explored monotheistic thinking earlier and more fully but also today embrace the strictest form of monotheism to date, Islam. Historical data are clear that the conception of a universe created and guided by one deity alone is the product of Eastern ideologies exported to, not from, the West.

Answer for yourself: Does it not seem reasonable to understand more correctly this God we "inherited" from Eastern religions we should acquaint ourselves with what they taught about this "One God" and compare such understandings with ours to see how "identical" are our religious understandings of this same God and how if any our understanding of this "One God" has been altered and changed and find out why such changes were made?

Answer for yourself: Since most of our religious beliefs of both Judaism and Christianity can be shown to have originated and come from Egypt, like religious concepts of the Soul, Eternal Life, the Messiah, Resurrection of the Dead, Repentance, life after death, the Laws and Commandments of God, etc., then should we not look to the beginning of such religious concepts to see how these very important religious concepts were both believed and taught by those who first "received" them when compared to how we "received" them today?

Many today assume that the earliest historical evidence for monotheism is to be found among ancient Hebrew scriptures, the accounts of a people living in the Near East. Personal study on your part in the Egyptian religion by reading such authors as M. Gadalla and A. Osman, and others on our recommended book list, will prove to you that such an assumption is totally unwarranted. Not only did the Hebrews develop their monotheistic tenets slowly and over the course of several centuries, a fully developed form of monotheism emerged in Israel only after a lengthy period of evolution. In fact "monotheism" developed long before the Hebrews even existed as a people as the ancient Egyptians experimented with a form of single-deity worship. The guiding force behind this effort to "correct" Egyptian religious practice was Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) who both felt the abuses and excesses of the Thebes' Amun-Ra Priesthood needed to be stopped as well as the prevalent overemphasis on worship of one individual neteroo like Osiris which, it just so happened, had reached its zenith in the 18th Dynasty. In his opinion Egypt was beginning to lose is way from an implicit "monotheism" by an over emphasis in the worship of various individual "neteroo". Simply put he felt that this nation was losing its proper worship of the "One" which comprised the "All" by the overemphasis one these "parts" of the whole. Whether or not his theological experiment influenced or in any way stimulated the religion outlined in the Old Testament is a matter of debate by various scholars but I feel that it was instrumental in Israel later adopting a "monotheistic" religion centered in YHWH. What is clear, however from such a study, is the fact that the ancient Hebrews were not the only nor the first people to adopt the notion of a single cosmic entity that oversees everything. Egypt saw this and understood this as the "All who are the the One".

The unique and peculiar phase of Egyptian history he engineered is known today as the Amarna period. The modern Egyptian village of El-Amarna lies near the site that was once Akhenaten's capital city although the Amarna Period extends beyond his reign. It includes not only Akhenaten's regency but several of his successors': Semenkhare (1338-1336 B.C.E.) about whom next to nothing is known; Tutankhaten (later, Tutankhamun, 1336-1327 B.C.E.) whose current notoriety since the discovery of his tomb in the 1920's far outstrips the boy-king's fame in antiquity; and finally Ay (1327-1323 B.C.E.). By the time the next series of pharaohs held the throne, Horemheb (1323-1295 B.C.E.) and the Ramessids, a dynasty which included the famous Ramses II, Amarna had been abandoned and destroyed, along with the memory of Akhenaten's religion in the general conscience of the ancient Egyptian public. This deliberate attempt to eradicate all reference in the Egyptian record to the Amarna period by Horemheb and his successors was nearly successful, but not quite.

We do know about Akhenaten, in fact, probably quite a bit more than the ancient Egyptians did who lived even just a few generations after the monotheist's rule. In spite of the fact that there is virtually no reference in later Egyptian historical records to Akhenaten's existence, or his immediate successors archaeology has brought Amarna culture back to light with astounding clarity and depth and provides the information that you read in these articles.

To a large extent, our knowledge of Akhenaten's life and times begins in Akhetaten, the city he built for himself and his religion, not that the site is particularly well preserved. In fact, it isn't. Later rulers antagonistic to Amarna culture, the social and religious institutions Akhenaten imposed on Egypt, intentionally demolished the city of Akhetaten along with the records of his reign. Ironically, however, that program of destruction saved the city and its founder's name for posterity by reusing the thousands of "smaller" stones taken from its demolition in building projects throughout all other parts of Egypt which have been discovered today. The reason for this demolition and eradication of all traces of evidence to the existence of Akhenaten and his "reforms" stems from the enormous scope of change which Akhenaten attempted by his dramatic shift in religious, political and social traditions and that, of course, meant he had to have an entirely new, fully functioning capital from which he could run the country without the weight of tradition bearing down on him and holding him back.

Almost as soon as Akhenaten became the sole ruler of Egypt, he began to alter the traditional presentation of the pharaoh and the ways state business was conducted. For instance, he took on a new title, "Prophet of Ra-Horakhte" ("Ra of the Horizon").

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that there is no mention of "Amun" in his new title; Amun being the god of mysteries and hidden truth whose name appears in so many Egyptian appellations such as "Amun"-hotep and Tutankh-"amun". The title "Prophet of Ra-Horakhte" suggests dissatisfaction with conventional religion, especially since by Akhenaten's day Amun had long been seen as the central neteroo and deity in the Egyptian religion whose center of worship was Thebes, the capital city of Egypt. Akhenaten would change all that.

Several years into Akhenaten's reign, there is clearly a major shift in Egyptian religion under way. By now the pharaoh had moved away the court and capital from Thebes to the new city he names "Akhetaten" and adopted a new title, the name we know him by, Akhen-Aten meaning in Egyptian "he is agreeable (Akhen-) to the sun-disk (-Aten)." To have effectively removed Amun from his name seems like an all but open declaration of warfare against the dominant religious faction in the day, the Amun priesthood based in Thebes. And as if that weren't enough, archaeological evidence shows that around this time Akhenaten began closing down Amun temples across Egypt and even had the name Amun erased from inscriptions. Be not mistaken closing these temples means no money for the Priesthood and that always spells trouble when you take the money from the Pastor of his "church". Later, he went so far as to order the word "gods" removed and changed to "god," wherever it occurred on public inscriptions. Whether or not this is monotheism by theological standards, it's certainly is food for thought.

Answer for yourself: But what was Akhenaten's beef with Amun? Why did he dislike this god so intensely?

Opinions differ to which I alluded to one above but others scholars have suggested it was because Amun as the god of secrets was too obscure a deity, too inaccessible to the public. Indeed, shrines to Amun are invariably situated in the middle of temple complexes, roofed and dark, where priests alone may enter them and then only on special occasions. Many scholars believe Akhenaten wished to open up Egyptian religion to a wider clientele, not just the clergy, and so he constructed a capital which was the antithesis of Amun worship, exposed constantly to the full light of day, as the buildings of Akhetaten show: few roofed structures, little shade, and constant exposure to Akhenaten's true father as far as he was concerned, not Amenhotep III but the Aten.

But religion is not the only change attributed to Akhenaten. He was instrumental in creating a new expression of art and iconography in Egypt which of course as expected has "religious overtones". The religious iconography of Akhenaten's religion centers around the Aten as a divine presence. Representing the life-giving force and energy of the universe, the sun-disk is depicted in both abstract and personified forms, occasionally both at the same time. Akhenaten understood this God as the collective whole of many parts (the All who is One); a composite of all forces, energies, and powers of the Cosmos working together to not only create life and matter but sustaining it and recycling it when it "dies". Scientists teach us today that you never destroy energy; it only changes form and recycles itself in other manifestations (both visible and invisible). Though it's most often pictured as a mere circle with rays of light radiating downward, the Aten also appears sometimes with little hands appended onto the end of its solar beams which hold out to worshipers the Ankh, the Egyptian sign of life. In a few instances, the hands are even shoving the Ankh up their noses rather unceremoniously, a statement, no doubt, of the sun's "breath of life," its vital force.

But Akhenaten's religious movement entailed features far stranger than anything which had happened in the history of Egypt. In fact, it looked backwards less than forward in time, at least inasmuch as the new religion prefigured a very different conception of Godhead. As such, the Aten typically portrayed without human or animal form, in strong contrast to standard Egyptian practice of representing the various "neteroo". The goddess Isis, for instance, is frequently shown as part-woman, part-cow, and the face of her deceased husband Osiris is sometimes painted green to demonstrate that he represents the rebirth of vegetation in the spring. But unlike either of them, Akhenaten's Aten is the First Cause of all being, which means by nature this Cosmic Energy God which take upon Himself all forms cannot be restricted in form, and is thus almost always presented as the aptly universal and geometric solar circle. The little hands attached to his sun-rays were a concession, no doubt, to popular taste.

Even to say "he" of the Aten is perhaps too restrictive for this universalist conception of deity. When considering the Aten gender is clearly not relevant to this idea of the sun-disk and stranger yet, to say "he" of Akhenaten himself isn't always valid either. This Cosmic Energy which is inherent in everything, both visible and invisible, is the totality of all negative and positive forces that exist and is contained in both male and female representatives of "life". Thus traditional male-female styles in Egyptian art blended together in peculiar fashion throughout Amarna culture, extending as far as royal portraiture of Akhenaten, his wife Nefertiti, and children. Akhenaten, for instance, is shown in a series of colossi (large statues; singular, colossus) lacking male genitalia, and in general, his depiction is odd, to say the least. He's often portrayed as pot-bellied, slouching, thick-lipped, with a big chin and pointed head, which has led scholars to suppose he suffered from some sort of birth defect, resulting in eunuchidism.

Answer for yourself: If these "assumptions" of scholars be correct then how did he sire a family, for in art he appears with as many as six different daughters? And those are only the ones he had by his principal wife.

That raises another fascinating and enigmatic issue concerning Akhenaten's revolution, the centrality of his family in the public presentation of his regime. Not only do we have many depictions of the beautiful Nefertiti, Akhenaten's principal wife-more, in fact, than of Akhenaten himself, but we can trace the royal daughters' births year by year, and sadly sometimes their deaths, too. Reliefs even show the royal couple playing with the girls. Like no pharaoh before or after him, Akhenaten was family-oriented. He celebrated all facets of life that this Invisible Creative Energy of the Cosmos

Thus, it seems unlikely he was actually unsexed or a hermaphrodite, certainly not a eunuch, but the real father of the children he professes, at least through his art, to adore so fondly. But the gender-bending portraits of him seem ill-suited for such a family man, by modern standards no doubt. And Nefertiti's depictions are not immune to cross-gendering, either. She's shown at least once wearing the blue crown, the helmet kings don as they go into battle. She's the only Egyptian queen ever known to have been depicted that way, including Queen Hatshepsut, the woman who ruled Egypt singlehandedly for two decades a century before. Be that as it may there is no doubt that there is something very odd, by any standard, about the way the Amarna rulers are portrayed.

Moreover, the entire family is depicted with elongated faces and skulls, wide hips and sagging bellies. The tall hat Nefertiti wears in her famous bust is probably covering-perhaps even accentuating-her pointed head, even though surely she was not congenitally deformed, certainly not sexless. Nor were the girls, which is all the more evidence Akhenaten was not, either. Naturalistic portraiture seems a less likely explanation of the oddities inherent in this family than some sort of stylized rendering. There's certainly something abnormal about them but arriving at the answer in my opinion has escaped the majority of scholars who comment on these physical features which are not just limited to Akhenaten but cover his entire family. That the royal family constitutes the only people ever portrayed this way is surely a clue. To depict Akhenaten's entire immediate family, and only them, in such an unusual manner must signify something. Many scholars believe that their different look is meant to highlight exactly that, the fact they're different.

All this concurs well with Akhenaten's religion, where the pharaoh serves as the conduit between humanity and the Aten. It's through and because of him the sun-disk bestows life on the planet. In his own words, a hymn Akhenaten himself apparently composed about the Aten, "There is no other who knows you except your son, Akhenaten." That makes the pharaoh and his family some sort of deific beings, blessed entities on whose good will the benefits of the sun, and thus all life, depend. This was a new concept. Before this, the Egyptians had always held the sun as a representative of the Energy of the Cosmos whom was understood to be the Intelligent Orderer and Creator of all things, both invisible and visible as well as believing that the royal family was always divine ("godly"), but never was the royal family seen to be the ONLY divine presence in the Universe. That, indeed, was something very different.

Taking all this into consideration the bottom line is that the pre-eminent issue surrounding Akhenaten is whether or not his religion did, or even could have, influenced the development of Hebrew monotheism, a theology which the historical data suggest evolved several centuries later. The answer to that question depends on several factors.

Answer for yourself: How alike are Hebrew and Egyptian monotheism? And is there any way in which the Hebrews could realistically have had significant contact with Atenism, enough to borrow elements from it, or even just have been influenced by it?

To answer the first, Hebrew monotheism differs in several significant ways from Akhenaten's religion. While the Aten is an omnipotent divinity, it's also present specifically in the light of the sun-disk and the pharaoh's family, so its divinity is limited in a way the Hebrew deity's is not. The God of Israel acts through all sorts of different media: the energy of the Heavens and of Mother Nature. Nor was there any real attempt by Egyptian monotheists to extend the Aten's power beyond Egypt, the way God's power is seen by later Hebrew prophets to embrace all creation. So, while Akhenaten claims the Aten is universal, he speaks of it more like its the Pharaoh himself which is both the representative and embodiment of this Creative Energy.

Still, both cultures share the central notion, if not the details, of monotheism.

Answer for yourself: Could the Hebrews have picked up monotheism from the Egyptians somehow? Such a notion presumes, of course, that Hebrews existed in some form during Akhenaten's reign. The eradication by later pharaohs of all records of Akhenaten's religion and regime makes proving the existence of the Hebrews in Egypt more tenuous. Many scholars would flatly say there weren't any Hebrews at all during the time of Akhenaten, at least not Hebrews as such. Israel was definitely not an organized nation in the fourteenth century B.C.E., but then theological notions do not require a political state for their existence. Wandering patriarchs, as attested in the Bible during this age, could easily have borrowed the concept of monotheism from Egypt. But since there's no evidence Egyptian monotheism spread beyond the borders of its native land, if Hebrews borrowed the notion, they would have to have been living in Egypt around the time of Akhenaten's reign. Coming to the aid of such a hope is the Biblical sources which say they were contemporary with Akhenaten as well as Manetho, an Egyptian scribe who was an author and an Egyptian priest who was offered the patronage of the Ptolemaic court, the result of which was an orderly account, written in Greek, of the history of the Egyptian Pharaohs, which is still the basis of our conventional numbering of the dynasties today.

In the so-called Egyptian Captivity which the Bible claims lasted both 4 generations and 400 years (which is a problem of sorts) the Hebrews did, in fact, live in Egypt, and were later enslaved by powerful New Kingdom pharaohs for being "shepherds" (see http://jesusastrotheology.netfirms.com) and followers of Akhenaten and the Aten until the Exodus in which Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses led them to freedom in the Holy Lands. If that really happened as the Bible and attests and as Egyptian records tell us, then these Hebrews must have been in Egypt when Akhenaten had his brief day in the sun. Still, it doesn't take huge crowds of Hebrews in Egypt to introduce the idea of monotheism into Israelite thinking. One "Joseph" is enough. So, it's possible to weave together from the historical data a scenario in which the idea of monotheism seeped somehow out of Egyptian theology and into Israelite culture.

When you open the Hebrew Bible to Psalm 104, the great manifesto of God's all-encompassing power, and read how God created grass for cattle to eat, and trees for birds to nest in, and the sea for ships to sail and fish to swim in:

> Bless the Lord . . . you who coverest thyself with light as with a garment . . .
> Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; . . .
> He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and . . . the trees
> Where the birds make their nests; as for the stork, the fir trees are her house.
> The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats; . . .
> (As) the sun ariseth, (the beasts) gather themselves together . . .
> There go the ships: there is that leviathan (whale), whom thou hast made to play therein.

And then among the remains of Amarna culture you find the Hymn to the Aten, purportedly written by Akhenaten himself, and it says:

> When the land grows bright and you are risen from the Akhet (horizon) and shining in the sun-disk by day, . . .
> All flocks (are) at rest on their grasses, trees and grasses flourishing;
> Birds flown from their nest, their wings in adoration of your life-force;
> All flocks prancing on foot, all that fly and alight living as you rise for them;
> Ships going downstream and upstream too, every road open at your appearance;
> Fish on the river leaping to your face, your rays even inside the sea

The similarity is simply astounding. It seems incontrovertible that cultural and religious exchange from Egypt to Israel transpired somehow and, given the chronology, we must suppose the sharing took place in that direction and there appears to be no way around the conclusion that the ancient Hebrew who wrote Psalm 104 borrowed from Akhenaten's Hymn to the Aten.

WHAT LAYS BEHIND THE TRADITIONAL STORY OF JOSHUA IN THE BIBLE?

Now I would ask the reader to take a deep breath and set down for what comes next.

Answer for yourself: Now let us think hard for a minute. Does this "parallel" between Satan and Seti which we saw in the prior article help us understand why we find similar "accounts, sayings, and events" taken from Egyptian religious writings that seem to be identical to the many "sayings" and "events" of the Christ found in the "Jesus Stories" as well as the many "events" depicted in the life of the New Testament Jesus?

This question should give us cause to think. It would appear that a "pattern" or "typology" taken from Ancient Egyptian religious writings has been "replayed" down through history as applied to many different "characters" finding its ultimate and final resting place with the "Jesus Story" of the New Testament. When one digs into such studies he finds as I did hidden in Egyptian religious writings taken from various rituals and the walls of Egyptian Temples let alone the Egyptian Book of the Dead identical stories and sayings that parallel "identically" the same events and sayings that we find on the pages of our New Testaments which we are taught to believe are "historical truths" about a first century Rabbi itinerant preacher and "would be Messiah". I can remember my utter amazement and shock when I discovered hundreds of these same "sayings" and "evens" on the pages of my New Testament were easily found to be written as stated in the Egyptian Book of the Dead and its rituals thousands of years before a supposed historical "Jesus Christ". In case anyone doubts such a saying I direct them to do their own studies in this very difficult and challenging area of study by beginning such a study with such works available today:

- Christianity Before Christ by John G. Jackson
- The Historical Jesus And The Mythical Christ by Gerald Massey
- Ancient Egypt: The Light Of The World by Gerald Massey
- The Natural Genesis...Vol I and II by Gerald Massey
- The Book Of Beginnings....Vol I and Vol II by Gerald Massey
- The Origin and Evolution Of Religion by Albert Churchward
- The Origin Of All Religious Worship by Charles Dupuis

Ahmed Osman, 58-year-old teacher of Arabic and author of The House of the Messiah and Out of Egypt brings forth massive evidence in these books as well as others that he has written (along with many authors like M. Gadalla in his Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt) that has forced many to concluded that there was no historical "Jesus Christ" as described in the New Testament. The events and "logia", or sayings of the Christ" are found to be repeated thousands of years before in Egyptian writings. Seeing such identical similarities between what is carved on Temple walls in Egyptian temples and Pyramids along with the volumes of religious writings uncovered in Egypt in the last 150 yrs provide comprehensive and definitive evidence for Osman and others that the real-life model for the "New Testament Jesus" as well as that the successor to Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses known as the "Biblical Joshua", is really the son of Moses better known as the Pharaoh Tutankhamen. Echoing what other scholars today are saying after serious study into the "historical Jesus" we find Osman, according to the May 30, 1992*The Washington Post*, saying, that "There is not a shred of historical evidence that Jesus lived at the time he is supposed to have done, and I believe the writers of the Gospels adapted a historical figure into their own time." This same sentiment is echoed today by a host of modern scholars as well as many dating back to the 1800's; the only problem is that in a "fundamentalist Christian" upbringing as I and many others have had growing up in this traditional "Christian" land the chances of running into this information is not great unless you browse the religious sections of secular book stores like Barnes and Noble and Boarders where you can get "enlightened". Of course the Internet will help but one has to "think outside the box" for that to happen.

The real identification of Tutankhamun is most problematic and the most contentious point in Ahmed Osman's writings. Being conditioned by traditional Christianity and Christian teaching coming from our "forged" Biblical texts we are not accustomed to the "truth" and read unsuspecting what we have inherited from Rome as the "Gospel Truth" never realizing that we don't have it; that is until you begin to dedicate yourself to studying this "book" with all your heart and soul and become ruthless for the truth and desire it above all things and all costs. So doing then men like myself and Osman, Gadalla, and Jackson and many others have come to see how this son of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), Tutankhamun, is the key figure in the attempted peace among the Atenists and the Amen-Ra Priesthood. In such study we come to see how sadly and tragically he was slain for such efforts at reconciliation at Sinai and hung on a tree. In such a way Osman calls Tutankhamun the "original Jesus", the "slain savior-messiah" and the prototype for all other and later "Jesus figures". He sees this "Jesus figure" in the Essene's Teacher of Righteousness at Qumran as detailed in the Dead Sea Scrolls, who is also killed, and is identified usually as Jeshu ben Pandira whom many see as the "pre-Jesus" historical figure. In Hebrew "Ben" means "son of", and Pandira is not a Hebrew word, but an ancient Egyptian royal title, as "Pa-ntr-ra", or "Pa-neter-ra", Son of Ra, and not surprisingly one of the titles of Akhenaten.

Answer for yourself: Was the murder of Tutankhamun, the hope of Egypt and reconciliation between the Amen-Ra Priesthood at Thebes and the Atenists led by his father Akhenaten, where he was "pierced in his side" and hung on a tree at Sinai the origin for all later "historical Jesus stories" who were "crucified and hung on a tree" as well?

Answer for yourself: Is is but a coincidence that the word "Jesus" is interchangeable with the word "Joshua" and that they both basically mean the same things; namely "salvation, or savior"?

We need to focus on the words "Joshua" and "Jesus" for a second. Osman, correctly in my opinion, identifies Tutankhamun as the "historical Joshua", Son of Nun (fish), the successor of Moses in the Hebrew story. Archeologists have already disproving the Biblical "Joshua story" and the conquering of the "Promised Land" and "Jericho" as depicted in the Old Testament. It would appear from the Egyptian records that Joshua, like Jeshu, is a variant of Jesus, and in the first Christian centuries, many authorities referred to Joshua as Jesus. It may be news to our readership but the vast military campaign Joshua is supposed to have carried out in the 13th century B.C.E., according to the Book of Joshua and Deuteronomy, has however been shown to be fiction. For instance, two of the cities he is supposed to have destroyed had been destroyed earlier (one of which was Jericho), and the other two were not destroyed until much later. The book of Joshua, chapter 6, records the destruction of the walls Jericho, allowing the Israelites under the leadership of Joshua to conquer the city. After extensive excavations at the site of ancient Jericho, archaeologists have determined that the location was abandoned between about 1500-1100 B.C.E., during the time of the supposed "destruction" by Joshua. At Jericho, the scientists found some sort of artifacts (pottery) at a certain level that allowed them to date that level at 1500 1100 B.C.E., based upon their "key" with similar artifacts at other excavations. This particular level did not contain the foundations or remains of any city walls, buildings, or other structures that would indicate a city.

Answer for yourself: How to explain this discrepancy with the Biblical account?

The earliest extant manuscript of the book of Joshua dates from a period hundreds of years after the events described in the book. Skeptics theorize that such a manuscript, in being recopied from a decaying original, could have been altered by a zealous scribe, seeking to glorify his God and the history of his nation by inventing a battle that never occurred and a leader who never existed. According, to many archeologists, no walled cities existed during this time in this area of Canaan. Conservative Biblical scholars and archaeologists also disagree on the date of the Israelite entrance into Canaan, but they both agree that it falls well within the time range mentioned above. Given this chronology, modern archaeology concludes that the Hebrews moved onto vacant or sparsely populated land. This thinking allows no walls to come tumbling down, and no city to conquer. The skeptics, viewing this evidence, conclude that there is little evidence if any that the Old Testament Joshua even existed since the basic story line cannot be substantiated. The archaeologists who excavated Jericho published their theory. These findings were debated and ultimately accepted by most of the archaeological community. Unless and until some new evidence comes along, the modern science of archaeology has determined that the Israelite conquest of Canaan as described in the book of Joshua is not factual. Specifically, Joshua did not fight the battle of Jericho. This is an archaeological "truth," or more accurately, a testing by archaeological research methods of a Biblical story, and the Bible fails the test. This evidence and findings of archeology causes us to have to seriously look at the Egyptian records which are "not fiction" and it is there we find the "Biblical Joshua".

The cause of these radical distortions of history Osman believes to have been the Hebrews' desire first to conceal their connection with the Egyptians and then to cover up the fact that their priest-king had been killed at all, let alone by one of them. In fact, the condition of Tutankhamen's mummy, with many broken bones and a severed head, shows he was tortured as well, then hanged. Yet it still exhibited "a refined and cultured face" and a "serene and placid countenance" (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 140).

It is striking, in light of what we have read previously, not only in this article but the many others on this website, that many early Christian groups apparently believed Jesus had lived much earlier, and were awaiting his return, the Essenes, for instance.

Most of the contradictions and confusions we have pointed out, of which there are many more, have either been ignored by the conventional scholars, or were unknown before the discoveries of the Nag Hammadi and the Dead Sea Scrolls in the 1940's, and the archeological discoveries since. The most obvious point in doing such studies is of course the common confusion of "Jesus" with "Christ". Although there may have been a historical Jesus at some point, even as far back as Ancient Egypt, we must not confuse this "historical entity" with "the Christ" who is a "spiritual principle" that lives within each human being, and may have been awakened in that "Jesus" of old. We call this "Christ" today simply the "anointed" who is made available to serve the living God.

H.P. Blavatsky, for instance, concedes a possible physical original when she says: "Jesus, the Christ-God, is a myth concocted two centuries after the real Hebrew Jesus died" (H.P. Blavatsky: Isis Unveiled, Vol II, p.544). In this case she is referring to Jeshu Ben Pandira, who is mentioned in many ancient sources. Her pupil, scholar G.R.S. Mead, wrote a book entitled Did Jesus Live 100 B.C.? (G.R.S. Mead: Did Jesus Live 100 B.C.? pub. Theosophical Publishing Society, London and Benares, 1903; repub.by University Books, N.Y.1968, 442 pp.) wherein he investigates the Talmud stories and other MSS like the later "Toldoth Jeshu MS". It says in the latter that Jesus lived about a century earlier, in the reign of Alexander Jannaeus and his wife Salome at Lud.

Told that many scholars dispute this, H.P.B. wrote: "I say the scholars are either lying or talking nonsense. Our Masters affirm the statement. If the story of Jehoshua or Jesus Ben-Pandira is false, then the whole Talmud, the whole Jewish Canon is false. He was the disciple of Jehoshua Ben Perahiah, the fifth President of the Sanhedrin after Ezra who re-wrote the Bible. Compromised in the revolt of the Pharisees against Jannaeus in 105 B.C., he fled into Egypt carrying the young Jesus with him. This account is far truer than that of the New Testament which has no record in history." (H.P. Blavatsky: Esotericism of Christian Dogma, in Collected Writings, Vol. VIII, page 380).

Answer for yourself: What is the picture that is unfolding to us? Well simply that the historical accounts in the Bible surrounding the character of Joshua might not be accurately depicted but regardless the maze of references and stories, when all put together, all tend to point to some figure of around that time who is sometimes seen as a spiritual teacher like the Teacher of Righteousness in the Qumran MSS and sometimes as a kind of sorcerer or a political fanatic, but whom H.P.B. calls an Initiate (H.P. Blavatsky: Secret Doctrine, I. p. 577). All of the criteria in the Old and New Testaments attributed to the Messiah; being the son of David, who sat on his throne; the son of Aten, the God who became identified with the Hebrew Jehovah - the Lord - as Adonai, and who met a violent end and was believed to have risen from the dead; and a prophet like Moses, as well as his successor - are found in the life of Tutankhamun.

The death of Tutankhamun, the Biblical Joshua, became a unifying force. As Pharaoh and successor to his father Moses he never abandoned belief in the God of Moses, but he wanted to include all in the faith. Unlike Moses, he accepted that not everyone had the same perception of God and not everyone worshipped him in the same way, but these were the "lost sheep". Part of his plan for converting them embraced even the ancient gods of Egypt, who are shown in paintings as having been converted to worship of the Aten and are the source of the later Christian concept of angels and saints. For example, a fragment of the Song of Moses in Deuteronomy 32, found in a cave at Qumran, includes a text of verse 43 which mentions the word "gods" in the plural: "Rejoice, 0 heavens, with him; and do obeisance to him, ye gods." When the passage is quoted in the New Testament (Hebrews, 1:6), the phrase is appropriately rendered "angels of God" (Ibid., 175).

In contrast to Akhenaten (Moses), Tutankhamun (Joshua/Jesus) also introduced belief in resurrection and life after death, which becomes the main message of the New Covenant. On the wall of his tomb, he himself is shown resurrected and alive, facing Aye, in complete contrast to the beliefs of Akhenaten (Moses), as can be shown from his tomb.

Phinehas/Phineas turns up in various scriptures. In the Old Testament he appears several times: once as a follower of Joshua, and at least twice as the avenger for the Lord although the disproportionately extreme punishments he inflicts make one wonder how this "Lord" could ever be considered worthy of veneration (Numbers 25; 6-9, Judges 20). The Talmudic rabbis later claimed that "Pinhas killed Jesus" (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 176) and the Qumran Essenes identified him as "the Wicked Priest" who persecuted and may have killed the Teacher of Righteousness (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 76, F.M. Cross Jr. The Ancient Library of Qumran , pub. Doubleday, N.Y. 1958, pp 107-116).

Let us just to the voice heard in the New Testament. Paul is the only contemporary apostle definitely identifiable as a historical figure, and he clearly states that he never met Jesus in the flesh: his encounter with Christ, on the road to Damascus, was a purely spiritual one. The impact of that however was such that it sent him into the desert for three years to digest it. From then on, he speaks of dying daily, and "not I, but Christ in me", in a way that shows him an Initiate. This again makes us focus on the fact that Paul's Christ was not a "historical Jesus" but "the Christ within". So for Paul this "Joshua/Jesus" was not a contemporary and his "Joshua/Jesus" was not killed in his day and time but long before by this Panehasy/Phineas/Phinehas who lived in the time of Moses (Akhenaten).

Historians, looking back from the perspective of a Christian culture, regard Akhenaten as "the first monotheist", even "the first modern man", who brought the tradition-bound Egyptian religion down to earth and introduced naturalistic art into the temples. In fact, however, he tried to drag down the Egyptian mysteries to the level shown in what the Jews actually made of their religion. Although the name Aten was used for the visible disc of the sun, in truth, Aten—earlier Atum-- was the Egyptian name for the Absolute, the impersonal principle behind all gods and manifestations, as was YHWH in its original meaning. This true meaning however was kept as an esoteric secret, in both cases. This is why there was no image for Aten in Amarna. But this is also the real reason for the hostility of the other priests to Akhenaten and all later followers and Atenists. They felt he was betraying this "secret" God by making him exoteric. And Panehasy/Phinehas, apparently understanding only the exoteric version, killed Tutankhamun because he believed the young pharaoh was no longer upholding the primacy of Aten as the only god.

Thus he was making the same mistake as the Hebrews, degrading Aten into a personal god-hence putting him on the same level in their minds as the other gods-but at the same time claiming the attribute properly belonging only to Aten as the Absolute, to be "above" all gods. For this he was killed and to cover up such a murder by his "own" people he was represented as "Joshua/Jesus" and given a life through traditions that carried him into Canaan and the conquering of this land in later writings of the Hebrew's Scriptures.

CONCLUSION

There is not a shred of contemporary evidence to support the New Testament story that Jesus was born during the reign of Herod the Great and was condemned to death in the first century AD. when Pontius Pilate (26-36 AD.) was the procurator of Judaea, which had become a Roman province. On the other hand, there is a mass of evidence that points to the fact that this "Jesus" lived many centuries earlier. For instance, the Dead Sea Scrolls, which pre-date the Gospels, contain an account of the Annunciation couched in almost the same words we find in St Luke and make it clear that the Essenes believed that the Messiah (their Teacher of Righteousness) had already lived and died at the hands of the Wicked Priest, and they were awaiting his Second Coming, not the first.

Answer for yourself: How is Isaiah linked to this? The same view is expressed in the Book of Isaiah, dating from the eighth to sixth centuries B.C., where the Messiah is named as the Suffering Servant, who was conceived by the Lord and met a violent death as a sacrificed like a lamb at the hands of his people.

Answer for yourself: Could this "Suffering Servant" have been Tutankhamun? Don't laugh yet!

Some Talmudic traditions, dating from the third century AD., make it clear that the Talmudic rabbis knew of this "Jesus", who is described as "a deceiver", but they do not relate him to the time of Herod or Pontius Pilate. Instead they say that he was slain by a priest named Pinhas. Pinhas is to be identified as Phinehas, the biblical priest who was a contemporary of Moses, and also Panehasy, the Chief Servitor and Second Priest of the Aten (the Lord), the monotheistic God Akhenaten (Moses) introduced in Egypt and forced on his people during the five years he was sole ruler.

Answer for yourself: How is this contemporary of Moses, the Priest Pinhas/Phinehas, the one blamed for the murder of this "Jesus"? Who is this follower of Moses known as "Joshua" or "Joshua/Jesus"? Is it Tutankhamun the successor of Moses (his Joshua) since we now know today that Moses is Amenhotep IV, otherwise known as Akhenaten and that Tutankhamun followed Moses as Pharaoh?

Answer for yourself: Could this "Jesus" as described by the Talmudic Rabbis be both a "sorcerer" and a "deceiver" because he was the historical one who reversed the religious reforms of his father Akhenaten and restored the Amun-Ra Priesthood which allowed once again the worship of the "neteru" in Egypt?

The Old Testament describes Joshua as the successor of Moses. However, the early Church Fathers looked upon Joshua and Jesus as the same person, a belief still echoed in the King James Bible where references to Joshua have an accompanying marginal note identifying him as Jesus, and vice versa. If, as we have shown elsewhere, Moses and Akhenaten are the same person, and if Joshua and Jesus are the same person, then Joshua (Jesus/Tutankhamun) must be the same person and a descendant of Moses (Akhenaten).

Answer for yourself: Why is this so important? This identification throws a new light on the account of how, shortly before his death, Jesus, accompanied by three disciples, met Moses and Elijah on Mount Sinai and was transfigured before them. The seeming discrepancy in dates has resulted in the presence of Moses and Elijah being interpreted as symbolic, but, if Jesus (as Joshua/Tutankhamun) and Moses were contemporaries, it can be looked upon as a real meeting witnessed by three disciples.

As we have seen, the religion of "Jesus/Joshua/Tutankhamun) differed from the religion of Moses in some regards. Although keeping the Aten (Adonai) as the one true God, Tutankhamun accepted the old gods "neteru" of Egypt as angels through whom Egyptians could reach the true God; he asked the Egyptians and Israelites to accept each other, and, unlike Moses, he believed in life after death. However, After restoring the Amun-Ra Priesthood and reopening the temples in Egypt Phinehas, the loyal Priest of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), looked upon these teachings and actions of Tutankhamun as blasphemy and the teachings of Moses in his Torah prescribed death for such actions. Thus on the eve of the Passover, Phinehas killed Tutankhamun in the Tabernacle at the foot of Mount Sinai. The killing was avenged by the slaughter of thousands of Israelites, including Phinehas, at the hands of Ephraim (Aye), the second son of Joseph the Patriarch and the death of so many is again "covered-up" by a plague story in the Old Testament.

It was the death of John the Baptist many centuries later that persuaded the Essene leaders, who had been awaiting the Second Coming of their "Christ as a judge at the end of the world", to claim that they had witnessed "Jesus" in the person of their Teacher of Righteousness, thus allowing the evangelists to retell the story of "the Christ" adapted to the time of Herod the Great and Pontius Pilate.

The true course of events has been obscured largely for two reasons. This "Jesus", we are told, would be a descendant of King David and sit on his throne. Confusion has arisen because the Old Testament provides us with two Davids:

- one who spent much of his time in conflict with the Philistines,
- the other the founder of an empire that stretched from the Nile to the Euphrates.

It appears we have a cover-up here.

So far we have seen that there is a cover-up concerning Sarah and Abraham, now one about David, and one to come about the "Jesus/Joshua". Where is the truth?

Speaking about David for a second the David who fought the Philistines was simply a tribal chief who lived in the tenth century B.C.E.: the David from whose House the Messiah was to come was Tuthmose III (c. 1490-1436 B.C.E.), the great-great-grandfather of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) and the mightiest warrior of his age, who forged the first link between the Israelites and Egyptian royalty as the father of Isaac. Between the reign of Thutmose III and conquest of the territory by the Persians in the sixth century B.C.E., nobody else can be said to have founded an empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates other than Tuthmose III. It was also Thutmose III who made Jerusalem a holy city when he resided there for a time in the course of his military campaign and brought up the Ark of his god. The Ark of Amun-Ra sanctified the city and made it "holy" for all Eternity.

The other obscuring factor has been an elaborate cover-up. This has included the necessary "resurrection" of "Joshua/Jesus" and Phinehas for a later account in the Book of Joshua of how the Promised Land was conquered in a swift military campaign more than a century after they were killed and both dead. This is a total invention that cannot be supported by modern archaeological excavation and has also been dismissed on literary grounds by biblical scholars. By catapulting both Joshua (Tutankhamun) and Phinehas into the future then it was hoped that this would help cover-up the Hebrews' responsibility in killing the Son of God, the Egyptian Messiah. So ironically the Hebrew are yet guilty of killing the Son of God; it is just not the one we have been told. They killed the "Joshua/Jesus/Tutankhamun" at the time of the Passover way back in Egypt and not the one pushed much later into Roman reckoning. This obscuring factor also continues as we also find in the Book of Numbers a garbled account of the events that took place in the Tabernacle at the foot of Mount Sinai. Even the Day of Atonement, which used to be observed at the same time as the Passover in the spring as an atonement for killing the Son of God at the time of the Passover (Tutankhamun was killed at the time of the Passover), is later moved to fall in the Hebrew calendar; again to cover up this fact of the murder of the Egyptian Messiah and this is why the Day of Atonement has been moved in the calendar from its original time. The secrecy surrounding the hidden contents of the Dead Sea Scrolls which were hidden for too many years and only recently made public makes it clear that this cover-up had continued for thousands of years. No wonder the Vatican issued letters commanding that these Scrolls never see the light of day; simply said, they overthrow everything we have been taught almost about the "real Jesus".

Well there you have it as I see it having done the necessary studies for all these years. We will look into other similarities between the New Testament "Jesus Stories" and Tutankhamun in future articles.

TUTANKHAMUN....WAS HE THE PROTOTYPE FOR ALL LATER "HISTORICAL JESUS" STORIES?

Well that might be a hard question to answer at first since few readers know anything specific about Tutankhamun, his life, the time he lived and the "similarities" to the many "Jesus Stories" created down through history. In order to accurately answer the above question we need to acquaint ourselves with this very important "murdered" Pharaoh who turns out to be the son of the greatest religious revolutionary in the history of mankind; namely, Akhenaten or the Biblical Moses. We now turn our attention to Tutankhamun.

It is assumed that the reader of this article has previously read the article entitled "What Lays Behind The Traditional Moses Story". As we have seen in this prior article once Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, decides to flee and leaves Goshen and sets out for Palestine/Canaan his co-regent Semenkhare was left in power in Egypt, but in less than a year he died or was killed (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 293). Semenkhare was succeeded by the now famous Tutankhamun (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 149). Aldred, in his book Akhenaten, makes mention of the fact that because of the very close similarity of their skulls and their identical blood types that Tutankhamun and Semenkhare are considered to have been brothers. The DNA studies of these remains tells us a lot and we expect more revelations in the future.

It is very important that we pay attention to what comes next. With Akhenaten in exile, the line of the Biblical David (the Pharaoh Thuthmose III) became divided.

- One Pharaoh lived on in the Sinai....Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses)
- The other "Branch" (Isaiah 4:2, 11:1; Jeremiah 23:5) now "sitting on the throne of his father (Amenhotep III or Akhenaten)," was the young Tutankhamun.

Isa 4:2 2 In that day shall the branch of the LORD be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "escaped"? Escaped from what? Could this have been the persecution of Akhenaten's followers and fellow Hebrew Atenists in the wake of Akhenaten's absence when he fled to Sinai? You might need to read the previous article on "What Lies Behind The Traditional Moses Story In The Old Testament" to get a proper understanding of the historical surroundings of such a verse.

Isa 11:1 1 And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: (KJV)

Jer 23:5 5 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. (KJV)

Now please pay attention. When first reading these "Messianic" verses one is struck by their traditional "Judeo-Christian" interpretations which we have grown familiar with our whole lives growing up in the Christian church but in light of what we have uncovered and learned up to now as to the true identities of the Biblical King David as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III then these verses and corresponding identities of those involved in these verses must take on an entirely new meaning. Having conclusively seen that the Biblical King David is none other than the Pharaoh Tuthmose III then it seems that this "stem of Jesse" and this "righteous branch" would be a successor in the lineage of Pharaohs and not some itinerant Jewish preacher some 1300 or so years later. Egyptian history bears out that this "righteous" one promised to David whose real identity is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III had a double fulfillment in both Akhenaten and his son Tutankhamun.

I don't expect the "uneducated" reader to understand the next statement but the evidence demands such a statement being made in light of thousands of years of deception to hide this truth. If you spend some time in serious study of Egypt, the Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty, and Egyptian religion and its "Messianism" then all the evidence points to the identification of Tutankhamun as the real "historical Joshua/Jesus" that serves as the "prototype" for all later "Jesus Stories". This, I realize, is a challenging statement and will, for many people, be a terribly disturbing statement. Yet after you see the evidence it is the only logical conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence. But you have to see this evidence to understand such a statement. It appears without question that Tutankhamun is the "prototype" for all later "historical Jesus Stories".

Let us not forget if you have been diligent to keep up with these studies on your own that we have already made conclusive identification of King David of the Bible as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III and the Biblical Solomon as Amenhotep III. We have also seen the Biblical Moses is the Pharaoh Akhenaten. The identification of King David as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III is all the more important in light of Luke's description of the forthcoming birth of "Jesus" in the following terms:

Luke 1:32-33 32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: 33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. (KJV)

Having seen the Egyptian identities for King David, King Solomon, and Moses then it is clearly evident that this "throne of his father David" is none other than the Throne of Egypt held by a Pharaoh. That means that this "Jesus" referred to by Luke is "a Pharaoh" born long before the supposed time of a first century "historical Jesus". In fact scrutiny of Egyptian history reveals that this "Joshua/Jesus" is none other than the successor to the Biblical Moses (Akhenaten).

Answer for yourself: Whom does history identify as the historical successor of the Biblical Moses? It identifies one as "Joshua/Jesus".

Answer for yourself: Whom does history identify as the historical successor of Akhenaten? It identifies such a one as Tutankhamun.

Answer for yourself: Then does this mean that the Biblical "Joshua/Jesus" is none other than Tutankhamun? It sure does.

This simple reasoning reveals to us that there is nobody apart from Tutankhamun of whom it can be said that these conditions in Luke (Son of the Highest, seated upon the Throne of his father David (the Pharaoh Tuthmose III) was fulfilled.

We now, for obvious reasons, turn our focus on Moses' successor whom the Bible identifies as a person named "Joshua" whom we have strong reason to believe is not only Tutankhamun but the "historical Joshua" and the "historical Jesus" that have fed legends for thousands of years.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there is actually two names for the successor to Moses?

- One is the Biblical Joshua which we are all familiar with from the Biblical account
- The other one, in light of the fact that the Biblical Moses is Akhenaten because his successor was Tutankhamun

In was in the same article referenced above that we saw that after his coronation, or perhaps as part of the coronation itself, Tutankhamun's name was changed. His birth name had been Tut-ankh-aten. Scholars today teach us that there cannot by any doubt that Tutankhamun belonged to the Tuthmosside royal family of which Tuthmose III (the Biblical King David) had been the head only a short 4 generations earlier. A text on a lion of red granite in the British Museum states that "He restored the monuments of his father (again ancestry is meant) Amenhotep III (the Biblical King Solomon) who was also connected with the worship of the Aten (The Journal of British Archeology, 1928, vol. 14, p. 74). A. Osman, in his House Of The Messiah, on page 149-150, relates that Professor R.G. Harrison, the late Professor of Anatomy at the University of Liverpool, who examined the king's mummy in 1963, found a striking similarity with artistic impressions of Akhenaten. Scholarly debate has ensued concerning the question whether Tutankhamun was the "son" or "brother" of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses). These matters are difficult to resolve but many scholars are of the opinion that Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) was the father of Tutankhamun and I concur having done the studies myself in these areas.

Answer for yourself: What should we learn from this? Simply that the Biblical Moses was at the minimum related to Tutankhamun and were close relations in the Tuthmosside royal family and connected with the "Throne of David" (remember that David is the historical Tuthmose III, the Napoleon of Ancient Egypt and great military conqueror that extended the boarders of Egypt to include Canaan and Palestine which will later become the home for the Hebrews and fellow Atenists following the religious split in Egypt otherwise known as "the Exodus". But more probable Tutankhamun was the biological son of Akhenaten.

The change in his name from Tut-Ankh-Aten to Tut-ankh-Amun is believed to be due to a compromise with the priests of Amun-Ra in Thebes in his father's absence. As I have shown elsewhere, "Aten" in Egyptian is the equivalent of Adonai, "the Lord", in Hebrew. Because Tutankhamun was only a child of seven to ten years old at his ascension, the change of his name from "Aten" to "Amun" could hardly have been a deliberate decision on his own part in contrast to the name change of his father (the Biblical Moses, from Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten). Both the birth name of Tutankh-aten as well as the change of name of Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten indicate that their worship of God stressed the worship of their God as "the Aten"! Under the supervision of the elderly prime minister, Aye (second son of Yuya and identified with Ephraim, the second and more favored son of the Biblical Joseph), Tutankhamun continued to rule Egypt from the city of Akhenaten until the third or fourth year of his reign when he was persuaded to change the royal residence as well from the city of Akhenaten to Memphis. In his tomb it is written that "he spent his life in making images of the gods" (Aldred, Akhenaten, 295, 208-210, and Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, 208-210).

The monument known as the "Restoration Stele" found at Karnak recorded that Tutankhamun devoted his entire reign to the healing and restoration of Egypt from the schism created between his father Akhenaten and the Amen-Ra Priesthood at Thebes. It read, "The good ruler, performing benefactions for his father [Amun] and all the gods, for he has made what was ruined to endure as a monument for the ages ... the temples ... [had] gone to pieces. Their shrines had become desolate ... overgrown with weeds ... as if they had never been. The land was topsy-turvy ... If one prayed to a god ... he would never come ... (Schulman, "Military Background of the Amarna Period," p. 67, quoted by Osman,Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, 131). Although his main agenda was restoring the status quo of Amun and other Egyptian gods (netroo), he also maintained loyal to Aten and his fathers' legacy and even added to Akhenaten's temples to the Aten at Karnak (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King). In such a way he was seen to be a "peacemaker" which is one tasks of God's Messiah! In such a capacity he was seen by the faithful in Egypt as "their Mesheh" or "their Messiah"; one who will bring peace to their land and their lives. In such a capacity then one can easily see how the life and death of the young Pharaoh Tutankhamun was decidedly "Messianic."

The literal meaning of the name Tutankhamun is "Living Image of the Lord":

- Tut - meaning likeness or image;
- Ankh - meaning life and symbolized by a cross; and
- amun - the god Amun)" (Osman, House of the Messiah, 151)

Answer for yourself: What is the significance of this Egyptian Messiah being connected to a "cross"? More on that later.

M. Gadalla, in his Tut-Ankh-Amen, The Living Image Of The Lord, states that the Biblical Jesus and Tutankhamun share many similarities, including their variety of names. To the unlearned in Egyptian religion this seems impossible; impossible until you gather some much needed information that make you no longer see through a glass darkly. M. Gadalla writes in his Tut-Ankh-Amen, The Living Image Of The Lord that Tutankhamun shares the same names with the Biblical Jesus. This needs explanation is at tedious at times so we need to pay close attention to what comes next.

Tut's birth name was Tut-Ankh-Aton or Tut-Ankh-Aten (both meaning the same). Tut-Ankh means "the Living Image".

Answer for yourself: What is meant by "Aton" or "Aten"?

Aton/Aten signified the Egyptian neter (god/Lord) who has no image. The Lord of the Jews, who likewise has no image, is called Adon.

Answer for yourself: Is there a link between the Egyptian "Aton, Aten" and the Jewish "Adon"? Yes.

The Egyptian "Aton/Aten" is equivalent to the Hebrew "Adon". What we find is that the Egyptian "t" becomes "d" in Hebrew. In other words the Egyptian "Aton/Aten" is identical to the Hebrew "Adon" or "Adonai".

That should give the reader cause to think just whom this Jewish God really is!

Adon-ai in Hebrew is "my Lord".

The last two letters "ai" of the word is a Hebrew pronoun meaning "my or mine" and signifies possession. As such, Tut's birth name (Tutankh-Aten/Aten [the Hebrew Adon] likewise means "the image of the Lord").

Tutankhamun is described in his tomb with the same words used of his father, the Biblical Moses: 'The Beautiful God, beloved, dazzling of face like the Aten (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.58, 69).

Let us look at Exodus 34 for a just a second to an interesting parallel to the inscription from the tomb of Tutankhamun.

Exod 34:29 29 And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence that the same wording is used to describe both (Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and worshipper of the Aten and Tutankhamun who was named after the Aten (the Sun disk)?

Now hold onto the seat of your pants for what comes next. With the name change from Tutankh-aten to Tutank-amun the very "Lord" that Tutankhamun's name now acknowledged was no longer the Aten (the God of his birthright and the center of all Mosaic reform in Egypt), but Amun (the God or neteru emphasized by the Thebes Priesthood).

Answer for yourself: How is this related to Isa. 7:14?

Assuredly, my Lord will give you a sign of His own accord! Look, the young woman is with child and about to give birth to a son. Let her name him Immanuel.

Already conceded by a host of scholars is the fact that nowhere in the New Testament is there to be made any connection between the New Testament Jesus and the name "Immanuel". But that cannot be said for Tutankhamun. The name "Immanuel" is encoded by Isaiah 7:14, "the Lord (Adon/Aten is used here) himself shall give you a sign ... His name shall be called Immanuel."

Answer for yourself: If we transliterated Immanuel back into Egyptian do you know what we get? We get Amun-u-el meaning "his (u) god (el) is Amun." (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.166).

Many scholars have noticed that the words used by Isaiah here in this verse, Isaiah 7:14, makes it clear that the birth of this Immanuel had already taken place at the time of his writing. In other words "the Messiah" had already been conceived and had been born and died before Isaiah's writings. This verse in the Hebrew is not prophetic as many erroneously think today. As such, behind this verse is the hidden story of the first "historical Biblical Jesus" and that this "Jesus/Joshua" occurred several centuries before the Roman era and only later transported to the first century by Rome in their writing of the New Testament (M. Gadalla, Tutankhamun, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35). Let us keep reading to see how this is possible.

The writer of the Gospel of Matthew regarded Immanuel as another name for this Jesus and misquotes the verse intentionally to give it a future tense when in fact the Hebrew does not carry such a meaning: Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us (Matt 1:23 KJV). Lost from the misquotation and mistranslation from the quote from the Hebrew is the fact that it has occurred already.

Immanuel could be interpreted in two different ways, by dividing the word into its basic elements:

- Imma-nu (with us) and El (Elohim God) i.e. God with Us
- Imman-u (his Amun) and El (is God) i.e. His Amun is God

The Hebrew "ayain", the first letter of Immanuel, is equivalent to the Egyptian "aleph", which is the first letter of Amun. The reader needs to understand that writing the name Amen/Amon/Amun means the same thing. The first interpretation of Immanuel was intentionally highlighted in Red color above in order to hide the fact that it is the second interpretation that was intended, i.e. His Amen is God.

Answer for yourself: Where have we heard this before? This later interpretation is echoed in King Tut's changing of his name from Tut-Ankh-Aten to Tut-Ankh-Amun four years after he became the boy Pharaoh. His new name signified his allegiance to Amen/Amun due to the influence of the Amen-Ra Priesthood

(M. Gadalla, Tutankhamun, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35).

Answer for yourself: Ever heard of the Shema? The Shema is an affirmation of Judaism and a declaration of faith in one God. The obligation to recite the Shema is separate from the obligation to pray and a Jew is obligated to say Shema in the morning and at night. The first line of the Shema, "Hear O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One" (Shema Yisrael Adonai eloheinu Adonai ehad) (Deuteronomy 6:4) is repeated throughout the prayer services. It is said in the morning blessings, in the musaf Amidah of Shabbat and holidays, when the Torah is taken out of the Ark on Shabbat and holidays, as a bedtime prayer, as part of the deathbed confessional, and at various other times.

It can be said that the "Shema" which is the Jewish confession of faith, in Deuteronomy 6:4-9: "Shema Yisroel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Echod" or "Shema Israel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Ehad" (Adonay replaces the unspeakable YHWH). The proper English translation of which seems to be: "Hear Israel, our Lord is Adonay, only Adonay". If the uncanny similarity of the Egyptian Aten/Aton and the Hebrew Adonay, and the Greek Adonis is not pure chance, and something which originates from a common root or a common identity in the prehistory, then replacing "Adonay" with "Aton" gives us the following confession of faith:

"Shema Israel Aten elohenu, Aten ehad." The English translation of which is "Hear Israel our God is Aton, only Aton."

So we have seen a lot already and you cannot brush these facts aside as inconsequential as you will come to see that they lay at the very heart of our "Jesus Stories" we have inherited along with the "crucified Messiah" motif expressed in the New Testament. This fact become ever more important especially in light of the vacuum and lack of any verifiable and "unforged" evidence for a historical Jesus in the first century.

We need to see more evidence and it is available but so far in this article the reader needs to begin to see that there exists a very strong connection between Tutankhamun and the later "Jesus" story since both were "crucified Messiahs". So we are beginning to see that it is possible that it was Moses's successor, the "Image of the Living Lord", the "Lord of Salvation", the historical Tutankhamun who served as the prototype for the later "Joshua/Jesus" stories and "crucified messiah story" we read about in the New Testament today. Let us move on.

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that the word "Messiah" is of Egyptian origin? Well it is.

The English word "Christ" comes from the Greek "Kristos", which is the equivalent of the Hebrew and Aramaic "Mashih". The English word "Messiah" originated from the Hebrew and Aramaic "Mashish", which in its form as a verb "Mesheh", a verb meaning "to anoint". This word is Egyptian in origin, where "Mesheh" signified the ritual of anointing ancient Egyptian Kings (including Akhenaten and Tutankhamun) with the fat of crocodiles as was the tradition with all kings in ancient Egypt since 2700 B.C.E. (M. Gadalla, Tutankamen, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 33-34). Thus Messianic beliefs originated in Egypt and not with the Hebrews. The basis of Messianic beliefs was the divine nature that Egyptians attributed to their kings and Pharaohs, whose authority came from God. From the start of their history, even earlier than thirty centuries B.C.E., they identified their king as being the same person as Horus, the falcon god. They he developed into an incarnate version of the god, who appeared "on the throne of Horus". This concept placed the king between god and man as the necessary "intermediate".

Another important development took place from the time of the Fourth Dynasty (2700 B.C.E.), the era of the builders of the pyramids, when the king ceased to be identified with Horus and became the "human Son of Ra, the cosmic god" The king's actions were seen as merely fulfillment of his father's commands. This special relationship between god, Ra, and the king was manifested in the three principal events in the ruler's life:

- His holy birth

- His anointing at the time of his coronation
- His resurrection after his death

Answer for yourself: Does this not sound remotely familiar with the pattern for the "Jesus Story" in our New Testament?

Thus we see that "the word 'Messiah' comes from the Hebrew verb 'to anoint', which itself is derived from the Egyptian word messeh, 'the holy crocodile'. This is the original source of the word "Messiah". It was with the fat of the messeh that the Pharaoh's sister-brides anointed their husbands on marriage where these Pharaohs became the rightful heir and ruler of Egypt (Sir Laurence Gardner, "The Hidden History of Jesus and the Holy Grail" (from a lecture given at the Ranch, Yelm, Washington, 30 April 1997).

As the letter "s" in Egyptian is equivalent to "sh" in Hebrew and Aramaic, it becomes evident that the Biblical word "Messiah" originated from "Mesheeh", the ancient Egyptian word signifying the ritual of anointing Egyptian Kings and Pharaohs. Thus "the Christ/Messiah" means "the anointed one, who is the king". As such Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and his successor Tutankhamun was also Christ, the Messiah (M.Gadalla, Tutankhamen, The Living Image Of The Lord, p. 33-34).

The final decisive event in the Pharaohs' life was his death and resurrection: "just as coronation enabled a man to enter the world of the divine, so upon his death he ceased to belong to the human world" (Morenz, Egyptian Religion, p. 38). From then on the king was believed to have been united with the gods with whom he shared eternal spiritual existence: "Evidence of this belief is afforded by 'becoming Osiris' whereby the king entered the eternal nature of this god and, instead of just acting analogously as at first, acquired an identity of existence with him" (Ibid., p. 39). Thus we read in the Old Testament about the Israelites waiting for their "anointed Messiah", this could mean only that they were waiting for a king to rule them, unite them, and defeat their enemies. The Messiah, like Osiris, had to die before he could be a Redeemer, and it is the hope that the king, Son of God, met his death but was resurrected and could give his followers the prospect of eternal life with him. This Egyptian idea, alien to the early Israelites, cold not have been accepted by them before their kingly Messiah had lived and met his death (Tutankhamun). It was the prophet Isaiah who first introduced the idea of the Messiah as a Redeemer in the character of the Servant, who thus became a Savior of the world; the precise concept used in the later Gospels for the role of "Jesus/Joshua" which was taken from Tutankhamun. The very idea of Christ being the Redeemer confirms that he had already lived his historical life and died (A. Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 152-153).

It follows that the word "Essa" is the Arabic name for "Jesus" and the only one used in the Koran. "Essa" was also the name used for Jesus by the early Egyptian Christians in the Coptic Egpyptian language in the first century A.D. The first followers of Essa (Jesus) were called the Essenes (the owners of the found Dead Sea Scrolls). Philo Judaeus, who wrote the earliest account of this Jewish sect around 30 A.D., called them "Essaeans" from the Greek "Essaios" but stated that the word was of non-Greek origin. It was recognized that the word "Essene" must have had a Semitic origin, which is "Essa". "Essaioi" would therefore mean "a follower of Essa". Now the meaning of "Essa" and the "Essenes" were intentionally concealed becausethe Essenes, as the followers of Essa (Jesus) existed before the time allotted to the assumed historical Jesus during the Roman time period. This is very problematic if this "Essa" or this "Jesus" had existed long before the time he was supposed to have lived in the first century (M.Gadalla, Tutankhamen, The Living Image Of The Lord, p. 34).

Now again pay close attention. The names "Joshua" (Ye-ho-shua in Hebrew) and "Jesus" (Ye-shua) in its short form", have the SAME MEANING, which is: Yahweh (the Lord) is salvation or "the Lord is salvation".

Answer for yourself: Who is this "Lord"?

Now when we get to the Greek text of the Bible it gets confusing because the Greek reports both names as "Jesus". The KJV Bible and many of the early Church Fathers of the second and third centuries A.D. refer to "Joshua" and "Jesus" as one and the same person!

Answer for yourself: Were they historically the same person? Have we forgotten this knowledge today? Was this "Joshua/Jesus" known in Egypt as the "Lord who is salvation" and was he known as a historical person known as the Egyptian Messiah who was both identified as both Akhen-aten and Tutankh-aten, his successor?

Wow...time to set down and catch your breath.

Answer for yourself: Was the death of Tutankhamun where he was pieced in the side and hung on a tree at the bottom of Sinai the prototype for all other "Jesus/Joshua" stories as they traveled down through history? Did this story become a "prototype" or "motif" for all other "hoped-for" messiahs and "Lords of salvation" and find its culmination in the "Jesus Story" of the New Testament following the death of the Essenes' Teacher of Righteousness who was their "Joshua/Jesus" as well? Have we finally found the "historical Jesus/Joshua" but in a different time than expected?

No wonder the first prophecy of a "savior" given to Israel, the Hebrew offspring of Egypt and the followers of Akhenaten and worshipers of Adonai/Aten who later became their incorporeal YHWH was through Egypt as chronicled by Isaiah in chapter 19 verse 20:

Isa 19:20 20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. (KJV)

There have been many "Joshua/Jesus" down through history. In some Talmudic passages, Jesus is named "Ben Pandira" (the son of Pandira). Since the Jews do not agree that the New Testament depiction of Jesus is the Son of God, they have historically suggested that Pandira was a lover, not the husband, of Mary.

Answer for yourself: What lies behind the "Ben Pandi-ra" story? Ever heard of Ra, the God of Egypt? Should we expect to find again an Egyptian meaning behind this Jewish story of Pandi-ra? Yes and are not disappointed.

Pandira is a corrupt Hebrew form of an Egyptian royal term. The Hebrew "Pa-ndi-ra", in its original form, is "Pa-ntr-ra" (pronounced Pa-neter-ra). Here again we are confronted with the Egyptian word "Neter" which was the Egyptian way to express their Divine Concepts concerning God the Creator. It appears that behind so much of Judeo-Christianity we have Egyptian origins for the religious concepts we read today. We know "Ben" means "son". Then Ben Pandira, as such, means "Son of God" or "Son of the neter (god) Ra). All Egyptian Kings and Pharaohs since 3000 B.C.E. had the title, Son of Ra including Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and his relative and successor Tutankhamun. (M. Gadalla, Tutankamen, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35-36).

Answer for yourself: Then if, for example, Tutankh-aten, the relative and successor of the Biblical Moses, as seen from his name was the "Image of the Living Lord" and understanding the efforts at reconciliation he initiated during his rule then is it a stretch to see that he was in reality the "Joshua" (or Jesus) or "Lord of salvation" hoped for by all of Egypt? Then was Tutankhamun the very essence of what the words "Joshua/Jesus" have come to mean today? Yes he is.

Then, Ben Pandira (Son of Ra) identifies our Egyptian "Joshua/Jesus" as an Egyptian Pharaoh and King. The title "Son of Ra" is engraved on Tutankamen's stele, which was found in the Karnak Temple in 1905 (Ibid).

As seen the word messiah is not only from Egyptian origin but derives from the ritual anointing of a Pharaoh that was an essential part of the coronation ceremony (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 152-155). In the wake of his father's self-imposed exile when he fled attempts on his life we find that historically that Tutankhamun was indeed the messiah of those followers who had gone with Akhenaten into exile, and their main source of protection and provision in the Sinai desert as well as their hope for peace and reconciliation with other religious factions in Egypt. He also was their only hope of being able to eventually return to their homes in Egypt. In such a regard Tutankhamun was their "deliverer" and "savior".

This hope ended with the unexpected death of Tutankhamun when he was at most twenty years old.

Interestingly in the Bible, the father of Joshua is named as Nun. This is the only person having this name in the Bible.

Answer for yourself: Who is this "Nun"?

Not surprising if you have studied Egyptian religion one finds that Nun was among the most ancient of Egyptian deities and was associated with the primordial waters of chaos of both the Egyptian and Hebrew creation stories (Pinch, Magic in Ancient Egypt, 26).

Answer for yourself: Is this Nun connected in any way with the New Testament Christ Jesus? Yes it is. Nun later came to be a symbol of Christ, i.e., the fish, which is the traditional symbol of Christianity and the age of Pisces when the religion of Jesus Christ arose (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.56).

Earlier in this article we dealt with the similarities between the words "Joshua" and "Jesus". More needs to be said about this.

Answer for yourself: Is Tutankhamun associated also with the "Old Testament Jesus" whose name can be read as "Joshua"? Yes as we saw above but there is more.

Let us not forget that it is Joshua who is said to have been Moses' "aide since his youth" (Numbers 11:28). When Moses fled with his followers to the Sinai, it is Joshua who suddenly appears to support him. It is Joshua who is summoned to take men and fight on Moses' behalf as stated in Exodus 33:12-17 (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 56). It is Joshua who ascends Mount Sinai with Moses to receive the commandments of God (Ibid., p. 57). It is Joshua who enters and remains in the "tent of meeting" where Moses goes to speak with "the Lord" as recorded in Exodus 33:7-11 (Ibid., 58, 68). And "the day on which Moses came down from Mount Sinai," (Ibid., p. 58).

That an Israelite leader was killed at Sinai runs throughout Israelite history. The identity of the victim has been obscured, however, by an elaborate attempt to hide the true facts that such a one was King Tutankhamun.

Answer for yourself: How can we be sure of this effort to deceive us as to the identity of this slain one at Sinai?

This is particularly clear from a chapter in the Book of Numbers. The story in Numbers follows an account of how Israel was locked in combat with Moab and Midian (tribes living to the south and east of the Dead Sea and in Sinai) and Balaam's prediction of a victory over the Moabites. It goes on to relate how a number of Israelites began "to commit whoredom" (Numbers 25:1) with Moabite women, who invited them to "the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods" (Numbers 25:2). This, it is said, angered the Lord (Numbers 25:3). Then "one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand; And he went after the man of Israel into the tent (Tabernacle), and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman" (Numbers 25:6-8).

For these actions, Phinehas is presented to us as a hero. As a result, a "plague" that had cost the lives of twenty-four thousand people was brought to an end, and the Lord spoke to Moses, saying: "Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them, that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy. Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace; And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel" (Numbers 25:11-13). A few verses later the victims are identified as minor figures - Zimri and Cozbi, the son and daughter respectively of two chief houses.

Answer for yourself: Did you see any problems with the above verse? Are there signs that this verse has been subjected to some priestly sleight-of-hand in the editing in order to cover up what had actually happened? Well there are 4 problems as I see it.

- First of all an ordinary Israelite would not have taken a foreign woman into the inner room of the Tabernacle, where only a king or high priest was allowed;
- There is no mention of the man in this case worshipping another god;
- Making love to a woman was not punishable by death;
- Moses, the Israelite leader, did not give any orders for action against the man, and, if the male victim was a minor figure, why would it require revenge in the form of the death of twenty-four thousand innocent people?

Scholars over time have commented that despite the efforts of the priests to suppress the sordid story, it nevertheless lived on in prophetic circles. It is clear that, as what is described as a plague is mentioned only after Phinehas had committed his killing, it was a punishment for the assassination, not for consorting with foreign women. Paul had this in mind when, after indicating that Christ was present with the Israelites in Sinai, he went on to say: "But with many of them God was not well pleased. . . and fell in one day three and twenty thousand" (I Corinthians, 10:5,8). Not only that but this very understanding is reinforced by the evidence available from the Dead Sea Scrolls. The Commentary on Habakkuk, one of the Qumran texts, which tells us that, after the Wicked Priest had killed the Teacher of Righteousness, the (the Teacher) appeared before them to swallow them up.

Answer for yourself: Was this "wicked priest" a reference to to the original Phinehas who was known for a killing at Sinai?

Answer for yourself: Was this a "literal resurrection" or a "spiritual revelation" or "unveiling" of the slain Teacher by others?

Answer for yourself: Was this wicked Priest the historical Phinehas?

Answer for yourself: Who was then this historical "Teacher of Righteousness" in Egypt that later provided the "prototype" for the later Essene Teacher of Righteousness?

Answer for yourself: What does "swallow up" mean? It is a Hebrew metaphor for "do away with" or "kill". As for the appearance of the Teacher after death, "the Hebrew verb used here may also be translated as 'he revealed himself to them'; thus indicating a spiritual rather than a historical experience.

Ernest Sellin, a German biblical scholar, had found textual evidence to suggest that an Israelite leader was murdered in Sinai, and Sigmund Freud thought this leader was Moses. The Israelites, he thought, killed Moses as they resented his strict teachings. Now hold onto your seats. Scholars have been able, however, to identify the assassinated leader as Joshua the son of Nun, successor of Moses and we have identified historically once knowing the true identity of Moses as Akhenaten that "this follower" was his successor Tutankhamun. It was Phinehas, the priest of Moses, whom scholars have identified with Pa-Nehesy the high priest of Akhenaten, who killed Joshua. While the Israelites were still in the land of Goshen in Egypt, Pa-Nehesy killed Tutankhamun at the foot of Mount Sinai, as he regarded him as a heretic who allowed paganism's return by reversing many of the religious reforms of Akhenaten in his absence from Egypt.

Further support for the theory that the "plague" which followed the Sinai assassination was a form of punishment for the murder of Tutankhamun is also to be found in the Book of Hosea, where this punishment is said to have been carried out by Ephraim (the Egyptian Aye):

When Ephraim spake trembling" - the sense here, given in other translations, is that "he caused others to tremble" and that "he exalted himself in Israel" (Hosea 13:1).

There is another problem. It is also rather curious that Phinehas should have been rewarded with "the covenant of a perpetual priesthood to him and his descendants after him" when we know from the previous book in the pentateuch, Leviticus, that this promise had already been made to Aaron and his descendants.

These events occurred before the Exodus and Moses was not himself killed until two decades later. He was thirty-four or thirty-five when he fled to the safety of Sinai after his abdication in 1361 B.C.E. There, according to the Old Testament, he formed an alliance with the Midianites, who are to be identified in Egyptian history as the Shasu, the nomadic bedouin tribes of Sinai, some of whom were converted to worship of the Aten. So the death of this slain one at Sinai occurs before the Exodus.

Before we discuss the identity of this slain one in detail and the connection between "Joshua/Jesus" let us set the stage for what is going on back in Egypt at the time of these events at Sinai.

Back in Egypt in the meantime, Horemheb, the Pharaoh of the Oppression, had turned the area around the fortified frontier city of Zarw, where Moses had been born, into a prison. There Horemheb gathered the mass of Akhenaten's followers, including the Israelites, who were related to Akhenaten and many of which were his followers and worshippers of the Aten and whom had embraced his monotheistic beliefs, and a variety of criminals, who lived in villages outside the city walls. Horemheb appointed Pa-Ramses, the head of his army, as mayor of Zarw as well as giving him responsibility for the local military garrison. It was Pa-Ramses, on Horemheb's orders, who inflicted harsh labour on the Israelites and other prisoners by forcing them to rebuild Zarw as well as a new residence for himself, known later as Pi-Ramses, the starting point of the Exodus, according to the Old Testament. Pi-Ramses also became the main residence in the Eastern Delta for Pharaohs of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Egyptian Dynasties.

The death of Horemheb left Egypt without a legitimate heir to the Eighteenth Dynasty. Pa-Ramses, by now an old man, therefore prepared to claim the throne for himself as the first ruler of a new dynasty, the 19th Dynasty. Moses, long after the death of this "slain one", had been in hiding in the wilderness for slightly more than a quarter of a century, decided to try to reclaim his throne from Pa-Ramses, who is described in the Old Testament as "the king who knew not Joseph" or "who disregarded Joseph". He made his way to Zarw where his challenge as the rightful ruler had to be decided by Egyptian priests and elders. With the aid of his sceptre topped by a brass serpent, the symbol of pharaonic authority, Moses was able to establish his identity as the son of Amenhotep III, and the Egyptian priests and elders, who are called "magicians" in the Bible, accepted his claim. However, Ramses, because of his military authority, was too powerful to be overthrown and became the first ruler of the Nineteenth Dynasty by a kind of coup d'etat. At this point, realizing that his life was at stake, Moses fled again to the safety of Sinai, taking his followers with him, including the Israelite tribes, from the villages outside the walls of Zarw. This was the biblical Exodus.

Moses and his followers made their way to Sinai via the marshy area to the south of Zarw and north of Lake Temsah and present-day Ismailia. This watery route was chosen to hinder pursuit: Egyptian chariots would become stuck in the mud whereas the Israelites, travelling on foot, would be able to cross safely. This is the possible time and location for the biblical account of the pursuing Pharaoh who was drowned. Egyptian sources provide no evidence of this event, but it is certain that the short reign of Ramses I (c. 1335-1333 B.C.) came to an end upon his death at this very time.

News of the death of his father quickly reached Seti I and Seti I, the son and successor of Ramses I, did not even wait for his late father's mummification, a process that took seventy days, before marching against Moses, the Israelites and the Shasu. He met and defeated them at many locations on the Horns road as well as in central Sinai. There was great slaughter among the Shasu, large numbers of whom were also captured and taken back to Egypt to be sacrificed at the feet of the god Amun-Ra at the Karnak temple. It is likely that Moses was killed by Seti himself in the course of these military operations.

The introduction of Ephraim, whom many Egyptian scholars today identified as Aye, into the story of the slaughter that followed the assassination of the Israelite leader in Sinai, is a further indication that these events took place between the flight of Akhenaten (Moses) to the safety of Sinai after his abdication and his return to Egypt a quarter of a century later in a vain attempt to reclaim his throne. Aye disappeared from the Egyptian scene in 1348 B.C.E., thirteen years before Ramses I came to the throne. During the reign of the young king Tutankhamun, when he was the king's vizier and Master of the King's Horses, Commander of the Chariots and Chief of the Bowmen, and again during his own reign, he was the most powerful man in Egypt, and thus in a position to inflict heavy punishment on those responsible for the death of this slain one at Sinai (the Joshua/Jesus) (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 64-66).

Answer for yourself: Who was this "slain one" at Sinai?

Taking a closer look at some of the events described in the Book of Exodus we find further indications of the true identity of the Israelite leader who met his death at the foot of Mount Sinai. At the time that Moses made his first journey, accompanied by Joshua (remember the name Joshua is interchangeable with the name Jesus), up the mountain to receive the Ten Commandments, there is an indication that a measure of discord existed as a result of the behavior of the occupants of the Israelite camp below. The Lord is quoted as saying to Moses: "I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiffnecked people" (Exodus 32:9).

Answer for yourself: What is suspiciously absent from the account of Moses' second visit to the mountain to replace the broken tablets from his first visit? There is no mention of the name of Joshua (Jesus) accompanying Moses. This is all the more problematic considering that we also have the suggestion that Moses met and talked with the Lord on the mountain. Osman states that this is a "somewhat clumsy attempt to remove Joshua from the scene, although we are at the same time assured that 'Joshua. . . did not depart from the tent (Tabernacle)'".

Answer for yourself: When did this occur? The admonition to Moses by the Lord on this occasion that "seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread" also echoes the story both in the Bible and the Talmud that this slain one, this "Joshua/Jesus" met his death on the eve of the Passover (the Jewish day lasted from one sunset to the next).

Once Moses returned to the foot of Mount Sinai, the attempt to remove Joshua (Jesus) from the scene breakdowns. Moses, whose face shone and was "vailed" when he spoke to the Israelites, is depicted as acting as a go-between, talking to the Israelites outside the Tabernacle, wearing his veil, but removing the veil when he enters the Tabernacle.

Answer for yourself: Who was he talking to inside this sacred shrine? We have already been told that Joshua (Jesus) "did not depart from the tent (Tabernacle)". Yet it is clear from the sequence of events that the person within the Tabernacle at these times had a higher authority than that of Moses, otherwise Moses would not have been acting as a go-between. In Osman's opinion, as well as many others, when Moses was the acknowledged leader of the Israelites, who could the person in the Tabernacle have been other than the "Joshua/Jesus" otherwise known as the reigning Egyptian Messiah, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun in his father's absence

Finally, it is also strange that, from this point, both Joshua and Phinehas disappear from the Exodus account, despite the promise to the latter that he and his descendants would enjoy the covenant of an everlasting priesthood. Yet both surface again later as part of the elaborate priestly attempt to conceal what actually happened at the foot of Mount Sinai in the fourteenth century B.C. The Messiah had been killed and hung on a tree at the foot of Sinai for his attempts at reconciliation between his father and the Amen-Ra Priesthood (reversing the restrictions imposed upon the Amen-Ra Priesthood and reinstating the worship of the neteru in Egypt in his father's absence).

Well it becomes rather plain now having the historical facts from Egyptian history, seeing the deceptions in the Biblical text, and the hidden meanings behind the names of Tutankhamun, Joshua, and Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware now in light of the archeological evidence that the story of the conquering of the Promised Land by Joshua is pure fiction that that the true Biblical Joshua is said to have been slain at Sinai? Startling at it might appear at first it is Joshua, not Zimri, whom the Talmud says was slain by Phineas in that same tent of meeting (Numbers 25:6-8), not for adultery with a foreign woman, but for spiritual adultery with forbidden gods (Ibid., 64-65).

Answer for yourself: And what was this "spiritual adultery" that was responsible for the death of "Joshua/Jesus/Tutankhamun"? Was it a reference to Tutankhamen's reversal of the religious reforms instituted by his father Akhenaten after Akhenaten's absence from Egypt in Tutankhamun's efforts at religious reconciliation between the Atenists and the Amen-Ra Priesthood?

The name of Akhenaten's "Chief Servitor" and "Second Priest of the Aten" was Panehasy (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 48, 148) which is the Egyptian equivalent of Phineas which this Talmud states killed "Jesus/Joshua" at Sinai (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 63). Excavation of Panehasy's house in the city of Akhenaten has revealed that he and Akhenaten were close friends as well as being completely devoted to the cult of the Aten (Aldred, Akhenaten). Osman, in his books, suggests that the 24,000 Israelites who were said to have died on the day of Phineas' zealous deed, did not die of a plague, but perished at the hands of Aye (Ephraim) who came for the body of his slain Pharaoh and "Son of God", Tutankhamun, and to meet out swift retribution for his murder (Osman, House of the Messiah, 65-66). As we see it was because of compromising the true faith of Aten that in reality both Akhenaten and Tutankhamun (the Joshua/Jesus) was killed.

In the book of Isaiah (literally the book of Jesus), the Messiah is spoken of in both past and future tenses (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 44-56). A straightforward interpretation is that the Messiah had already lived, was killed, but was expected to return to reclaim his rightful place on the throne of David (Thutmose III). The followers of Moses (Akhenaten) and their descendants were divided over the killing of Tutankhamun (Joshua/Jesus). Those represented by the author(s) of the book of Isaiah believed that the murder of the Messiah was the cause of God's punishment, and the reason for their being exiled from Israel to Babylon as they had previously been expelled from Egypt. In contrast, the compilers of the Talmud state that the killing of "Jesus (the Nazarene)" was justified because he "practiced magic and led Israel astray" (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 26, 34). Statements in the Talmud also confirm that Jesus had lived and died in more ancient times, and more specifically in the time of Moses, himself. The Talmud states that it was not the priest Caiaphas who was responsible for the death of Jesus (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 25), but that the priest "Pinhas (Osman, Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, p. 172, 185) killed him [Balaam/Jesus]" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 34, 26-29). In the Talmud the names "Jesus and Balaam" are sometimes synonymous (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 35). Let us not lose sight of the fact that Balaam was also recognized in the Talmud as having been a true prophet sent by God for the benefit of the Gentiles (Cohen, Everyman's Talmud). The Talmud relates that Balaam, himself "a descendant of rulers and princes" and a contemporary of Moses, was appointed to oversee the king's affairs while he was away, but had usurped the throne after the king's departure (Osman, Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, 22-23). This is identical to the historical events surrounding Akhenaten and Tutankhamun. Although Tutankhamun (Balaam of the Talmud story) still worshiped the Aten, he was seen as ruling illegitimately in Akhenaten's place. Furthermore he was regarded by the loyal followers of Akhenaten that he had committed blasphemy by restoring the very gods of Egypt that Akhenaten (Moses) had prohibited when he restored the Amen-Ra priesthood and reopened Egypt's temples and by condoning the ancient forms of magic and mythology associated with their cults (Osman, House of the Messiah, 177).

Answer for yourself: Why is so important? Because according to the Laws of Moses this was a crime punishable by death and despite the status of Balaam/Jesus, he was not to be "spared" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 35) A fracture that penetrated Tutankhamun's skull, and the bone chip found inside the skull itself, indicates that Tutankhamun did die from an injury caused by a spear or arrow (The Complete Tutankhamun, p. 33, 114, 117-118). The mummified skull of Tutankhamun was found completely shaved, but with a short amount of stubble. It has been interpreted that his head may have been shaved as a "preliminary treatment" for the head wound, and that Tutankhamun survived long enough after the injury to grow a short stubble. However, another interpretation is that his head was already shaved at the time of the injury. Ritual shaving of the head was a traditional and mandatory practice among Egyptian priests of that time.

As Pharaoh, Tutankhamun officiated as a priest of the highest rank. Centuries later, the apostle Paul had a vision of Jesus the Nazarene (not Jesus of Nazareth as it is commonly mistranslated in the Book of Acts (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 31).

Acts 22:8 8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. (KJV)

Paul also had his own head shaved (Acts 21:24-26) after which he was arrested and accused of being a leader of the "sect of the Nazarenes" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 30-31). This was a charge that he did not deny (Acts 24:5-6,14).

After the untimely death of Tutankhamun, Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) buried Tutankhamun in the tomb he was having prepared for himself (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 299).

Answer for yourself: Does this sound vaguely familiar as related to the "Jesus/Joshua Story"?

This is the source of the statement about the Messiah in the Book of Isaiah, "he was assigned a grave with the wicked, but with the rich in his death"(Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 162).

This is also the source for the account of the burial of "Joshua/Jesus" in the New Testament account:

Matt 27:59-60 59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. (KJV)

Aside from the Pharaoh, Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) was the wealthiest and most powerful person in Egypt as was his father Yuya (Joseph) before him. After three days, and according to Egyptian tradition, Aye returned to the tomb and presided at the "opening of the mouth" ceremony at which Tutankhamun was believed (as were all Pharaohs) to be resurrected to eternal life in the afterworld. The identification of Tutankhamun as one source of the Biblical story of Joshua (and archetype for Jesus of Nazareth) is even more clear when passages in the New Testament are re-read in that light. It explains the apparently literal meeting of Jesus (Joshua) with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 36-37, 57, 172).

Matt 17:2-3 2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. 3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. (KJV)

It explains the necessity of Jesus' titles of Messiah and Son of God (Ibid., p. 151, 170). It explains the story of the rich burial given to Jesus by Joseph of Arimathaea. It explains why Jesus had to remain in the tomb for parts of three days before his "resurrection." It explains why Jesus raised Lazarus (derived from Osiris) (Osman, House of the Messiah) from the dead in order to demonstrate his identification with Osiris and belief in the after-life. It explains the necessity of Jesus' holy birth (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 151-152, 158) through Mary (Merit) and the Holy Spirit, and a host of other events and symbolism in the life of Jesus as described in the New Testament. Tutankhamun was revered as a god both in life and in death. Although he was tragically killed, the Israelite prophets proclaimed that he would one day return and retake his rightful place on the throne of his father David (Thutmose III). This throne had formerly been sacrificed in his attempt to reconcile a divided nation. Osman's theory is that when the Messianic Hope was all but extinguished, the meaning of Tutankhamun's sacrificial death and resurrection was given a new context for a new era in the 1st Century A.D. story of Jesus of Nazareth (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 72-73). After all it was the beginning of a new age of Pisces and the closing of the earlier age of Aries. In this form, it would come to represent a sacrificial atonement not only for Israel, but for the sins of the whole world. The tomb of the tragic figure of Tutankhamun, the last of his line, and source of the Messianic hope, came to light in 1922. The art and contents of the tomb included many items which would later become associated with Catholic ritual and symbolism (Ibid., p. 71, 172-174). Other material found in the tomb confirms that his death was in the spring (with burial 70 days later in early summer), the traditional time of the Jewish Passover (Ibid.). He is the only Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty whose mummy still remains in the Valley of the Kings. Today, over one million people file through his crumbling tomb (Romer, The Rape of Tutankhamun) and past his divested and decaying mummy each year. It is now possible to more fully appreciate the legacy that he and his forefathers have left us.

One more thing needs to be said before we close. In the tomb of Tutankhamun there is a unique scene, not found in any other Egyptian burial, representing the Trinity of Christ. The profound significance of the wall-painting cannot be underestimated in its importance linking Tutankhamun with the later "Jesus" portrayed in the New Testament; especially in the light that they are both called "the Son of God". In this tomb there is a painting of the burial chamber on the north wall which is the strongest pictorial evidence linking Tutankhamun and Christ. The painting is divided into three separate scenes:

- The first scene on the right shows Aye, already crowned as the king's successor, but nevertheless officiating as a priest dressed in the leopard skin, performing the ritual of "the opening of the mouth" for resuscitation of the dead Tutankhamun, who is shown as a risen Osiris
- The middle scene shows Tutankhamun entering the heavenly realm of the gods and being welcomed there by the sky goddess Nut.
- The scene on the left of the north wall shows three different representations of Tutankhamun linked as one person. On the left of the scene stood Tutankhamun as the risen Osiris, with a second Tutankhamun facing him as the ruling king, Horus. Behind him is a third Tutankhamun depicted as his Ka. The most remarkable feature of this scene is the fact that the risen Osiris, although shown in the conventional mummified form with his hands folded across his chest, is reaching out to touch Horus, as is his Ka.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? What I have just described is that Tutankhamun is depicted as father, son and spirit-the same relationship that we find in the Christian Trinity of the three persons in one God-Father, Son and Holy Spirit which is associated in the New Testament with "Jesus/Joshua" whom as we have seen Egyptian history defines as Tutankhamun. This belief in the Trinity is finally established as a Christian orthodox belief after much acrimonious debate during the first four centuries of the Christian era but it finds it origin with Egypt as does most of all religions today.

tutankhamun...was he the prototype for all later historical jesus stories?

THE COVER UP OF THE KILLING OF THE EGYPTIAN MESSIAH IN THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES

Before one begins to read this article it is mandatory that one reads the prior article concerning Tutankhamun.

The killing of "Joshua/Jesus" as mentioned in the previous article on Tutankhamun was always remembered by those who believed in him and by those who later became his followers. The Hebrews never forgot this tragic event both in its memory and in the writings of its sacred religious texts.

Answer for yourself: How do we know this for sure? Simply because of the connection between the Festival of the Passover and the Day of Atonement being at first connected to the same day in the Spring at the Vernal Equinox. More on this later in this article as we trace the separation of these two "events" in the history of the Hebrew Atenists following their departure from Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Are beginning to see the major importance that the death of the Son of God, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun had in the memory of the Hebrews and the big part it played in the later development of their religious beliefs and practices?

What we find when we begin to dig deeply into this subject matter is that the official Amen-Ra priesthood of Egypt as well as the later Jewish priesthoods after leaving Egypt subsequently made deliberate efforts to conceal both the killing of this Egyptian Messiah and the date when it took place. The Egyptian Amen-Ra priesthood even went so far as to make every effort possible to remove his name from every monument and record in Egypt as they had his father Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses).

Answer for yourself: And why was this done?

For those not familiar with ancient Egyptian history, Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, (1353 B.C.E. to 1335 B.C.E.), a pharaoh of the New Kingdom, abandoned the worship of Egypt's old gods (neteroo) in favor of just one - the Aten, the sun-god as represented by the sun-disk with its rays bestowing life on the earth. Akhenaten ("Aten is content") forbade the worship of any other god besides the Aten, making him history's first official monotheist. What led him to make such a radical and revolutionary change to ancient Egyptian life has never been fully explained by historians, although theories abound about the need to rein in the powerful old priesthood of Egypt's chief god, Amun ("the hidden one"), by instituting a new religion with Akhenaten himself as head priest. Akhenaten's name, together with that of his queen, Nefertiti ("a beautiful woman has arrived"), and his heir and successor, Tutankhamun, were erased from all buildings, monuments and records after their deaths as ancient Egypt reverted back to the worship of their old gods. Akhenaten was referred to simply as the Heretic Pharaoh, to be better forgotten by the ancient Egyptian masses. It was as if they had never existed, until archeologists such as the famous Howard Carter re-discovered them and archeology has continued since that momentous day to reveal the secrets that lay behind these "Biblical characters"; otherwise known as Moses and "Joshua/Jesus".

After Moses and his closest followers left Egypt they observed in celebration, as the Lord commanded them, the feast of the Passover:

Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days. . . in the time appointed of the month Abib (Nisan); for in it thou camest out from Egypt (Exodus, 23:15).

Answer for yourself: Has it every dawned upon you yet that this "Passover Festival" already existed in Egypt long before the time of Moses? If one was to study Egyptian religion and make note of its "astronomical" basis and how it revolved around the Equinoxes and Solstices then it would not be surprising to see that at this time, the Vernal/Spring Equinox, that Egypt recognized "new beginnings" which falls in line exactly with the theme of the Passover. Moses says:

Exod 12:2 2 This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you. (KJV)

It will also dawn upon you the more that you study Egyptian religion and make comparisons with the later development of Judaism that the "meaning" of this Spring Festival at the Vernal Equinox in Egypt has had its "meaning" changed over time and it has been "reinterpreted" today through the Israelite people and the events surrounding the establishing of this people as a separate nation from Egypt. In so doing we come to see how the original meaning of the "Passover" has been changed and reinterpreted and connected with the "beginning" of the Hebrew nation as a new and free people under the leadership of Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses.

Now what comes next is very important. The Passover was originally an Egyptian spring festival where mankind gave thanks to God for the new beginning of the harvest year. In this sanctified time God was blessed for providing for mankind by providing them the ability to experience His life through the sharing of His love and nurture through the Sun and the resulting photosynthesis that produced the food necessary to feed all of God's creatures; including man. This special time was observed for seven days, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first day of Abib, Babylonian Nisan, which later comes to mark the first month of the Israelite year. This was recognized as "the new beginning" with God where the cycles of the year begin again: Vernal Equinox, Summer Solstice, Autumn Equinox, and Winter Solstice. Connected with the Vernal Equinox, otherwise known as the Passover, is the death of Tutankhamun or as we have come to recognize from the previous article the "Joshua/Jesus". Following the death of this Egyptian Messiah, the Son of God, on the eve of the Passover at the foot of Sinai, on the fourteenth day of Abib, the Israelites were commanded by Moses to do something special.

Answer for yourself: Do you know what it was? These Hebrews offered, in accordance with the instructions and commandment of Moses, a sacrificial lamb in atonement for the killing of their Messiah (Tutankhamun) and asked for Gods forgiveness:

Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd. . thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even (evening), at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt (Deuteronomy, 16:2,6).

Very important for us to realize is the fact that in the beginning the "Passover" as given to the Hebrews following the death of "the Son of God" carried with it a responsibility for "atonement" which today it does not. We will see shortly why that is so.

We jump now to the Dead Sea Scrolls for a very enlightening piece of information. In the Dead Sea Scrolls we find that the Essenes, took the view that they had nothing to feel guilty about concerning the death of Tutankamun, the Son of God, since they were not responsible for his death. In so doing they then looked upon this "slain Messiah/Christ" as their "sacrificial lamb" and thus they did not offer a sacrifice of atonement and this explains why they rejected the sacrificial system of Jerusalem and the sacrifices made there. For them the historical "slain Son of God", the Pharaoh Tutankhamun, was their "sacrificial lamb" and no further sacrifice was needed on Passover.

Instead, on the same day, the fourteenth day of Abib, they held instead a Messianic Banquet in anticipation of the hoped for return of their dead Teacher of Righteousness at the end of the world when he would celebrate the meal with them. This Messianic Banquet bears a strong resemblance to the New Testament's account of a Last Supper when, on supposedly on Thursday, the eve of the Crucifixion, the Christ is said to have instituted the Christian sacrament of Communion.

Answer for yourself: Was these events, as taken from the "slain" Essene Teacher of Righteousness remolded and given new life in the "Jesus Stories"?

Answer for yourself: What else should we note? Simply that they both were "slain anointed ones" or "Christs/Messiahs".

According to the Qumran texts the priest. . . [will bless the first of the bread and wine and will stretch forth his hand on the bread first. And afterwards the Messiah will stretch forth his hands upon the bread, and then all the Congregation of the Community will give blessings, each according to his rank. And after this prescription shall they act for every assembly where at least ten men are assembled."

Answer for yourself: What else should we notice from history?

Christians, too, later rid themselves of animal sacrifice because they regarded "Jesus/Joshua" himself as the sacrifice:

For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many (Mark, 10:45)

Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world (John, 1:29).

Answer for yourself: Should we not expect that after this group of Essene Priests "join" the first century "Jesus/Joshua Movement" that they would bring with them not only their rejection of Temple Sacrifices and have an alternate "sacrificial lamb" as found in their "Slain Son Of God" who just happens to find his origin in the killing of Tutankhamun, the Son of God?

Acts 6:7 7 And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. (KJV)

With the influx of these Essenes into this "renewed" faith (we call it Christianity today) we find that they only renewed the previous "Joshua/Jesus" theology that they had from Qumran. No we no longer have to wonder why such efforts were made to keep these Dead Sea Scrolls from the light of day at they challenge both the Jewish and Christian perspectives of both their religious histories. Nothing it seems is at it appears when viewed from traditional Christian perspectives when we factor in the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Nag Hammadi Library (Gnostics).

After the death of Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, and the entry of the Hebrews into the Promised Land, the Israelites spent centuries as small groups, scattered around Canaan without any central authority or central place of worship. During these years, as the great majority of Israelites forsook the God of Moses (the Aten) for Canaanite and Phoenician deities, the Passover feast was not observed except by a few people who celebrated it privately. This changed after the Babylonian exile in the sixth century B.C. In exile, the priestly scribes put down in their present form the books of the Pentateuch which had originated at the time of Moses. Some of them gave the date of the Passover as the first month (Tishri), others as Nisan. As a result, for purposes of the calendar, Tishri (September-October), originally the seventh month of the Israelites year, became the first month of a new calendar.

Answer for yourself: How do we explain "atonement" connected with the Passover when today it is not? We already saw that following the death of Tutankhamun Moses commanded a sin offering be made at the time of the Passover for the slaying of the "Son of God". Here these two "festival" ideas are connected with the Spring and the Vernal Equinox. So we see that originally, both the Day of Atonement and Passover were observed as one feast in Abib (Nisan). But Israel will have two calendars; a civil and a religious calendar. Confusingly the previous first month now becomes the seventh month.

No separate date is given for the Day of Atonement in the feast list of Ezekiel, the priest and prophet who served in the Jerusalem Temple before its destruction by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.E. (Ezekiel, 45:18-25). However, recognizing that confusion existed about which was the right month in which to observe the two religious occasions (the old first month, Nisan, or the new first month, Tishri) Ezekiel divided the year into two parts with the religious observances of the first month repeated in the seventh.

But we are not done. Then, about half a century after the return from Babylon, the Jewish priests took advantage of the situation to establish a separate Day for Atonement removed by 7 months from the Spring Passover. While the Passover continued to be celebrated in Nisan, the originally connecting idea of "atonement" connected with the Passover was moved by the Jewish Priest to its own day 7 months later at the Autumn Equinox. Now the day for the observation for Atonement was to be observed in Tishri:

Now in the twenty and fourth day of this month (Tishri) the children of Israel were assembled with fasting, and with sackclothes, and earth upon them (Nehemiah, 9:1).

Answer for yourself: Did you catch the fact that the significance of the Day of Atonement changed when it was separated from the Passover at the Vernal/Spring Equinox and later moved to the fall of the year as the Autumn Equinox? Did you see that the need for reflection on the nation's guilt, repentance, and atonement for the slaying of the Pharaoh Tutankamun at the time of the Vernal Equinox, the Passover, was now moved to an entirely different time of the year?

Yes, it is hard to believe growing up to believing that every word in the Jewish Scriptures is "inspired, infallible, and inerrant" and wanting it to be so and then learn that the very significance of the most important day and Holy Day in the Jewish Holy Days, the Day of Atonement, had its meaning changed and today has lost it original historical meaning. Don't get me wrong; I fully support and uphold the idea of a Day of Atonement for our sins but it would have been nice if I had learned the truth behind this Holy Day without having to dig it out for twenty years when so many efforts have been made to conceal the truth behind it.

Answer for yourself: Where is God in all of this?

Whereas it had been introduced originally as a day of repentance for the killing of the Egyptian Messiah Tutankhamun, it now became the occasion for general repentance for all general sin. Well it makes sense to me and serves a moral purpose that is for sure but I wish I had been told the truth about it from the beginning and not have had to study some twenty years before I found this "hidden" tidbit of Jewish knowledge.

Today, the Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur, the most solemn day of fasting in the Jewish calendar, is observed on the tenth day of Tishri. This is the result of editors adding two passages to the Pentateuch in which they reverted to the old calendar in which Tishri had been the seventh month:

. . . on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement: it shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall afflict your souls. (Leviticus, 23:27),

" . . . ye shall have on the tenth day of this seventh month an holy convocation; and ye shall afflict your souls . . . (Numbers, 29:7).

Answer for yourself: And again, to make sure we understand this change, why was this done? This is without a doubt an attempt to cover up the crime of Phinehas of killing the Egyptian Son of God, Tutankhamun, "the real historical Joshua/Jesus" and this "cover-up" would probably have succeeded except for the Essenes working in secret to keep the memory and precepts of their Teacher of Righteousness alive until the day of his hoped-for return.

If "Joshua/Jesus", the historical Joshua died at the foot of Mount Sinai, we should not expect to hear of his being alive after this date. Note with me the fact that in the Exodus narrative Joshua disappears entirely from the scene until the last book of the Pentateuch, Deuteronomy, mentions him as the leader who succeeded Moses: And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him . . . (34:9). This is followed by an entire book devoted to a "supposed historical account" of Joshua's exploits, including the conquest of Canaan as a result of a swift military campaign at the head of the united tribes of Israel in the thirteenth century B.C. Although this account of Joshua and the conquest of Canaan under his leadership has gained popular acceptance, it is, as we shall see, a complete fiction, void of any historical validity, and simply part of the plan to cloud the circumstances surrounding his death (the death of Tutankhamun, the Son of God). It cannot be supported by either modern biblical criticism or archaeological evidence. In fact archeological evidence disproves the whole thing as a "created fiction". Israel Finkelstein, director of Tel-Aviv University's Institute of Archaeology says: "There is no archaeological evidence to support some of the Bible's most popular stories, including...Joshua's conquest of Canaan. The ancient Israelites evolved from the local Bronze Age Canaanite civilization; there was no brutal military invasion." Moreover, he argues that "King David," who made Jerusalem Israel's capital and from whose lineage the Messiah is expected to rule over a restored Nation, "has no historical support;" King David as an important leader who united the kingdoms of Judah and Israel "is fantasy"; "there is virtually no archaeological evidence that the united kingdom of David and Solomon ever existed. Now we have already seen these facts concerning the Biblical King David who in reality is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III. David's Jerusalem," he argues, was "a poor, miserable village," and that there exists no archaeological evidence for Solomon's Temple. And we have already investigated Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, and seen the archeological facts substantiating this remark as well. Now our focus must be turned to the account of Joshua in the Old Testament and we must do our own study to see for ourselves that it is basically "fiction" written to make it appear that this "Joshua/Jesus" was yet alive and in so doing hide the fact that earlier the nation of Hebrews were responsible for the killing of the "Karst/Christ", the Son of God, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun for undoing the religious reforms instituted by Akhenaten before he fled Egypt.

The Book of Joshua is the first of what are known as the Former Prophets or Historical Books. It consists of three main sections: the conquest of Canaan (chapters 1-12); division of the conquered territory between the twelve tribes of Israel (13-21); and negotiations with tribes to the east of the Jordan, followed by the covenant at Shechem (22-24). Modern biblical scholars have recognized, for example, that the military campaigns described in the opening twelve chapters do not represent a single unified campaign but are a compilation of several ancient battle stories, originally not related and some pre-dating the Israelite period; in other words they contradict discernible and reproduceable archeological evidence and Egyptian historical records which state otherwise.

Martin Noth, the German biblical scholar, was the first to expose the fact that there had been a priestly cover-up. He demonstrated in 1966 that the fifth book of the Pentateuch, Deuteronomy, and the books of the Former Prophets or Historical Books, from Joshua to Kings, are the product of a priestly editor, who became known as the Deuteronomic redactor.

Answer for yourself: When was this "doctoring" of Jewish history done? Well we have mentioned this many times and the important role that Ezra had in the "creation of Jewish history" to cover up the Jew's "Egyptian Roots". Martin Noth tells us the same things stating that this "reworking" of the religious texts was carried out during the sixth century B.C. at the time of and following the Babylonian exile.

Answer for yourself: Why is another reason why this time so important?

This was about the same time that a Jewish writer of sacred texts emerges know as the "Second" Isaiah and it is in his writings that he begins to claim that Israel's defeat, humiliation and exile of the Israel was a punishment for their killing of the Suffering Servant of the Lord, their Messiah (the Egyptian Son of God, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun).

Don't think for a moment that Israel was not divided over the killing of Tutankhamun. The blame for the Babylonian captivity of the nation of Israel, due to the killing of the Son of God Tutankamun, had to be refuted.

Answer for yourself: How was this to be done? It was so easy; simple have the Priests and "editors" write more "sacred Scripture".

Answer for yourself: What better way to refute this charge than to produce the Servant, still alive after the death of Moses and the victorious conqueror of the Promised Land? The writing of the books of Joshua and Judges and others will do this quite well.

Even Phinehas, who all the indications suggest was among the thousands said to have been slaughtered on the Day of Atonement, was made to appear alive long after Ephraim's rage and punishment of the Israel nation. In so doing Phinehas is named as one of Joshua's followers in the account of the later conquest of the Promised Land. His death was never reported and he even surfaces again in the Book of Judges, which deals with events that took place nearly three and a half centuries later:

And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it (the Ark of the Covenant) in those days saying, Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the Lord said, Go up; for tomorrow I will deliver them into thine hand (Judges 20:28).

Answer for yourself: What did this "Deuteronomic Editor" overlook in the 6th century B.C.E. that we should not?

Although more than seven centuries had passed, the Deuteronomic editor must have known of:

- The Egyptian and Jewish traditions that lay behind Isaiah's account of the death of the Suffering Servant, the Son of God, stemming from Egyptian history and the slaying of Tutankamun at Sinai
- The claim of the Talmudic rabbis that Pinhas killed this "Jesus" (remember Joshua/Jesus are interchangeable)..

Yet he chose to exclude such traditions from his work and rearranged events to suggest that Joshua was still alive at the time of the conquest of Canaan. Apart from modern biblical criticism, the archaeological evidence also makes it clear that the account of Joshua's conquest of the Promised Land as part of a swift military campaign cannot be a true recital of events as mentioned above.

It should appear to the avid student who also does his own "outside" reading into these topics that much as been concealed and disguised in both the Old and New Testament to hid the truth of "the faith" once given the Saints, this pure monotheism of the Cosmos which understood this Creator as the collection of all powers and forces that are unseen but yet revealing of this Creating Architect and Designer of this Cosmos whom we call God that speaks to us by revealing Himself and His requirement of His Creation through the laws, cycles, and patterns in the Heavens as well as in Nature around us. Because of the loss of this "gnosis" sadly our whole "Messianic" idea is distorted today as it was sifted down through history through a "guilt-ridden" Hebrew people who rejected the Aten and His Messiah and His emissaries (both Akhenaten and Tutankhamun) and remolded these many of these same Divine concepts in their modified understanding of this God whom we recognized today as YHWH. This perversion of history and existing "theology" has been carried down the halls of history and later regurgitated by Rome to us in such a way that very few of the original spiritual concepts held dear by the Ancient Spiritual Masters and understood on a metaphysical level can be recognized in their purest forms today since having been "literalized" and placed out of their historical setting. I will close by saying this and I recognize that many will not understand what I, an ex-Pastor, will say next, but my studies into Egypt and the depth of their religion over these last 6-7 years has been the most enlightening and freeing experience of my whole life. My knowledge of the God of the Cosmos has been expanded and enlarged beyond believability and my walk with this God strengthened in so many ways that eclipse my previous Christian experience. I cherish the links I have discovered between Judaism and Egyptian religion which reveal this God as understood by men like Akhenaten and Tutankhamun and His requirements of me like which Christianity never have taught with such clarity and depth. I can only hope that you travel to Egypt in your studies to find the earliest and most innocent understandings of this Creator ever given mankind and come to understand it correctly since Christianity today totally misjudges it and labels it falsely "polytheism" and "idolatry", failing to understand its depth and simplicity, when ironically it is Christianity which is guilty of both of these charges and sins.

WAS TUTANKHAMUN THE PROTOTYPE FOR THE "HISTORICAL JESUS"? #1

My ongoing search for the "historical Jesus" is finally coming to a close. I have been searching since my graduation from Seminary for the "Jesus Jesus" and not being able to find any demonstrable evidence for a Jewish Rabbi who lived in the first century in Palestine which was the "expected Messiah" I have looked almost everywhere and read and studied everything available in my efforts to find the clues that will reveal this "Jesus" as a historical personage. My search has been tedious and exhausting and fruitless. Only when I began to trace the roots of Judaism back to Egypt was I finally rewarded for my efforts all these 15 or more years for it is there, in Ancient Egypt that I finally found the "historical Jesus". The only problem is that he is only "half-Hebrew" and was a "murdered" Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty. This statement sounds almost impossible and many will begin to doubt my sanity upon reading it but let me warn the reader to not make any hasty decisions until he, like myself, has sifted through the evidence which proves without a doubt that the "historical Jesus" stories we find scattered down through history and applied to various "redeemers" had their origin with the life and death of Tutankamun in Egypt. My search for the truth behind our Bibles and the stories surrounding the "historical Jesus" that we cherish finally culminated in the necessary acquired knowledge that puts all these puzzle pieces together surrounding the "historical Jesus" where I could finally see the whole convoluted picture surrounding the "historical Jesus" of Egypt. Such a view of the evidence convinced me for certain that the identification of Pharaoh Tutankamun as the "historical Jesus" is certain. This article will give the reader the required information to see how this information was concealed from all but those with the most "inquiring" eyes and the time necessary to do the required investigation and study. Before we begin I want the reader to view a cover of a book I read many years ago by Richard Cassaro entitled The Deeper Truth. In this we have the figure of an Egyptian Pharaoh and a typical representative image of Jesus imposed upon each other, both split down the middle. It serves perfectly what this article will teach the reader: namely, that the "historical Jesus Story" in the New Testament finds its origin with the Osiris-Horus myths of Egypt personified in the lives of the Pharaohs; in particular the Pharaoh Tutankhamun as you will come to see.

Before the nineteenth century, when Christians sought to understand Jesus and the ancient world depicted in the gospels, they adhered to naturalistic literalism. Southwestern Theological Seminary taught the same approach to the Christian Scriptures and the "historical Jesus". "Naturalistic literalism" is the practice of reading the Scriptures and accepting the events that are described therein as the literal truth. In so doing we expect to find a "historical Jesus" in first century Palestine. No one had ever given much thought to reading the New Testament (NT) any other way. Things have changed dramatically since then. Today, the only Christians that still hold to a natural-literal reading of the NT are Fundamentalists who believe it to be "plenary," which is to say that every word is inspired by God. However, even a quick glance at the NT reveals inconsistencies.

But there is one major problem with this "naturalistic literalism" as the approach to the Christian Scriptures; there is no evidence existing today outside of this one New Testament that proves that such a Jewish Rabbi and expected Messiah existed in the first century and was a real person. Let me repeat there is NOT one shred of contemporary evidence to support the New Testament story of the birth, life, and death of a Jesus of Nazareth. However, there is an expanse of evidence that exits which will prove that this "Jesus Story" in the New Testament is but a retelling of the life and death of another who lived many, many centuries earlier in Egypt; that one being the Pharaoh Tutankhamun.

The only problem for the reader at present is that he has not seen this evidence that both reveals conclusively that there is not a "historical Jesus" of the First Century in Palestine and the clumsy forgeries and vain attempts by overzealous early Christians when challenged over this problem in the early centuries A.D. where they attempted to create one and "write a Jesus" into later writings by the Christian Church as well as the formation of their Bibles. Lacking as well is the readers acquaintance with the corresponding evidence that supports this very same "Jesus Story" as taken from the 18th Dynasty of Egypt.

Many went down this road in search for the "historical Jesus before, but most of them pulled back because they reached areas of conflict between history and religion which is usually a touchy area. Besides no one like to trash what he has grown up revering and I understand that so well but let never forget that if it not the truth it is a LIE! Surely our God and Creator is not glorified in a lie; especially when we are commanded in the Ten Commandments to "not bear false witness". Thus our search for truth should be ruthless and sought with all our might as we run after the God of all Truth. Amen!

Answer for yourself: What were some of these stumbling blocks to finding a "historical Jesus"? Well there were many but one is most important as I see it.

Many Pagan religious belief systems permeated the Mediterranean region during the 1st century CE. There were numerous male heroes, saviors and god-men within Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Hindu, and other pantheons of Gods whose lives had many points of similarities to Jesus. Of these, the Egyptian God Horus probably had life events attributed to him which were closest match to those of Jesus. Yet, Horus was worshipped in Egypt thousands of years before the first century CE when Jesus is believed to have been ministering in Palestine. The more I studied the more I saw "Egypt" coming up in my studies and it began to appear that behind both Judaism and Christianity lie source for all later "redeemers" and that source continually turned out to be Egypt so there I had to begin a 5 year study in order to check out all the possibilities. In so doing I would come upon the evidence that would show me why these "Osiris" and "Horus" stories were replayed down through history and attached to a host or "redeemers" like Tutankhamun, Chrishna of Hindostan, Budha Sakia of India, Odin of the Scaudinavians, Zoroaster and Mithra of Persia, Baal and Taut, "the only Begotten of God," of Phenicia, Indra of Thibet, Bali of Afghanistan. Jao of Nepaul, Wittoba of the Bilingones, Thammuz of Syria, Atys of Phrygia, Xaniolxis of Thrace, Zoar of the Bonzes, Adad of Assyria, Thor, son of Odin, of the Gauls, Cadmus of Greece, Quexalcote of Mexico, the Divine Teacher of Plato, Adonis, son of the virgin Io of Greece, Quirinus of Rome, Prometheus of Caucasus, Mohamud, or Mahomet, of Arabia, and finally Jesus of Nazareth.

Answer for yourself: What should all these above "redeemer stories" which overlap abundantly in similarities teach us? Is this just a coincidence?

There has been a pattern for this "redeemer story" motif that has existed since the origin of the myths of Osiris and Horus and has been applied to both historical and non-historical personages very since. Bet Emet Ministries has devoted several websites dealing with this pattern "redeemer story" as applied to the mythical like Osiris and Horus. Behind this we found that Astronomy was the backbone of these concepts and this is quite a "mind blowing" study as you find that God's Divine Patterns and Cycles in the Heavens and in Nature were understood on a "deep spiritual level" by the Ancients which we have no clue today. They in my estimation wee "spiritual masters" par excellence and really knew the depth of this God like hardly none today. Of interest to us in our current study is the application of this "redeemer pattern" to the earliest of the "historical examples" in which we find this "redeemer motif" applied and we have only to look at the Pharaoh Tutankhamun who serves perfectly as the prototype for the later "historical figure of Jesus".Both follow this same "pattern"; one historical (Tutankhamun) and the other mythical (Jesus of Nazareth).

Answer for yourself: If we make the identification of Tutankhamun with the historical Jesus you should ask "How can that be since the two characters Jesus and Tutankhamun supposedly lived "apparently" in different places and different times"? Let us go through the evidence.

I stated above that there is not a shred of contemporary evidence to support the New Testament story of the birth, life or death of Jesus. However, there is an expanse of evidence proving that Jesus had lived many centuries earlier.

Answer for yourself: One wonders, if Jesus lived, suffered and died during the period of Roman rule in Palestine, as the New Testament states, then why did not his name appear in the writings of three distinguished contemporary authors of that time: Philo Judaeus, Justus of Tiberias and Flavius Josephus?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that absolutely no reference is made to a "historical Jesus" in the thirty-eight works left behind by Philo Judaeus, who was born c. 15 B.C.E. and died about twenty years after the supposed date of the Crucifixion? This is very problematic since he lived in the same years of this supposed historical Jesus and given the account in the New Testament one would have to think that at least one reference to such a dynamic person who stirred up Roman ire would be found somewhere in all his writings. Well there is not one reference.

Philo's brother was the head of the Jewish community living in Alexandria. His son was married to a granddaughter of King Herod.

Answer for yourself: How can we expect a man like Philo Judaeus with all his family connections not to mention Jesus in all his voluminous writings, if Jesus ever existed? This should alert you to the idea that something is wrong and amiss here.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Talmudic rabbis do not relate or report of a "historical Jesus" at the time of Herod or Pontius Pilate? Now we have two great voices of the first century who are absolutely silent on this supposed "historical Jesus".

Answer for yourself: Do these Talmudic rabbis mention at all the name of "Jesus"? Well yes they do but our problem now blows up in our face. Instead of mentioning this "Jesus" as existing in the first century they write and say that a priest named Pinhas killed him.

Answer for yourself: What? Who is this Pinhas? Well here we got to Egypt for Pinhas was a contemporary of Moses and his Priest.

There was no Israelite priesthood before the time of Moses. Moses arranged the priesthood in two main levels, the high priest and the ordinary priests. Across the Nile from Tell-el-Amarna, there is the city of Mallawi, which means literally "The City of the Levites". The Levites held priestly positions with Akhenaten, the father of Tutankhamun at Amarna. Now pay close attention.

Akhenaten's two highest priestly officials were:

- Meryre II...who was the High Priest of the Aten, at the Amarna temple
- Panehesy...was the Chief Servitor of the Aten at Akhenaten's temple

Likewise, Moses' two highest priestly officials were:

- Merari, who is described in Genesis, 46:11, as one of the sons of Levi. The Egyptian equivalent of his name is Meryre.
- Phinehas, who was the son of Eleazar and grandson of Aaron according to Exodus 6:25. His name in the Talmud is Pinhas. The Egyptian equivalent of his name is Panhesy.

Answer for yourself: What should this startling piece of knowledge teach us?

It is therefor evident that we are dealing with the same high officials who served Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) at Amarna and then accompanied him to Sinai afterwards. Yet another confirmation that Moses and Akhenaten are one and same person. So it appears that Moses' son might be crucial in helping identify the "historical Jesus" since the Talmudic rabbis tell us that a "Jesus" was killed by Pinhas who we now know was a Priest to the Pharaoh Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses). Now in previous articles we have already proved that the Biblical Moses is the Pharaoh Akhenaten as well as the fact that the Biblical King David is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III and the Biblical Solomon is Amenhotep III, the father of the Biblical Moses. It seems the deception continues and we find that we have a "Jesus" being killed all right, but not in the first century but more than likely at Sinai in the time and days of Moses.

Answer for yourself: How is this possible? Is there evidence for a "Jesus" being killed in the time of Moses not only in the Rabbinic records of the Talmud but in Egyptian records and history? Well yes there is.

Answer for yourself: Was this "Jesus" someone important and possibly could this "Jesus" have been Moses' son known as Tutankhamun?

Already we are seeing that many things recorded in the Old Testament are written in order to confuse the events and identities of personages in many of the stories we read.

Answer for yourself: The Bible is full of names; people as well as places but were you aware that not one time is any Pharaoh mentioned by name? If the Bible will give us the name of a "well" from which to drink water then why not the name of the Pharaoh of the Exodus? Is something being hid from us?

Well it would appear in light of the lack of disclosure at places in the Bible as well as its mixed up chronology where "Jesus" is placed in Egypt some 1400 years before we should expect then we definitely need to look into matters for ourselves; especially Tutankhamun if we want to get on the trail of the possible "historical Jesus" since many scholars like A. Osman and M. Gadalla tell us that Tutankamun is the "historical Jesus".

We will begin with his birth. Tutankhamun was born in the city of Amarna, which was named after the biblical name of Moses' father. A linen shirt found in Tutankhamun's tomb and dated to Year 7 of Akhenaton, indicates that this was the year of his birth. Of major importance for our study is the fact that he belonged to the Tuthmosside royal family of which Tuthmose III (King David) reigned four generations earlier.

Answer for yourself: Why is Tutankhamun being the in family line of Tuthmose III, the Biblical David, so important for us? Simply because the Bible tells us that the Messiah will come from the family of David and Tutankhamun is from the family of Tuthmose III, the Biblical David.

Answer for yourself: Could this Tutankhamun be the possible Messiah whom we read about as "Jesus" in the New Testament and the writers of the New Testament tell an older Egyptian Messiah story out of its time period? Well it is too early to say that for sure so let us keep reading.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the "virgin birth" teaching began thousands of years ago in Egypt? Are you aware that although Pharaohs had "natural" parents it was believed that they has "spiritual virgin births?

Answer for yourself: Was this doctrine applied to the Pharaoh Tutankhamun, the Son of God? It sure was. Let us look into this as it became the "example" for all other "Messiah-Kings"; not only in Egypt but in successive nations culminating with the "Joshua/Jesus" of the New Testament as well.

We must begin with the birth of Tut-Ankh-Amen in order to see how this was applied not only to the Egyptian Son of God but to the "Joshua/Jesus" of Egyptian history. First of all Tutankhamun was born in the city of Amarna, the capital city of his father, Akhenaton (the Biblical Moses).

Answer for yourself: What makes this city of "Amarna" so important? Its immense importance is because "Amarna", the city, was named after Amran (or Imran), which is not only the name of Akhenaton's god (father) but which is also the name given in the Bible for Moses' father.

Answer for yourself: Is this city connected with a link to the Biblical Moses in other ways? Yes it is. Across the Nile from Tell-el Amarna, or the city of Amarna, there is the city of Mal-lawi (Mal-Levi), which means literally The City of the Levites. The Levites, according to the Bible, not only held priestly positions with Moses, but they also held the very same positions with Akhenaton (Tutankhamun's father).

Now we move on to the "virgin birth" doctrine in Egypt. We have previously seen that the idea of a "messiah" began in Egypt. The idea of the birth of this Messiah without sexual intercourse originated in ancient Egypt as well. What you will find is that many dogmas and religious beliefs connected with "Jesus" and the New Testament find their origin with Egypt.

When assessing the validity of a Savior or Messiah, two major events are consistently mentioned:

- Immaculate Conception or virgin birth, and
- The Resurrection or rising from the dead and ascending into Heaven or Paradise.

Nothing supersedes these two occurrences as the most important in classifying one as a "Savior".

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the first Messianic promise of a Savior is given to Egypt in the Book of Isaiah?

Isa 19:19-20 19 In that day shall there be an altar to the LORD in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the LORD. 20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Who was this "savior"? Could this have been the "Jesus" that the Talmudic Rabbis spoke of who was killed in Egypt by the Priest Pinhas?

The problem we face here, particularly in the western world, is associating these events, the virgin birth and the resurrection from the death with only one being, Jesus, the Christ of the New Testament, when history teaches us that these same events have been applied literally to numerous characters down through history.

Things become very difficult for the western mind when looking at these two events from other parts of the world, during different historical periods, even before the birth of Jesus. These two events, the virgin birth and the resurrection from the dead have been associated with various other beings in different cultures for thousands of years prior to the New Testament "Jesus"; in fact going all the way back to the very "neteroo" of Egypt which is explained best by understanding that these events (virgin birth, resurrection) stood for "forces" and "powers" and "concepts" that consist in God and that operate in the metaphysical realm and which man experiences in this pilgrimage of the soul we call life.

The first human recording of these two events are found in northeast Africa, Kemet, which the Greeks called Egypt, around 4100 B.C.E. It focuses on Ausar (Osiris), Auset (Isis) and Heru (Horus), reputably known as the original trinity; the father, the mother, the son [parentheses indicates Greek names].

Let us first focus on the virgin birth before we deal with the resurrection. There are temples in Egypt where these events are carved in stone thousands of years before the birth of the Jesus of the New Testament. The Temple of Luxor, inscribed by King Amenhotep III (1538-1501 B.C.E.) shows four scenes on the birth of Horus):

- The Annunciation,

- The Immaculate Conception and Virgin Birth
- The Birth and
- Adoration.

These same 4 "religious doctrines" are repeated identically as applied to many "historical saviors" and find their culmination with the Jesus of the New Testament.

Let me say in passing that in the Temple of Seti I, in Abydos, the home of Ausar (Osiris), and in the temple at Denderah, one can see this Resurrection of Horus which was applied to the later Pharaoh-kings of Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Then are we to understand that the teaching of the virgin birth and resurrection from the dead was applied to Pharaohs like Tutankhamun which many scholars believe today provided the "historical" account for the later "historical Jesus Story" in the New Testament even when there is not one shred of evidence for the existence of a "historical Jesus" in the first century? We certainly are.

Books such as: The Egyptian Book of the Dead (originally titled The Book of Coming Forth by Day and by Night) by E. A. Wallis Budge; The Coffin Text and The Pyramid Text; The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors by Kersey Graves; and Christianity Before Christ by John G. Jackson, among others, have recorded these various stories and all you have to do is read them to see this evidence for yourself. Some Egyptologists feel that the triad of deities: Amon, Mut and Khonsu, at the temple in Karnak, was copied by the early Christians to form the present Holy Trinity. I kid you not when I say that "all roads lead to Egypt and not Rome". Rome has just lied about it.

As a side note, according to most Christian scriptures, Jesus was said to have been born in Bethlehem, or Nazareth. In the Coptic writings, where the oldest Christians called Copts still reside (Kemet and Ethiopia), and according to Dr. Yosef ben-Jochannan, a Kemetologist, born in Ethiopia, Jesus was said to have been born in Kemet (Egypt). In Matthew 2:15, it still says, "Out of Egypt shall I call my son!" Contrary to written sources, Kemet (Egypt) is where Christianity was born, while Ethiopia built the first Christian Church and was the world's first and oldest Christian nation. Christianity was originally an African religion, as was the Hebrew African religion called Judaism.

When the Roman Empire converted to Christianity (312 A.D.), and wrestled it from Africa, the story was changed. This was further confirmed at the Council of Nicea, on May 20th, 325 A.D., called by the Roman Emperor Constantine, and attended by 318 bishops and religious scholars. Together, they formed a new Imperial State Religion, known today as The Roman Catholic Church.

As mentioned earlier, other beings were associated with the Immaculate Conception and Resurrection story. Their life stories parallel that of Jesus, which parallel that of Horus. In Mexico, in the Codex Vaticanus, this being is called Quexalcote. In China, in the History of the Rajahs, the name Xaca is mentioned, and also Yu. In India they are called Buddha and Krishna. Sakia, Scipio, Arion, Zulis, Bacchus, Alcides, and Hesus are some of the beings associated with the two events previously mentioned. In actuality, the virgin birth/resurrection story has floated all over the world, in various cultures, various interpretations, before, during and after the Mary Jesus version. But it began with Horus, the son of Osiris. Isis is said to have conceived her son Horus after her husband's (Osiris) death. Some people think the term refers to Christ's conception in Mary's womb without the intervention of a human father but understand such a New Testament teaching is a "carbon-copy" of the events of Osiris-Isis written at least ten thousand years ago or more.

Answer for yourself: What is this really then? This is the earliest record on this planet of a "non-sexual" birth of a child which we call the "virgin birth" today. The cosmic force responsible for her impregnation was MeSSeh, the crocodile star, as per Spell 148 of the Coffin Texts: The crocodile star (MeSSeH) strikes ... isis wakes pregnant with the seed of Osiris." And this I remind you occurred after the death of Osiris and was thus considered a miracle often repeated down through history.

As mentioned above this holy (virgin) birth of the Egyptian king is a recurring theme in temples and writings throughout ancient Egypt. In ancient Egypt, divine birth was looked upon as an aspect of royal birth. Although the child was regarded spiritually as the son of the deity, this did not exclude the human father or the sexual relationship between the parents. In symbolic terms, the Egyptian King was considered to be the Son of God.

So in an understandable way not we see how connected with Egyptian kings is the teaching of the "holy virgin birth" of their Pharaohs and it was "symbolic" ONLY and never was understood as if a "literal" occurrence.This is why this theme of the "holy virgin birth" of the Egyptian king is a recurring theme in temples and writings throughout ancient Egypt. In symbolic terms, the spirit of the deity (the Holy Spirit) used the physical body of the king to produce the child. In Christian belief, however, no human father is involved: the mother is a virgin, and the child is conceived by the Holy Spirit without any sexual relationship.

This holy birth of the king-Pharaoh is documented in scenes as well as texts found in many places, such as on the north wall of the central colonnade of Queen Hatshepshut's mortuary temple at Deir el Bahari, as well as at the Luxor Temple. In the Luxor Temple, at the Birth chamber, as called by classical Egyptologists, we find the scene of the spiritual conception and birth of the king. The reliefs on the west wall depict a scene with many similarities to the familiar Christian's Immaculate Conception and Virgin Birth which is applied to the New Testament Jesus just the way it is to Tutankamun! The king was a royal, conscientious man, with divine potential. The Egyptian king is therefore considered to be the spiritual Son of God, the son of the neteru, the divine principles of the Cosmos that constitute the whole of God, our Creator.

The Pharaoh, as seen as the "son of God", was in the service of Horus and ruled over the whole of Egypt as his servant. In this role he had to keep his people safe, ensure the adequate rising of the Nile, care for the continued existence of those in the beyond by bringing them offerings to feed on, i.e. he had to uphold the divine order of all creation. Egypt called this "Maat". It was, perhaps, not so much the man who was identified with Horus himself, but rather the ka of the pharaoh, which while it was the body's twin, was also an expression of the life force, more than just an aspect of his personality.

Answer for yourself: What exactly is the "ka"?

The Ka, represented by two raised arms, is one of the many spiritual components of gods and humans. The word "Ka" has regularly been translated as "life-force" or "life-energy" for lack of a better translation. In ancient times it may have referred to the "male potency", but it soon must have come to mean intellectual and spiritual power. There is a difference between the Ka of the gods and the kings on one hand, and the Ka of the common people on the other. Where the Ka of the gods and the kings represent some kind of individuality, the Ka of the common people relates the individual to his or her family. The Kas of common people are there ancestors which are passed on from generation to generation. From the Old Kingdom on, the Ka is represented as a "double" of the human it is part of, which may be yet another example of the Egyptian dualism. The Ka of the kings was created at the same time as his or her body: in the scenes representing the divine birth of Hatshepsut in her temple at Deir el-Bahari, the god Khnum can be seen fashioning the body and the Ka of the Queen on a potter's wheel. This, however, does not mean that the Ka and the body are inseparable. When the body died, the Ka left the body and joined its divine creator. The phrase "going to one's Ka" is a euphemism for "dying".

The Pharaoh-king was above all the carer of his people, the representation of the Good God and the Good Shepherd, a role often also played by the God Amen (representative and symbol for this "Invisible Creative Force or Spirit"). So likewise we must understand correctly that the Pharaoh was as the "Son of God" only His representative and the term again was not to be understood "literally" as if born

"virginally" by being impregnated "literally" by God. This concept is totally debased by Christianity as you can tell as they teach that the Jesus of the New Testament is not the biological seed of Joseph. This is totally opposite from what Egypt taught yet similar in "terms". Basically, the Egyptians seem to have thought of their pharaohs as touched by the divine, sons and servants of the gods rather than equals of Re or Amen: they were their bridge to the gods and this "Creative Force" we call God today. Importantly as well these Pharaohs were also the first humans to achieve eternal life after death, joining the gods in the heavens. They were in reality the "first fruits of the Dead" as have come to think about being "in Christ". The Pharaoh being identified with Osiris in death is like being "in Christ" when we die as well. Being a "Living Horus" was like being "in Christ" as we live. The spiritual concepts are the same. By the New Kingdom any Egyptian could hope to identify with Osiris in death as has his Pharaoh-king and thereby perpetuate the immortal constituents which were part of his being for all eternity and be resurrected from the dead as was his Pharaoh-king thanks to the rituals developed in the Old Kingdom for his kings.

We have spoken of the birth of Tutankamun so now let us now focus for a second on the New Testament Jesus. The writer of the Gospel of Luke describes the forthcoming birth of Jesus in the following terms:

Luke 1:32-33 32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: 33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Tutankhamun, like Jesus, can also be described as "Son of the Highest" and was "seated upon the throne of his father Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses who was of the same family of the Biblical David whom we see is the historical Tuthmose III? Is this again another coincidence?

Answer for yourself: Since we know for sure that the Biblical King David is Tuthmose III and the Biblical Moses then should we begin now to look for the "house of Jacob" in Egypt as well?

Answer for yourself: Since the writer of Luke is speaking of the New Testament Jesus and three other items mentioned in these two verses in look refer to "hidden Egyptian identities" then is it a safe bet to begin to think that behind his "Jesus" is possibly another Egyptian identity? You bet it is.

I would be amiss if I failed to mention to the reader that the birth of Jesus is not mentioned in New Testament writings of the first century C.E. let alone is not mentioned in the first New Testament given to the world by Marcion in 150 A.D. as this "first New Testament" only spoke of the "Mystical Christ Jesus" within each of God's children. This is the "risen Christ" in all men once they are awakened to the God within which we call today "that still small voice".

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

This is the real Paul we seek, the Gnostic master of the first century who is made into a Frankenstein by Rome whose writings are so contradictory today that almost no one can make any sense out of them. Rome will counter such a teaching of the Gnostics by not only killing millions of these "Gnostic Chrestians" later called "Christians" but by writing their own version of Marcion's "first New Testament". In so doing the world was given a gross forgery known today as the "Second New Testament"; added of course are maze of conflicting genealogies that open the Gospels of Matthew and was inserted in Luke's Gospel to this life of Rome's "historical Jesus" which was but the retelling of the life and tragic death of the Egyptian Messiah Tutankhamun, the Son of God. In so doing as well as inserting references to a "historical Jesus in the flesh" under the name of Paul we have completely lost the "gnosis" of the Christ or "Karast" as taught by Egypt thousands of years ago. Interestingly only the later Gospel-writers refer to this virgin birth; a birth by the way that is never mentioned once by Paul in all of his seven authentic writings and the host of others penned in his name which are but Roman lies and forgeries.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that two of the four Gospels refer to his birth, yet they differ in their details?

His death and resurrection were the main focus of interest rather than his birth but ironically it has always been that way; the death of our lower selves and resurrection of our higher self when the Christ and "Karast" within us all is awakened to the God within our flesh as we awaken to the descent of the soul within this matter we call "flesh". God, this Spiritual Force and Power, this Ka is hidden within.

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead (awaken to the fact that we are divine and that we are the manifestations of the creator; the soul descended into physical matter-flesh) and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise (knowing that we are divine in this flesh and believing to life and act like it by obeying the laws of God which bring harmony and as Egypt called it ..."Ma'at") (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that by the year 200 CE, the Church issued a Creed for its members. The Creed stated that Jesus Christ was "conceived by the Holy Ghost" and "born of the Virgin Mary"?

The virgin concept evolved further, when the Council of Trullo in 692 C.E. declared that Mary, the mother of Jesus was "ever-virgin'.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this declaration contradicts Matthew 1:25 and 12:46, Mark 3:31 and 6:3, Luke 8:19, and John 2:12.?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the virgin concept evolved further, when the Council of Trullo in 692 C.D. declared that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was "ever-virgin"? This declaration contradicts the following verses of the Bible, stating that Jesus had brothers and sisters:

Matt 1:25 25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son: and he called his name JESUS. (KJV) Matt 12:46 46 While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him. (KJV)

Matt 13:56 56 And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things? (KJV)

Mark 3:31-32 31 There came then his brethren and his mother, and, standing without, sent unto him, calling him. 32 And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee. (KJV)

Mark 6:3 3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him. (KJV)

Luke 8:19 19 Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press. (KJV)

John 2:12 12 After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days. (KJV)

The virgin idea reached its peak, in the writings of St. Thomas Aquinas, in the thirteenth century. The church endorsed his writing:

"Because she conceived Christ without the defilement of sin (Immaculate Conception), and without the stain of sexual mingling, therefore did she bring him forth without pain, without violation of her virginal integrity (Virgin Birth), without detriment to the purity of her maidenhood."

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the released Dead Sea Scrolls did not mention a virgin mother either?

Answer for yourself: Are you also aware that story found in the book of Matthew, about the three wise men who came from foreign countries to offer tribute and presents to the newborn king, is of Egyptian origin?

During the time of the Empire such visits and gifts were common practice. A box was found, in the Valley of the Kings, which contained several pieces of gold leaf, bearing the names of Tutankhamun and Aye (the Biblical Ephraim). One of these pieces of gold leaf has the two royal cartouches of Aye on one side, faced on the other side by three foreigners whose arms are raised in a position of reverence towards the king's names (shown above).

- The first man looks like a typical Syrian from the Mediterranean coast.
- The second man is undoubtedly from the Sudan.
- The third man represents the white-skinned races of the North, such as Libyans and inhabitants of the Mediterranean islands.

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of this ? Here, then, is a representation of the three biblical races, Shem, Ham and Japhet. This, therefore, is the original idea of the three wise men, who represented the different people of the ancient known world who came to listen to the wisdom of Solomon and other Pharaohs who were the "Sons of God" and who showered others in the wisdom of Egypt; both scientific and spiritual.

WAS TUTANKHAMUN THE PROTOTYPE FOR THE "HISTORICAL JESUS"? #2

We now resume our study of Tutankhamun. Some scholars see him not as the son of Akhenaten but rather his brother. As mentioned in previous articles on Akhenaton and Moses, both Akhenaton and his father Amenhotep III, seen in the picture on the right, had a co-regency, for twelve years, then Akhenaton ruled alone for three years. According to a shirt found in Tutankhamun's tomb, he was born during Akhenaton's Year 7 at Amarna. Let us not lose sight of the fact that we have already proven that Amenhotep III is the Biblical Solomon. The shirt evidence provides two conclusions of which we can be certain:

- Since the date on the shirt refers to Akhenaton, therefore and in accordance with the ancient Egyptian practices, Akhenaton was his father.
- Akhenaton's Year 7 would make Tutankhamun ten years of age when he came to the throne and nineteen when he died. These dates are confirmed by anatomical examination of his body, as well as by dated objects found in his tomb (M. Gadalla, The Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Egypt, p. 208-209).

Answer for yourself: Was Akhenaton's mother, Queen Tiye, the mother or grandmother of Tutankhamun?

We know for certain that Queen Tiye was married to Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon). As stated earlier, Tutankhamun was born in Year 7 of his father Akhenaton. During the co-regency of Amenhotep III and Akhenaton, Year 7 of Akhenaton corresponds to Year 33 of Amenhotep III. At such a time, Queen Tiye was about 41 years old. Two years earlier she had given birth to a daughter, Baketaten. So, hypothetically she could have been able to give birth to a son, at age 41. However, the evidence found in her steward Huya's tomb, indicate that Tiye's first visit to Amarna was during or after Akhenaton's Year 10, i.e. three years after Tutankhamun's birth. The above mentioned shirt indicates a birth in Akhenaton's Year 7 and at Amarna, i.e. when and where Tiye was not present. Therefore the logical answer is that Akhenaton was the father of Tutankhamun, and Queen Tiye was the grandmother.

But it is out intention in this article to pursue the identity of the "historical Jesus" and so far as shown in the previous article there is substantial evidence to show that the "New Testament historical Jesus" might indeed be the Pharaoh Tutankamun. One two of the four Gospels tell us that Joseph the carpenter was Jesus' shadow father. The Bible tells us that this Joseph was a descendent of King David and we have also previously shown that this Biblical David is the historical Tuthmose III, Pharaoh of Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What does that teach us? Well it should teach us a couple of things. First, the depiction of "Jesus" as a royal descendant from the family of David, as per Matthew 1:1, "Jesus Christ, the son of (King) David", means that this Jesus comes from the family of Pharaohs since King David as we have seen is the historical Pharaoh Tuthmose III. Second we have seen that the later Hebrew Pharaohs (like Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), his son Tutankamun, Semenkhare, and Ay) are part Hebrew and part Egyptian. This is another piece of evidence linking Tutankamun as the "slain Son of God" with the depiction of Jesus as the "slain Son of God" as retold in the New Testament. Besides that the order of the Messianic Banquet (Passover meal) said that God would "beget" the Davidic Messiah. The second book of Samuel 7:13-14 affirms the same point:

"I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son"

The New Testament (Hebrews, 1:5) affirms the same idea; namely, that the Messiah is the Son of God, "begotten" of the Father which we have just seen applied to Tutankamun as well.

Heb 1:5 5 For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? (KJV)

There is more to consider when we look closer at Tutankhamun's mother. Since Akhenaton, the Biblical Moses fathered Tutankhamun (as proven earlier), his mother must have been Akhenaton's wife, who history records as Nefertiti. Without any evidence to support their argument, some academians have suggested a different mother from Queen Nefertiti for the young king. Some academians have also been confused about the relationship between Tutankhamun and the royal family. This is simply explained as follows:

- Akhenaton and Nefertiti's eldest daughter married Semenkhkare (Akhenaton's brother and succeeding Pharaoh), who died shortly before the coronation of Tutankhamun.
- Their second daughter had died at sometime.
- The third daughter Ankhsenpa-aten, in the order of events, becomes the heiress. Tutankhamun married her and in so doing he ascended to the throne.

Before the birth of Tutankhamun, Nefertiti had three daughters, and another three afterwards. No evidence of other sons has been found.

Answer for yourself: But were males offspring of the Hebrew Pharaohs hidden in the official records?

Hiding the identity of sons was the prudent thing to do, so as to protect these mixed blood heirs from the Egyptian purists who would have opposed their succession to the throne and most likely would have plotter their assassination. This is where good detective work and the efforts of archeology are so beneficial. From the archaeological remains of Amarna's northern palace, it can be concluded that Nefertiti remained there with her son, Tutankhamun, before and after he came to the throne. This ratifies the maternal relationship (M. Gadalla, The Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Egypt, p. 210-211).

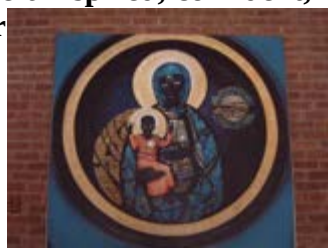
The connection of Jesus with Tutankhamun is further proven when looking at the New Testament Mary. The Bible tells us in several locations that Mary, the mother of Jesus, had other children besides Jesus, (see the previous article in this series as we examined the passages of Matthew 12:46, Mark 3:31 and 6:3, Luke 8:19, John 2:12), as well as the proclamation that Joseph "knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son ..." (Matthew 1:25). Of course we all know that the biblical name of Jesus' mother is Mary. The name Mary is given to many women in the New Testament. The two closest women to Jesus were called Mary, his mother and Mary Magdalene.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the origin of this name lies in ancient Egypt, where the word "mery" means "the beloved". What we find is that the name Mary/Mery is one of the most repeated words in ancient Egyptian texts. It was used as an adjective before names of people, neteru, . . .etc. More important for our study that just word associations is the fact that Mary has been described as "the descendant of princes and rulers" (b. Sanh. 106a) in the Jewish Talmud by the Rabbi commentators.

Answer for yourself: Is this a description that we should expect of the wife of a Pharaoh like Akhenaten who married Nefertiti? Looking at all the evidence amassed so far then this description can only fit Nefertiti, the biblical Madonna.

Now is should be expected and possibly common knowledge that the indigenous people of Africa are "black" in skin color?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the earliest depiction of Mary and Jesus portrayed them with "black skin"? This depiction, the earliest on record, are called today "the Black Virgin and Child".



Christ's Mother, "The Black Madonna" is worshiped throughout Europe of all places The most sacred icons of the Catholic Church are the Black Madonna and Christ child, which are found in Europe's most venerated shrines and cathedrals. Each year, hundreds of thousands of European pilgrims ritually humble themselves before the image of Black Mary and her child Jesus at Black Madonna sites throughout France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Belgium, Portugal and other Catholic countries.

Answer for yourself: Is it of any significance that Jesus and his mother Mary are depicted in the earliest portrayals in Christianity having black skin like Africans and Egyptians? You bet it is for this is just another puzzle piece signaling that the Jesus of the New Testament is not whom we think he is and in fact is a much later "historical depiction" rendered in the first century of a historical personage which lived over a thousand years earlier named Tutankhamun.

Many of these Black Madonna statues have the black paint literally kissed off of their hands and feet. In Poland, the Church encourages believers to pray to the Black Madonna every morning before rising. It is reported that Pope John Paul follows this ritual. Time Magazine (June 11, 1979) reported on Pope Paul II's visit to Checslovakia's holiest shrine, which prominently displays "The Lady" known for centuries as the Black Madonna. At Our Lady of Koden (Poland), there are statues of white saints carrying pictures of Black Madonnas. Pilgrims throughout the ages have visited Black Madonna sites and left inspired, confident, relieved, or healed of their afflictions. Today, there are over 300 documented Black Madonna sites in France alone! Sometimes they are hidden awaken vaults, while the public is shown Madonnas with European features. In the hard-to-find classic, Anacalypsis (which I own a copy by the way) historian Godfrey Higgins writes, "...in all the Romish countries of Europe, in France, Italy, Germany, etc., the God Christ, as well as his mother, are described in their old pictures and statues to be black. The infant God in the arms of his black mother, his eyes and drapery white, is himself perfectly black. If the reader doubt my word, he may go to the cathedral at Moulins -to the famous chapel of the Virgin at Loretto ...the whiteness of the eyes and teeth, and the studied redness of the lips, are very observable... There is scarcely an old church in Italy where some remains of the worship of the BLACK VIRGIN and BLACK CHID are not to be met with. Very often the black figures have given way to white ones, and in these cases the black ones, as being held sacred, were put into retired places in the churches, but were not destroyed..." (G. Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol 1, p. 138). The Black Madonnas originally all had Africoid features before most of them were destroyed by iconoclasts. When they were replaced, the artists retained the dark skin color but, not being familiar with real Africans, gave European features to the paintings. In cases where originals have survived, you may witness Africoid features on Mary and her child Jesus, such as the Black Madonna of Nuria, Spain - called "the Queen of the Pyrenees." Russia's remarkable legacy of Black Madonnas and other Christian icons of dark skin is evidenced in the book, Russian Icons by Vladimir Ivanov, including the feature story of the Spring 1994 issue of Russian Life magazine, graced with a Black Madonna on its cover. Actually the worship of the virgin, Black "Mother of God" with her God-begotten child, far predates Christianity and prevailed throughout the ancient world.

Historians recognize that the statue of the Egyptian Goddess Isis with her child Horus in her arms was the first Madonna and Child. They were renamed Mary and Jesus when Europe was forcibly Christianized. Scholars by the handfuls will tell you that it is well known that the iconography of Isis and [her son] Horus was basically adopted by Christians when they started to portray Mary and Jesus as Mother and Child. The worship of Isis and Horus was especially popular in ancient Rome. "Roman legions carried this figure of Black Isis holding the Black infant Horus all over Europe where shrines were established to her. So holy and venerate were these shrines that when Christianity invaded Europe, these figures of the Black Isis holding the Black Horus were not destroyed but turned into figures of the Black Madonna and Child. Today these are still the holiest shrines in Catholic Europe." Titles such as Our Lady, The Great Mother, are the same titles attributed to Isis! The word "Madonna" itself is from mater domina, a title used for Isis! The month of May, which was dedicated to the heathen Virgin Mothers, is also the month Mary, the Christian Virgin.

Incredulously, many contemporary white authors seem not to link or acknowledge the Black Madonna's color with her African origin, although their ancestors did without hesitation. Some flatly deny any racial connection. Instead, they come up with various reasons and sophisticated explanations (the "dark" phase of the moon, fertility of the earth, etc.) -any excuse except Melanin - to explain why the Lady is portrayed black. This is evident in a number of books by white authors discussing Black Madonnas. Perhaps whites have become so enmeshed in the webs of false history woven by their predecessors that many are blind to the truth, unable to see or discern even glaring evidence of African historical presence. If white writers of today are indeed this ignorant - or pretending ignorance - of the Black Madonna's African origin, let them read the works of a few rare honest white scholars which preceded them, such as Gerald Massey, T.W. Doane, Godfrey Higgins and Kersey Graves. These writers knew and wrote the truth. This is amazing given the exceedingly overtly racist times in which they lived. Yet today, official white establishment does not and will not acknowledge the African genesis of their whitewashed religions.

In Bible Myths and Parallels In World Religions, T.W. Doane devotes a chapter to The Worship of the Virgin Mother, where he candidly states, "The whole secret of the fact of these early representations of the Virgin Mary and Jesus - so called-being black, crowned, and covered with jewels, is that they are of pre-Christian origin; they are Isis and Horus... baptized anew" (Ibid. p. 337).

Answer for yourself: What should this tell us? Again the same thing that we have been seeing; namely, that the Jesus of the New Testament is connected with Egypt and not Israel and that he finds his historical "origin" with not only the religion of Egypt but with the person of Tutankhamun.

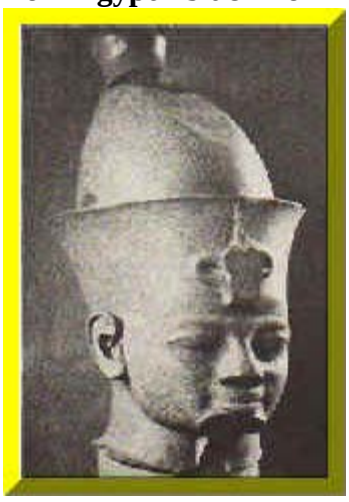
In closing let me address a topic possibly not commonly known by mainline Christianity. We have all seen the Sphinx have we not?

Answer for yourself: What does a larger number of Egyptian sculptures and Egyptian artifacts have in common with the Sphinx? Well for starters a lot of the Egyptian artifacts have the nose missing.



Answer for yourself: Have you ever asked yourself why so much of Egyptian 3-D sculpture and artwork has their nose missing? Scholars will tell you that it means the carving has been distorted or facial features destroyed so that you cannot see the flat nose and full lips. In spite of this purposeful destruction Negroid features are still apparent in many other carvings and sculpture that escaped such destruction over these last several thousand of years. This carving of Seti I (2nd Pharaoh of the 19th Dynasty...the Dynasty that followed the Hebrew Pharaohs which was the 18th Dynasty) shows the great ruler who restored order to the kingdom and returned Egyptian art and architecture to the powerful style of past dynasties. We know this is Seti because his name appears on the back of the sculpture in a cartouche. In Gary Greenberg's book: Bible Myth: The African Origin of the Jewish People, he educates the reader to the fact that the Hebrews were originally Egyptians and devotees of Akhenaten's monotheism who had to flee after Akhenaten died and Horemheb violently rejected the new religion. This was the historical Exodus that occurred over religious reasons between 2 groups of Egyptians; one group that supported the old ways of the Amun-Ra Priesthood in Thebes and a second group allied with a group of intermarried Egyptians and Semites who were devotees of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) and his religious reforms that purified Egyptian religion once again into a unadulterated "monotheism" once again.

Answer for yourself: What should we have learned from these facts? Namely that the "Jesus" spoken of by the Rabbis who was killed by Pinhas in Egypt was Tutankhamun and that his nationality is not only part Hebrew and part African but he is "black" in skin color. That means that King David and King Solomon was black and their "messianic" offspring was black as well. That means the Egyptian Messiah was "black" and that Tutankhamun was "black". That means the followers of Akhenaten that fled with him from Egypt "black" or at least "half-black" since they were a mixed multitude ethnically since intermarried with Semites. That means the Messiah prophesied to come from the loins of King David who is better known today as Tuthmose III was to be "black" as well. One only has to look at the above sculpture of Tuthmose III to see the Negroid features seen clearly in the wide nose and large lips.

Because of this cover-up the world has been presented with a "white-skinned" Messiah; an expected "Joshua-Jesus" from the Roman Empire when Augustus (31 B.C.E. – AD 14) was the royal leader. The Euro-centric Christian World knows nothing about the bona fide Judean Jesus from the Tribe of Judah which are in reality black-skinned Ethiopians who spoke Aramaic. As Europe abounded, it provided the global world with a "white-skinned" Jesus as Messiah of the Hebrews as the Bible was being translated from Hebrew to Greek to Latin to English. Plato and Socrates provided Christianity with philosophy and mystical thought of which they borrowed from the ancient Black Egyptians. Europeans pasted pictures of the blonde blue-eyed man and his disciples on the Bible end pages and inserts which lead the global world to believe in a "white" savior for soul salvation.

Ancient Egypt was known indigenously as Kemet (Land of the Blacks). Ancient Egyptians have pinpointed their own ancestral origins to the Mount Rwenzori Range in the east African cradle, otherwise known as the Mountains of the Moon. Some accounts state that Egyptian civilization came out of Ethiopia, which as a term was used to designate the land south of Egypt (the Upper Nile Valley), or was alternatively used to refer to the entire African Continent. Chronologically therefore Egypt's southern neighbor Nubia, which had its own distinct civilization, was her Nile Valley predecessor.

Greenberg and other scholars today will teach the reader that there is no archaeological or documentary evidence for most of the stories the Old Testament. That is sad but you only have to read about Egyptian religion to see these same Old and New Testament stories told thousands of years previously. The Old Testament tells about the origins of the Jews but not everything we read there is historically accurate. Archeology and personal study will show you beyond any doubt that was no Abraham living in "Ur of the Chaldees," no 400 years of enslavement in Egypt (its really only 4 generations), no Exodus as depicted in the time frame given in the Hebrew Scriptures, and no wandering for 40 years in the desert. Besides that as we have seen many of the Bible characters like David and Solomon and Ephraim were Egyptian Pharaohs. Speaking about Abraham we saw that the biological father of Sarah's son Isaac was in reality Tuthmose III, the Biblical King David. The fact of the matter is that the Chaldees didn't exist until about 1000 years after Abraham is supposed to have lived. There is no archaeological evidence of Israel. In truth the 12 tribes are taken from the Zodiac and Israel's origins came about in the 14th Century B.C.E. and not earlier and can be pinpointed as occurring in Egypt during the 18th Dynasty and reign of the monotheistic Pharaoh Akhenaten. The refugees departing form Egypt that was later called the "Exodus" were Egyptians and Hebrew followers of Akhenaten as mentioned above. It will be a few short years later that we will have the murder of the Egyptian Messiah known otherwise as the Son of God, the Pharaoh Tutankamun who was hung on a tree at the foot of Sinai. It is this tragic death of this "Suffering Servant" and Son of God (Son or Ra) that is replayed down through history via oral tradition and which gives birth to a host of other "death" and "resurrection" stories which were first taught about the "neteroo" and later applied to Osiris and Horus when personified. From there is was easy to attach these same eternal ideas to other pseudo-historical personalities down through history which were often mistakenly thought to be "historical" like the New Testament Jesus. During and after this religious split in Egypt and the Exodus the loyal followers of Akhenaten were removed from office, stripped of honor and property and banished from the country. These persecuted Egyptians united together and formed the "House of Israel" which the redactors of the Hebrew Scriptures later called "the Chosen People" although they lost the religious revolution in Egypt.

Egyptian roots for the biblical Hebrews were theorized back in the 19th century. And archaeologists have long pointed out that there is no physical record of many cities and places named in the Bible, while existing remains often conflict with biblical dating schemes. The hard fact is that the Jews that occupy Israel today did not originate from Palestine! They are not "descendants" of the mythic Jews of the Bible! The fact that over 90% of those today calling themselves "Jews" today are actually descendants of the Khazar people, originating from southern Russia. Jews from Eastern Europe and Western Asia were descended from Mongolians and other Asiatic peoples and "proselytes" who had adopted Judaism as their "religion" over 1,000 years ago and had become know as "Jews." Greenberg shows the reader the history of the ancient Khazar Empire which was once a major power in Eastern Europe but converted to Judaism in A.D. 740. The Jews of our times fall into two main divisions: Sephardim and Ashkenazim. The Khazars migrated to Poland and formed the cradle of Western (Ashkenazim) Jewry. Modern Jewry is not of Palestinian but Caucasian origin. The mainstream of Jewish migrations did not flow from the Mediterranean across France and Germany to the east and then back again. The stream moved in a consistently westerly direction, from the Caucasus through the Ukraine into Poland and into Central Europe. The Sephardim are descendants of the Jews who since antiquity had lived in Spain (in Hebrew Sepharad) until they were expelled at the end of the 15th Century and settled in the countries bordering the Mediterranean, the Balkans, and to a lesser extent in Western Europe.

Unknown to most is the fact that the Jewish people of Europe and America still carry African Tribal names. They carry the names of their ancestors who were Africans. Statistically, the Lemba people from Southeast Africa are more Jewish than European Jews. In a particular Lemba Clan known as the Buba Clan, 53 percent of the males carry the unique DNA signature of Jewish priests. Males form the Lemba Tribe carry a higher incidence of the Jewish priestly DNA signature than the European and American Jewish population. The Lemba, a Bantu-speaking people of southern Africa, have a tradition that a man named Buba led them out of Judea. A team of geneticists has found that many Lemba men carry in their male chromosome a set of DNA sequences that is distinctive of the Cohanim, the Jewish priests believed to be the descendants of Aaron. The priestly genetic signature is particularly common among Lemba men who belong to the senior of their 12 groups. The discovery of the Lemba's Jewish ancestry has come about through the intertwining of two unusual strands of inquiry. One was developed by geneticists in the United States, Israel and England who wondered what truth there might be to the Jewish tradition that priests are the descendants of Aaron, the elder brother of Moses. He finds that 45 percent of Ashkenazi priests and 56 percent of Sephardic priests have the Cohen genetic signature, while in Jewish populations in general the frequency is 3 to 5 percent (Nicholas Wade, New York Times 1999).

Well I chased a rabbit that needed to be run down. I hope we have learned that the true "Jews" of the Bible were "black" skinned and not white as we find today. That has staggering implications for Christianity and Messianism, both Jewish and Christian.

Answer for yourself: Whose is the rightful landowner of the land of Israel? Who has the rightful deed to the land of Palestine? Well that is a staggering question in light of what archeology is revealing to the world minute by minute.

But our concern is the historical identity of the New Testament Jesus. One thing seems glaringly apparent now: if were a real person living in Israel in the first century then he would have had to be "black" like his fathers and fellow Egyptians. This again is another puzzle piece linking the possibility of Tutankhamun being the prototype for all later "historical Jesus" stories; especially in light of the fact that the Messiah, if he had appeared in the first century, would have to be "black" from the line of David whom we already have seen conclusively is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III. There simple is no record for the appearance of this expected and hoped for Messiah, this "Joshua-Jesus" in the first century but only inherited oral traditions that have been handed down for thousands of years from Egypt as we saw earlier when discussing the black madonnas. Israel, being biologically linked with these people, simply carried with them the same traditions of the "neteroo" which were often applied to Egyptian Pharaohs who were for them the "living image of the Lord" to them (the pattern and cycles of the Cosmos and Nature [birth, life ordered and sustained by the First Cause, death, rebirth]). This pattern of Eternal Life and Redemption for mankind was the hope not just for the Pharaoh but for all mankind. This same hope found a new expression for a new age (Pisces) in the form of the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" who was but a reworking of the pattern for all live exampled by the "neteroo" and personified in the "Jesus Story" in the New Testament. For this same "Christ", just like Osiris, taught love and order to all life and provided the example that when life is lived by such parameters that one could expect to rise again after his death. This was taught and applied to the Pharaoh first and our focus as been on Tutankhamun as our "prototype" for the later supposed historical "Joshua-Jesus" stories.

We have only to examine the names by which Tutankhamun was known by to firm up again our connection of identities between Tutankhamun and the "historical Jesus" of the New Testament.We will look at these examples and further evidence in the following article.

WAS TUTANKHAMUN THE PROTOTYPE FOR THE "HISTORICAL JESUS"? #3

We pick up where we left off and find it very interesting when we consider just what lies behind the name of Tutankhamun as well as Joshua whom we are making a historical link in identity. We first begin with Tutankhamun. The Pharaoh Tutankhamun was known by the name "The Living Image Of The Lord". This name and lays behind it is fascinating as we begin to see. We saw in an earlier article that the young king-to-be was given the name Tut-ankh-aten when he was born since his father Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) was a follower of God the Aten.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Egyptian word, Aten, is the equivalent of Adon - the Lord - in Hebrew? Does that mean that when the Hebrews worshipped "Adonai", a replacement name for YHWH, then is YHWH basically the Egyptian Aten and we don't recognize it?

Answer for yourself: Does it not appear that the "I Am that I Am" revealed to Moses (whom we better recognized as Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, is more than likely the same as the Aten revealed to Akhenaten? Does this explain the incredible similarities between Biblical Judaism and its Laws and Commandments and Egypt who also was a nation with their own "Torah", Laws, and Commandments from God? I blind man could see it when he begins such a serious study.

We saw earlier that the word "Adonai" in Hebrew means "my Lord". The last two letters "ai" of the word is a Hebrew pronoun meaning "my" or "mine" and signifying possession. "Adon" meaning Lord was correctly noted by Sigmund Freud, as the Hebrew word for the Egyptian "Aten". As the Egyptian "t" becomes "d" in Hebrew and the vowel "e" becomes an "o", Adon is then the Hebrew equivalent of the Egyptian Aten.

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence or were the Hebrews the followers of the Aten in Egypt and afterwards with Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) in the Sinai and today the Biblical redactors have changed the name to YHWH?

Tutankamun's birth name "Tutankh-aten" (emphasis on the "aten") therefore means "the living image of the Lord". Thus he was recognized from the time of his birth as the Son of God, "the eldest Son of Aten (the Lord) in heaven".

Answer for yourself: As "the living image of the Lord in heaven" then was Tutankamun also knows as the Egyptian Messiah/Christ/Karast? Yes he was.

The English word "Christ" comes from the Greek "Kristos", which is the equivalent of the Hebrew and Aramaic Mesheh.

Answer for yourself: Where do we get this Aramaic word "Mesheh"? This word is derived from the Egyptian MeSHeH, which as a verb means "to anoint". Thus "the Christ" means "the anointed one", who is "the king". This Egyptian source for the word "Mesheh" should give us cause to investigate the spiritual concept of the Messiah from an Egyptian viewpoint. The Coronation ceremony of a Pharaoh included, among other things, anointing him with the fat of the crocodile. This is the original source of the word "Messiah". "Messeh" was the word for crocodile in ancient Egypt. The image of two crocodiles formed the title of the king which were given to him, at the time of his Coronation. The letter "s" in Egyptian is equivalent to "sh" in Hebrew and Aramaic. It is therefore evident that the Biblical word Messiah originated from "mesheeh", the ancient Egyptian word signifying the ritual of anointing the Pharaoh. Important for our study is the fact that the 18th Dynasty in Egypt gave the world 4 Amarna Kings or Hebrew Pharaohs who were "anointed" Messiah Pharaohs:

- Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses)
- Semenkhkare
- Tutankhamun (the Biblical Joshua-Jesus)
- Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) whom we saw was responsible for killing Pinhas who murdered Tutankamun

Now we come to a very important name.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever heard of the word "Essa"? Does the name "Essenes" mean that they are connected with this "Essa"? Yes it does.

The word "Essa" is the Arabic name of Jesus and is used only one time in the Koran.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that "Essa" was also the name used for Jesus by the early Christians in Egypt in the 1st century C.E.?

Answer for yourself: Then does it stand to reason that the Essenes were not only followers of "Essa" but also "Jesus"?

Answer for yourself: Who was this historical Jesus or "Essa" that is hidden in their name around; lets say around 170-150 B.C.E. for example? This is all the more important for us to understand just whom is this "Jesus" or this "Essa" in a historical sense in light of the fact the the vast majority of modern scholars tell us that the last writings of these Dead Sea Scrolls people, known as the Essenes, was no later than 70 B.C.E. That means that if this "Jesus" or "Essa" was to be a historical person then he had to be a historical person that lived before 70 B.C.E. and this rules out any possibility that this "Jesus" could the later "Jesus of the New Testament"!!!

Thus without a doubt then we see that the name of the Jewish sect, the Essenes, indicates that they were followers of "some" Jesus that lived long before the first century.

Answer for yourself: Could this be part of the reason why contemporary writers like Philo, Suetonius, Pliny, and Josephus fail to mention a contemporary Jesus of Nazareth in all of their writings in the first century?

Philo Judaeus, who wrote the earliest account of this sect around 30 CE, called them Essaeans from the Greek Essaios but stated that the word was of non-Greek origin. The Essaeans were included among the Jewish divisions of Josephus' time, but he called them the Essenes, the same term that is used in English. However, it was recognized that the word "Essene" must have had a Semitic origin, which is "Essa". "Essaioi" would therefore mean "a follower of Essa" which so translated also means "a follower of Jesus"!

Answer for yourself: Is it any wonder now why the meanings of "Essa" and the "Essenes" were intentionally ignored because the Essenes, as the followers of Essa (Jesus) existed before the time allotted to Jesus during the Romans' time?

Even more important for us is the study of the name of Joshua.

The names Joshua (Ye-ho-shua in Hebrew) and Jesus (Ye-shua in its short form), have the same meaning which is: "Yahweh (the Lord) is salvation."

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, done by these Essenes in Alexandria, Egypt, interchange the name of Joshua with Jesus?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the King James Bible and many of the early Church Fathers of the 2nd and 3rd centuries CE refer to "Joshua" and "Jesus" as one and the same person?

Answer for yourself: Since Joshua and Jesus are interchangeable and the identities of each of them have been mingled and identified as the same person by the Christian Church and the translators of the Hebrew Scriptures then is it possible that historically long before the first century that these two representations; namely, the successor to Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses (Joshua) and this Jesus who was slain and hung on a tree and later believed to be resurrected (Tutankhamun) are one and the same individual in Egyptian history? It certainly appears so. The sudden appearance of Joshua in the Bible when the Jews entered the Promised Land is believed to be literary fiction and part of the cover-up o the death of the "anointed" Egyptian Messiah and Son of God by the Israelites.

Much has been written down through history about a Ben Pandira. The Talmud generally refers to Jesus as "a certain person" and not by a name. In some Talmudic passages he is named "Ben Pandira" (the son of Pandira). Since the Jews do not agree that Jesus was the Son of God, they suggested that Pandira was a lover, not the husband, of Mary.

Answer for yourself: Are you also aware that the word Pandira is a Hebrew form of an ancient Egyptian royal term? The word in Hebrew is Pa-ndi-ra, and in its original form is Pa-ntr-ra (pronounced Pa-neter-ra).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that all Egyptian kings and Pharaohs since 3000 B.C.E. had the title "Pa-neter-ra" which means they were thought of and called the "Son of Ra" or "Son of God"? Is this the same term applied to Jesus? Yes it is.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? This means that the term "Ben Pandira" by which this Jesus is referred to in the Talmud, written after 200 C.E., means that this person is the "Son or Ra", "Son of God" and an Egyptian Pharaoh. Now we only have to decide which one it is of several we have to choose from. This will become abundantly clear as we continue our study.

Answer for yourself: Now is this the Jesus of the New Testament?

A summary is in order. We have seen in earlier articles that the Talmud Rabbis speak of a "Jesus" being killed by the Priest of Akhenaten over a thousand years earlier than the Jesus of the New Testament and his name is Pinhas. We see that these Essenes were followers of an "Essa" and a "Jesus-Joshua" that lived long before the New Testament times who was an "anointed" Messiah and Son of God. Then we see that these same Talmudic Rabbis state that this Jesus is "Ben Pandira" which now we see is an Egyptian royal term for "Son of God" again. It appears that we are speaking about a historical "Son of God" who was believed to be the "image of the living Lord" and that lived long before the New Testament times and the Roman depiction of this "Jesus"; an anointed Messiah of Egypt who was killed and believed to have resurrected and "returned" in some form or fashion.

Answer for yourself: Is it a coincidence that the title "son of Ra" was found engraved on Tutankhamun's stele which was found in the Karnak Temple in 1905?

As we move on let us mention that Tutankhamun's wife was named Ankhsenpa-aten.

Answer for yourself: With our identification of the Biblical "Joshua-Jesus" with Tutankhamun then should we not expect and do we find similarities between Tutankhamun's wife and the Mary Magdalene of the New Testament which is portrayed as having a close relationship with the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus"? We should expect to find similarities and we do find them in abundance. There are so many similarities between Ankhsenpa-aten, Tutankhamun's queen, and Mary Magdalene that coincidence can again be thrown out the window.

First of all the name "Mary" meant "beloved" in ancient Egypt. Alabaster ointment jars, like the ones used by Mary to anoint the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" were found in the Tutankhamun tomb. His wife is shown anointing him with perfume, on the back of his throne, exactly as the evangelists described Mary Magdalene anointing Jesus.

The couple are shown together in several scenes, always in a relaxed, romantic mode..." In looking at these scenes one cannot help but sense her love for Tutankhamun which is similar to Mary Magdalene's love for Jesus.

As his wife and queen, she was the only person who could attend his funerary rites, witness the priests proclaim his resurrection, and inform his disciples of the news of his resurrection. Let us not forget a similar announcement of the resurrection of the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" which is likewise heralded by a Mary the "beloved" in the New Testament.

The term "Magdalene" has been explained as belonging to or from the city of Magdala, an unidentified location on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. The Hebrew word migdol means "a tower".

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that a city named Migdol was located on Horus Road, leading from Egypt to Gaza? Ezekiel 29:10 mentions it: "... the tower (migdol) of Syene (in the Eastern Delta) even unto the border of Ethiopia".

This Mary is described in the Bible, as a person who is emotionally related to Jesus. The Bible tells us of her first encounter with Jesus, "there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head" (Mark 14:3). Luke described the very romantic scene of the two: "And [she] stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment" (Luke 7:38).

As a result of this close relationship, Mary Magdalene became one of those who followed Jesus until after his death. She was very close to Jesus. She waited at his temporary burial place, after his death. She was the one who Jesus talked to after his resurrection:

"Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master. Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" (John, 20: 16-17).

So the evidence mounts as our identification of Tutankhamun being the "prototype" for the historical Joshua-Jesus.

By now the reader should know that the religious revolution in Egypt started by Tutankhamun's grandfather Amenhotep III and continued by his son Akhenaten, Tutankhamun's father, stressed a Monotheistic belief in God and a repentance away from the worship of individual "neteroo" like what had developed in the 18th Dynasty with the overemphasis on Osiris worship. It can be said that in spite of Tutankhamun reversing many of his father's reforms in Egypt he was at heart a "secret monotheist" like his father Akhenaten and their religious concepts of God was the same as taught by the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus". He still adhered completely to the Aten worship, as evident from his recovered throne.

It is impossible to discuss Aten without mentioned his biggest promoter, the pharaoh Amenhotep IV, or Akhenaten. Early in his reign, Akhenaten worshipped both Amon (the chief god in Thebes at the time) and Aten. The first as part of his public duties, the latter in private. When he restored and enlarged the temple of Aten first built by his father Amenhotep III, relations between him and priests of Amon became strained. The priests were a major power in Egypt and if another god became supreme they would lose their own prestige and possibly their financial support. Eventually, relations became so strained that Akhenaten decided to built his own capital by the Nile, which he called, "Akhetaten", the Horizon of the Aten. At Akhetaten, Akhenaten formed a new state religion, focusing on the worship of the Aten. It stated that Aten was the supreme god and their were no others. Akhenaten systematically began a campaign to erase all traces of the old gods, especially Amon. He erased the name of Amon from the temples and public works. He even went so far as to erase his own father's cartouche because the word "Amon" was featured in it. Even the word "gods" was unacceptable because it implied there were other deities besides Aten. At the top of his throne the reader can see the symbol of the Aten, with its extending rays, giving the ankh, the Egyptian key of life, to Tutankhamun and his wife. The Aten is represented here as the sole God.

Tutankhaten, under the influence of the Thebes Priesthood of Amun-Ra changed his name from Tutankh-aten to Tutankh-amun, and his queen's name changed to Ankhsenpa-amun. The change was in recognition of Amun which is the major God of the Thebian Priesthood. Under the influence of the Thebian Priesthood in Moses' absence Tutankhamun reopened the Temples and gave permission to renew the worship of God in the form of the "neteru". That being the case the Amun-Ra priesthood and temple incomes were restored which effectively reversed the religious reforms set in place by Akhenaten. Restoration of buildings and grounds of the temples were carried out. A stela of Tutankhamun at Karnak includes the official work order: "Now His Majesty appeared as king at a time when the temples of the neteru from Elephantine as far as the Delta marshes had fallen into ruin, and their shrines become neglected. They had turned into mounds overgrown [with] weeds, and it seemed that their sanctuaries had never existed."

Answer for yourself: Does this not remind you of the complaint that Jesus is said to have made about the conditions of the temple at Jerusalem?

John 2:14-16 14 And found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting: 15 And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables; 16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise. (KJV)

In his Year 9 Tutankhamun, accompanied by Aye, went to Sinai to try to urge Akhenaton and his followers to return to Egypt. His message to them was to live in harmony (Egyptian concept of "Ma'at") with people of a different belief. It was time to make peace and unify all of Egypt and its people.

Answer for yourself: Can we find the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" teaching the same thing? Yes we can. This very same agenda and mission is echoed in the Gospel account in Matthew, chapter 5, of the Sermon on the Mount given by Jesus:

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God ... Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill ... Agree with thine adversary quickly ... Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also ... Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you ... That ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven."

Tragically, because of his reversing many of Akhenaten's religious reforms in Egypt and re-opening and refurbishing the Temples devoted to the "neteroo" in Egypt and instead of his pleas for peace and reconciliation being accepted, Tutankhamun was accused of betraying the faith of Aten and Moses. This was a charge of idolatry and blasphemy against God which were made of him and his actions. He was thus considered an idolator and was killed according to the Laws of Akhenaten (Moses).

Exod 20:1-6 1 And God spake all these words, saying, 2 I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. 3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me. 4 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: 5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; 6 And shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments. (KJV)

In the quest to create the Torah's ideal society, it is necessary to designate certain crimes as so heinous that they carry the ultimate penalty - death. At times, it is even necessary to go beyond execution and bodies of the slain were hung on a stake or tree. According to Moses the commandment prohibiting idolatry teaches that one should serve no created thing - no angel, no plant, no star, nothing of the four fundamentals, earth, water, fire, and air, nor anything that is formulated from them. Even if the worshiper knows that God is the Supreme Being and worships creation as a way of glorifying God's greatness and His ability to create great beings and things, nevertheless this is idol worship (Mishneh Torah, Laws of Idolatry, chapter 2, law 1 and 4). This is the very crux of what Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) was emphasizing in his religious reforms in Egypt. A person may ponder the heavenly spheres and observe that they do not die like other things and mistakenly come to bow down to them and serve them. To do this is to place them between oneself and the Creator. For although God may have assigned these celestial beings certain roles in the conduct of the world, nevertheless, man's responsibilities are to God and not to God's messengers. This, in fact, is how idolatry came to exist in the world. The generations that lived immediately after Adam recognized that God had created magnificent heavenly beings, the sun to rule by day and the moon to rule by night. And these people began to honor God's exalted messengers. This was mistakenly done when Egypt began to worship aspects of the One God instead of worshipping the "One which represented the All". Thus worship of individual "neteru" was prohibited by Akhenaten where he refocused man's worship on the "One God" which contained all the "neteru". That means that the worship of Osiris and Isis as "aspects of the One God" was forbidden by Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses). To do so was in Akhenaten's mind idolatry and punishable by death. The tragic mistake of worshipping these various aspects of the One True God is that soon it was forgotten that these messengers had been appointed by the Creator, and the sun and the moon began to be honored for their own greatness. This devolved to the worship of these creations as deities themselves without awareness of the God that had created them (Mishneh Torah, Laws of Idolatry, chapter 1, law 1).

Having seen the seriousness of idolatry and the failure to worship God correctly in the mind of Akhenaten then let us move on.

As seen from prior studies both the Bible and the Talmud agree that the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" was in Egypt. This is important as we look at the parallels between the "Joshua-Jesus" and Tutankhamun.

Jesus was in Egypt for the Gospel of Matthew, chapter 2:15 states:

"Out of Egypt have I called my son" (Matthew 2:15).

The Talmudic Rabbis relate:

"Jesus the Nazarene who practiced magic in Egypt" (b.Sanh.,107b).

The writer of the Gospel of Luke relates to the reader that this "Joshua-Jesus" was a king.

Luke 1:32-33 32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: 33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If our identification of Tutankhamun as the original "historical Joshua-Jesus" and prototype for the later "historical Joshua-Jesus" of the New Testament is correct then should we not expect that the writers of the New Testament would depict the New Testament Jesus as a king as well? We should and that is exactly what we find. The New Testament Jesus is a king just like his Egyptian counterpart, the Pharaoh-king Tutankhamun.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Mary, the New Testament mother of the "Joshua-Jesus", was called "the descendant of princes and rulers" by the Talmudic Rabbis (b. Sanh., 106a)?

Answer for yourself: Are you also aware that these same Talmudic Rabbis state that this same "Joshua-Jesus", who was a king, was "crucified"?

"...It seems that the king is crucified" (T. Sanh. 9:7).

Answer for yourself: What have we seen so far? M. Gadalla, Gary Greenberg, and A. Osman have brought this information to the forefront for those who desire to have the truth behind our inherited "Jesus Stories" (M .Gadalla, The Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, p. 205-218). Besides that interest is on the rise concerning the "Egyptian roots" of Christianity like never before; such is the fruit of archeology. I am indebted to these men as well as other Egytologists today which are helping us hear this hidden message of the "historical Joshua-Jesus" as the rocks cry out the truth like never before. Thank God for the science of archeology that is setting "inherited theology" straight.

I have spent the space of 3 articles detailing the unbelievable similarities of the New Testament's depiction of the "Joshua-Jesus" with the events of the historical Tutankhamun. If only 2 or 3 similarities has been discovered then we could say we have a coincidence but when the number of similarities reaches the number that it has as shown in these 3 articles then we have left the realm of "coincidence" and moved into the realm of "certainty". And we are not through yet for not only do we find unbelievable similarities between the New Testament depiction of the "Joshua-Jesus" with the Pharaoh Tutankhamun in his life but the clincher is that these incredible similarities between the Pharaoh Tutankamun and the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" continue when contrasting their deaths as well. This is the topic for the next article in this series.

WAS TUTANKHAMUN THE PROTOTYPE FOR THE "HISTORICAL JESUS"? #4

Having seen the unbelievable similarities between the New Testament depiction of the "Joshua-Jesus" with the Pharaoh Tutankhamun in his life we now move to the study of these same unbelievable similarities between the Pharaoh Tutankhamun and the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" in contrasting their deaths as well.

One thing is certain when viewing the condition of Tutankhamun's mummy. He met a violent death. An extensive examination of Tutankhamun's mummy, including the use of x-rays, was carried out in 1968. The mummy was found to have many broken bones and joints. The tissues of the face were contracted. The teeth were tightly clenched together. There was no evidence of disease as the cause of death.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware of one very important thing that was found from the examination of his mummy that links him with the Hebrews that lived in Egypt? Examination of Tutankhamun's mummy provided evidence that he had several Semitic features. Of course this should be expected for our long study has shown us that he is one of the "Hebrew Pharaohs".

The funerary mask of Tutankhamun, the best likeness of a Pharaoh ever found, shows the suffering eyes of the young King, at his death.

Howard Carter reported that he found many items in Tutankhamun's tomb that linked them "to later Christian beliefs and practices" such as:

- His scepter which was used in conjunction with offerings. It contains this text: "The beautiful God, beloved, dazzling of face like the Aten when it shines ... Tutankhamun" which reminds us of the transfiguration of the New Testament's "Joshua-Jesus". This text is very similar to the biblical accounts of the Transfiguration of Jesus and his "shining face" on the Mount shortly before he died.
- Fruits and seeds of Christ-thorn, a tree like a hawthorn, native to ancient Egypt, used for food or medicine, and also said to have had some religious significance. These thorny shrubs said to have been used for Christ's crown of thorns: *"And the soldiers plaited a crown of thorns, and put it on his head,... (John, 19:2).
- Howard Carter discovered two ritual robes in Tutankhamun's tomb which he later identified as the *"same priestly dalmatic worn by Christian deacons and bishops."

Answer for yourself: What should we have noticed from finding of these seeds of a "Christ-thorn" tree? These seeds come in the spring of the years. This botanical evidence found in Tutankhamun's tomb shows that Tutankhamun must have died in the spring which as we all know is the time of the Passover which coincides with the Talmudic Rabbis who state that the "Joshua-Jesus" was killed by Pinhas, the Priest of Akhenaten at the time of the Passover at Sinai and was buried seventy days later, the time required for the mummification process. Spring blossoms and fruits were found in wreaths, on top of the second and third coffins. These must have been dried out before use. The wreath on the third coffin included the mandrake fruits, sliced in half which were dried out before they were sewn on to the wreath. Additionally, the blue water-lily used in these wreaths does not bloom until the summer.

Answer for yourself: Then is it any coincidence that our Tutankhamun most probably died in April at the same time as the New Testament records for the time of Christ's death? The evidence mounts that we are speaking about the same person and the "historical Jesus" which we thought was living in the first century really lived around 1350 B.C.E. and the telling of the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus" story was nothing more than the recount of the Essenes' belief that their "anointed Teacher of Righteous", who himself had been slain as had Tutankhamun, would return in the form of a successor who came in the "anointing" of the prior Sons of Ra from the family of King David whom we know today as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III. After a while as you place evidence upon evidence and we are not longer looking through a glass darkly; in fact it become crystal clear that the "historical Joshua-Jesus" from which all later "crucified messiahs" were taken was the Egyptian Son of God Tutankhamun.

There are a conflicting accounts not only of how Jesus died, but also who condemned him. The same can be said for Tutankhamun. It appears that there is a cover-up of this event as you shall now see.

The cross as we know it is identified as the symbol of Christ. The four Gospels are consistent in saying that Jesus was crucified on a cross.

Answer for yourself: What is the problem with such a statement as made in the Gospels? Rome never used a "cross" but rather used a single stake. We know this for certain since archeology again has provided us with ossuaries containing the wooden stake with the corpse still nailed to parts of it. Rome did not use a "cross-beam" as we imagine.

Answer for yourself: Where do we get the idea of this "cross-beam" then? We get it from astronomy since the crucifixion was first seen in the Heavens and finds it origin with Astronomy.

Answer for yourself: Where then do we get the idea of a "cross" then if this is not the way Rome crucified their seditionists and traitors? As mentioned briefly above believe it or not we get the idea from Astronomy and it goes all the way back to Egypt thousands of years before the first century and we find this concept in Egyptian religion as the "Sun was crucified in the Heavens before the foundation of the world. This all has to do with the Spring and Vernal Equinox as the Sun is risen from the dead of the Winter Solstice and is "born again" after fighting the "dark-evil" or the "darkness"; otherwise known as the "dark=evil" or "D-evil" or "Devil" for 3 days at the Winter Solstice since the Sun remains motionless for 3 days at the darkest time of the year before it begins to set in a northerly direction again this promising the hope of Spring and "new birth". Simply said the Sun, as it rose above the celestial equator (its path and trajection moving upward from the southern hemisphere to the northern hemisphere as the tilt of the earth moves) in the Spring also "crossed" the plane of the elliptical orbit of the earth around the Sun and this "intersection" of these two plans formed a "cross" in the Heavens over which the Sun passed. The passing of this Sun over this "x" or "crossing of the intersection" of the celestial equator of the earth as it intersected the elliptical orbit of the earth around the Sun was called by the Ancients "the Sun being crucified" and when this Astronomical event was later "personified" in the form of a man (the Son of God...the Sun being again personified as the "Son of the Sun") it was understood that the "Son of God was crucified on a cross". Startling as it sounds it was the 6th century before the Rome Church began to use the "cross" as a symbol attached to the death of the Son of God whom they re-defined as their "historical Joshua-Jesus"; either having lost the Gnosis of the death of Tutankhamun as their original "historical Joshua-Jesus" or adapting the concept anew.

The Cross is thus connected and identified as the symbol of Christ. The four Gospels are consistent in saying that this Jesus or this "Joshua-Jesus" was crucified:

- "And they crucified him ..." (Matthew, 27:35)
- "And when they had crucified him ..."(Mark, 15:24)

"And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him ..." (Luke, 23:33)

- "Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus ..."(John, 19:23).
- Paul describes too: "... Jesus, whom ye have crucified ..." (Acts, 2:36).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that crucifixion was a Roman, not an Israelite, form of execution and that crucifixion was prohibited as a death penalty by the Torah; thus meaning that Jews were not allowed this form of punishment of evil-doers? Then how is it that we blame the Jews for the death of this "supposed historical Joshua-Jesus in the first place?

This form of execution would be only expected had Jesus been tried and condemned by a Roman court.

The Israelites hanged the condemned person from a tree:

"And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death ... thou hang him on a tree" (Deuteronomy, 21:22).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Talmudic Rabbis write in the Talmud that Jesus was both crucified and hanged?

"It seems that the king [Jesus] is crucified" (T. Sanh., 9.7).

"Jesus was hanged" (b. Sanh., 106b)

"They hanged him on the eve of the Passover" (b. Sanh., 43a).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there are also references in the New Testament to Jesus being hanged?

Peter states:

"... whom they slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts, 10:39).

Paul also stated:

"... they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulcher" (Acts, 13:29).

Answer for yourself: Then does it not appear from the above references that the Jews considered "crucifixion" and "hanging" as synonymous in this case? It would appear so.

Sadly the New Testament clearly and totally blames the Israelite priests:

"... the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death" (Matthew, 20:18)

Peter pointed at the Jerusalem priests:

":.. Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts, 5:30)

Paul said:

"the Jews, who killed the Lord Jesus" (I Thessalonians, 2:14-15).

It is important in light of the above verse that the Talmud clearly identifies Jesus' killer as Pinhas, the Israelite priest who lived in the fourteenth century B.C.E. and was a companion of Moses.

Pinhas or Phinehas and many other followers of Akhenaten looked upon "Joshua-Jesus'" teachings of religious coexistence and re-institution of the Amun-Ra Priesthood and Temple worship of the "neteru" as blasphemy and idolatry and a perversion and desecration of the Laws of Moses concerning idolatry and blasphemy. Thus in the Spring, as evidenced by the seeds in the tomb of Tutankhamun and on the eve of the Passover the Talmudic Rabbis relate that this Pinhas or Phinehas as we have seen, the priest serving Akhenaten, killed this "Jesus" or "Joshua-Jesus" in the Tabernacle at the foot of mount Sinai.

Aye (Ephraim), the second son of Joseph the Patriarch, and Tutankhamun's successor after his death, killed thousands of Israelites including Phinehas as a punishment for this "Joshua-Jesus'" death (Moustafa Gadalla, Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, p. 218-220). The Hebrews had killed the Son of God who was called "the Image of the Living Lord". The Hebrews had killed their "savior" and hope of reconciliation with Egypt. The Hebrew had killed the "anointed" Son of God and the Egyptian Messiah and they would pay the ultimate price at the hand of Aye, the Biblical Ephraim, who would avenge the Pharaoh's death.

If we take a second to reflect on the many pieces of this puzzle which have been presented to us and look again at how the evidence stacks up thereby repeatedly making the identification of Tutankhamun with the "Joshua-Jesus" of the New Testament then it is fairly evident that it is a gross error to think that "Jesus the Nazarene means a first century historical figure named "Jesus" that came from a location called Nazareth.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that scholars tell us that the city of Nazareth was not even exiting in the first century when the supposed "historical Jesus" was supposed to have lived. Among the terms by which the Qumran community referred to themselves was "Keepers of the Covenant", which appears in the original Hebrew as "Nozrei ha-Brit". From this term derives the word "Nozrim", one of the earliest Hebrew designations for the sect subsequently known as "Christians". The modern Arabic word for Christians, "Nasrani", derives from the same source. So, too, does the word "Nazorean" or "Nazarene", which, of course, was the name by which the "early Christians" referred to themselves in both the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. Contrary to the assumptions of later tradition, it has nothing whatever to do with Jesus' alleged upbringing in Nazareth, which, the evidence (or lack of it) suggests, did not even exist at the time. Indeed, it seems to have been the very perplexity of early commentators encountering the unfamiliar term "Nazorean" that led them to conclude Jesus' family came from Nazareth, which by then had appeared on the map. In other words the city was not known to exist when Jesus was a believed to be a child and he could not have lived there! (Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh, The Dead Sea Scroll Deception, p. 174). This whole confusion occurs because the writers of the New Testament were unfamiliar with not only the geography of Israel and the lack of any current city named "Nazareth" in the first century but were equally ignorant of the sect of Jews called the "Nazarenes". The word "Nazarene", instead of meaning the location of a city in first century Israel, in reality signifies a religious sect and not a geographical location.

Answer for yourself: And whom were they? The Nazarenes were one of many Gnostic sects which Rome will persecute and forge and alter tragically the "first New Testament"; thereby making the "Christ within" an assumed "historical Christ" that was supposed to have lived in the first century. We have already dealt with the complete absence of all contemporary writers of the time to mention such a "historical Messiah" or a "historical Joshua-Jesus". In other words the mystical resurrection of the Logos/Messiah/Christ/Karast within all mankind was reinterpreted by Rome to be a "historical Christ" contemporary with the first century when all Jewish prophecy according to Daniel chapter 9 (seventy weeks) was to find its fulfillment no later than 70 C.E. The only problem is that Israel was found wanting by God and their hoped for Messiah in the spirit and anointing of Tutankhamun, the Egyptian Messiah and Son of God did not appear and they received judgement from God for violating the commandments of the Second Tablet of the Law (failure of loving mankind...the Gentiles).

Hebrew Jews, to this day use the term Nazarene for Christians. The Qumran community call themselves "Keepers of the Covenant", which translates to Hebrew as "Nazrie ha-Brit". The word "Nazrim" was derived from the Hebrew name "Nazrie ha-Brit". Nazrim, therefore is the earliest Hebrew name of the sect subsequently known as Christian. (Moustafa Gadalla, Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, p. 222).

The Essenes are the owners of the library of the Dead Sea Scrolls which date to 200 B.C.E., but few ever read them or study them to see that they contain accounts of the later references in the Gospels of the account of birth, life and death of a "Jesus". But before you begin to think that this is the "New Testament Jesus" or the supposed "historical Jesus of the first century" understand fully that they contain accounts of a previous "Joshua-Jesus" who was born, lived an died and who was expected to return. In short, the Essenes and their scrolls are the best proof yet that a "Joshua-Jesus" lived several centuries earlier than the common belief.

The Essenes is a secret Jewish sect which separated from the Jewish community at large. They regard the beliefs and teachings of the Jerusalem priesthood to be untrue. The very name of the Essenes indicate that they were followers of this "Joshua-Jesus". As explained earlier, Essenes means "Follower of Essa". Essa is the Arabic name for this prior "Jesus" whom these Dead Sea Scrolls reveal had already lived and died. Essa is the only name of Jesus to be mentioned in the Koran and was the name used by the early Christians in Egypt in the 1st century C.E.

The Dead Sea Scrolls, which pre-date the Gospels, provide the following:

- An account of the Annunciation which reads almost exactly as Luke (1 *:28-35).
- A clear statement that the Essenes believed that the Messiah (their Teacher of Righteousness) had already lived and was later killed by a Wicked Priest.
- They, in 200 BCE, were awaiting the Messiah's Second Coming, not the first.

Answer for yourself: And were these Essenes known as "Christians"? They sure were. That means that the very first Christians believed that this "Joshua-Jesus" had already lived and died and was expected to return in 170-150 B.C.E.; long before the Rome reinterpretation of this same "Joshua-Jesus" whom they "literalized" and placed in the historical setting of the first century in their re-working of the Gnostic "First New Testament" which taught only of a "mystical Christ within" and not a "historical Christ Jesus" as we have been given today in the Roman replacement of Marcion's First Gnostic New Testament.

The Book of Isaiah, dating from the 8th to 6th centuries B.C.E., introduced in the character of the suffering Servant, the Savior of the world, and the Redeemer; but that is really a misnomer for anyone schooled in the history of Egypt and familiar with the role of the Pharaoh in Egypt already knew that the Pharaoh was the Savior of his people. When we encounter Tutankhamun and his tragic murder then we now understand how he, as the Messiah of Egypt, was both the Suffering Servant of Ra and the Redeemer who tried to bring peace between the Atenists and his father Akhenaten and the Amun-Ra priests at Thebes. For his efforts at reconciliation he paid the ultimate price; he was murdered and his body hung on a tree that only later fueled down through history of other "crucified Messiahs" that eventually came to rest in the story of the New Testament "Joshua-Jesus".

The idea of this Egyptian Messiah, Christ, and Son of Ra (Son of God) as the Redeemer proves that he had already lived his life and died. The Gospels adopted the very same idea for their character of a first century Jesus, almost seven hundred years later. This was to be hugely successful only because of the cover-up of the truth surrounding Tutankhamun and how his tragic story became the skeleton for the later "Joshua-Jesus" story.

The killing of this "Joshua-Jesus" who as the "Living Image of The Lord" was always remembered by those who believed in him and later became his followers (the followers of Aten). The Jewish priesthood, however, as you might expect, deliberately concealed both his killing and its date but yet isolated remarks can be found attesting to this fact spread out in their Talmud.

Answer for yourself: How was this cover-up accomplished?.

As mentioned earlier in another article originally, both the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur) and Passover were observed as one feast in Abib (Babylonian Nisan), in the spring time because it was in the Spring again that we find the killing of Tutankhamun at the Passover. Two major changes occurred that were connected with the death of this Egyptian Messiah and Son of God:

- The Day of Atonement is now observed in autumn and not in spring.
- The significance of the Day of Atonement changed from a day of repentance, for the killing of the Egyptian Messiah and the Son of God, to become a day for general repentance for sin.

This is not a hypothetical theory but rather established on historical fact. After Moses left Egypt, he and his followers observed the feast of the Passover: "Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days ... in the time appointed of the month Abib (Nisan); for in it thou camest out from Egypt ...)" (Exodus, 23:15).

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that the Passover is originally an Egyptian spring festival that occurred at the Vernal Equinox which was observed for seven days, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first day of Abib (Babylonian Nisan)? This was also the first month of the Israelite year.

After "Joshua-Jesus" was killed at Sinai by Pinhas, the priest of Akhenaten, on the eve of the Passover, the fourteenth day of Abib, the Israelites were commanded by Moses to offer a sacrificial lamb in atonement for the killing of Jesus: "Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the Passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd thou shalt sacrifice the Passover at even [evening], at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt" (Deuteronomy, 16:2,6).

Answer for yourself: Why was a lamb used? Well a little Astronomy and knowledge of the Precession of the Equinoxes will go a long way.

Before we close our study it is important that I insert a segment to this article to catch many readers up to speed who might not have read our Astronomy and Theology website. I ask your indulgence.

In the Christian world, Easter is always celebrated in the first week after the full moon, following the vernal equinox (when day and night are of equal length in the spring). This religious occasion reflects the Christian conviction that Christ died, was buried, and subsequently disappeared on Friday, and was resurrected the third day after his death, i.e. on Sunday. It is the happiest day in the Christian calendar. The date of Easter Sunday was established by the Church Council of Nicaea in C.E. 325.

The Webster's dictionary describes Easter as "name of pagan vernal festival almost coincident in date with paschal festival of the church". The so-called "pagan" festival is the Egyptian Easter.

Answer for yourself: But, how and why was this national holiday started in Egypt so long ago and existed mind you long before the birth of the historical Akhenaten whom we now know as the Biblical Moses? How and why is this day associated with the Christian's Easter celebration?

Well we need to begin at the beginning and learn a little about Astronomy as it lies at the heart of all the world's theology as you will see if you follow the link and study the material.

Since the very beginning, time has been calculated by the movements of heavenly bodies. The movement of the Earth on its axis is a day. The movement of the Moon around the Earth is a month. The movement of the Earth around the Sun determines a year, and so on. The Sun and the entire solar system also complete a circuit within the galaxy every 26,000 years or so. This huge orbit takes place very close to the astronomical orbit of sun called the Zodiac. The ancients divided the Zodiac into 12 sections (12 tribes) and each section was given a name - Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius and Pisces. Because the solar system is moving, the first day of the year occurs a little earlier in the Zodiac each year. This movement of the solar system is called the precession of the equinox. The first day of Spring takes place in a different sign of the Zodiac every 2150 years. When this point has moved completely from one sign into another, 30 degrees, this indicates that a new age has begun. The history of mankind can be seen as the unfolding of these ages. The passage from one age into another is usually marked by great turbulence in society and in the Earth herself. The last such change took place about 2000 years ago when the Age of Pisces began. Each age has its own distinctive qualities and influences - vibrations. Each age is fundamentally different from the preceding age, not merely an improvement or expansion of it. Many say that the Age of Pisces has ended and the Age of Aquarius (the New Age) began in January, 1981. T

Answer for yourself: What does the Bible mean when it speaks about the "end of the world" being at hand? The world is still here. What the word world (in Greek aeon) means in the Bible is a period or age of human history. The world did not come to an end 2000 years ago, but an age did. The age known as the Age of Pisces, also called B.C. and an entire civilization came to an end at that time. In the same way the Age of Aries came to an end about 4000 years ago. It disappeared. Even today with all our archaeological science, we are only beginning to gather sufficient information about that age and the Glory of Egypt. Of their sciences, their wisdom, their literature, remain only a few scraps of parchment and inscriptions on the walls of tombs and temples and some tumbled-down buildings and scholars and archeologists today are just beginning to bring this information to light. As you read through the New Testament, you can see that the writers believed that one age was coming to an end, and that new and better age was to follow. Today, right now, we are reliving that same exciting event - the end of one age and the beginning of another. This time it is the Age of Pisces which is ending and the Age of Aquarius that is beginning.

More than five thousand years ago and long before the time of Moses at the beginning of the age of Aries (whose symbol was a lamb) ancient Egyptians adopted a national holiday, which came at the end of a four day ceremony which began at the SPRING Equinox. According to Egyptian legend, Osiris died, was buried and then disappeared on Friday. They called that day the "Loss of Osiris". Osiris was resurrected, on the third day, i.e. on Sunday. The fourth day was and is the day of festivities.

Osiris was associated with both the lunar and solar cycles. The four day ceremony of the death and resurrection of Osiris was therefore held in the week following the full moon (lunar cycle), following the vernal equinox (solar cycle) in the Spring at the beginning of the new solar cycle at the Vernal Equinox, which is exactly the same date set for the Christian Easter. In celestial terms it is the PASSOVER "literally" of the Sun from the southern hemisphere to the northern hemisphere as it "CROSSES" the intersection of the earth's equator and it intersection with the celestial orbit of the earth around the Sun. At this time the "Sun is on the Cross" and this occurs at the PASSOVER in the AGE of the LAMB....Aries.

Now what I say next is very, very important.

- Like the biblical "Christ Joshua-Jesus": Osiris symbolizes the divine Energy/Spirit (God) in matter; in particular in mortal forms whom we recognize as all of mankind (the Karast/Christ within which Paul speaks about).
- Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Osiris symbolizes mortal man carrying within himself the potential for spiritual salvation.

The Egyptian King embodied the personal, spiritual destiny of all mankind. He was the pattern for all mankind to emulate and "follow"; not only in life but in death.

Answer for yourself: Then is it correct to think of the Pharaoh, like Tutankhamun, the "Image of the Living Lord" and the "Son of God" as a pattern for this "Christ/Karast" within all mankind? Likewise was man to realize and respond appropriately to this revelation and "Divine Truth" that he, like his Pharaoh Tutankhamun in this example, was also "an Image of the Living Lord" and also "a Son of God"? You bet he was.

Egypt taught and believed that in death their Egyptian Pharaoh, as this "Image of the Living Lord" was assimilated to the mortal neter (god), Osiris. When the Pharaoh dies since being a "Son of God" and God's "righteous example" and "Image of the Living God" he "goes to God". We call this very same concept "going to Heaven" today.

The dead Pharaoh was equated with Osiris (Osiris being again a symbol for the "neteru" or "Divine Energy within the Pharaoh); that part of God within himself that exists and continues to live beyond physical death), and since the King represented all men, all men in death were Osiris.

The Pharaoh "In Osiris"....he was "In Karast".....He was "In Christ"...

Thus all men who identified with their Pharaoh, both in life and death by believing and living righteous lives as had their Kingly example were "In Osiris"...."In Karast"...'In Christ" as well

Answer for yourself: What about women? The same holds true but their Divine neteru was Isis as the other part of the Godhead which held a similar role with women.

So as Osiris rises from the death of winter (Winter Solstice) after 3 days fighting the darkness of death (Set/Satan/Devil....Darkness=Evil; Dark=Evil; D=Evil; DEvil) was raised to new life and resurrected and this resurrection was celebrated at the following Vernal/Spring Equinox which we call the Passover.

So this should be exciting to know that Easter Monday is and has been a national holiday in Egypt for at least five thousand years and existed long before Moses since the beginning of the Age of Aries. It is now called the "Breath of Life" day. It is the happiest day in the Egyptian calendar. People shed their winter clothes and wear their brightest outfits. Uniformed officers store their black wool uniforms, and don their white outfits. Springtime is here.

One of the best-known Easter symbols is the egg, which has symbolized renewed life since ancient times, because all living creatures begin life in the egg (womb). Egyptians continue to color eggs and eat them during their celebration just the way we do today.

As you can see, the Christian Easter is a mirror image of the Egyptians' Breath of Life celebration except for one major difference.

Answer for yourself: And what is that?

Where as the story of Tutankhamun is reflects a historical person who was the son of Akhenaten who died at the time of the killing of the Passover lamb (age of Aries) the Gospel's tale of the death of "Joshua-Jesus" and his subsequent resurrection is considered historical when in fact in the absence of any "unforged" evidence existing today and with a plethora of examples of alterations to the Christian writing of their Second New Testament to counter the earlier Gnostic New Testament which taught these same "Spiritual and Divine Concepts" in an allegorical fashion we are forced to say that the "Joshua-Jesus" Story and the ancient Egyptian tale of Osiris is but a legend. It definitely holds "Divine Truth" but it is not a historical reality as was the life of Tutankhamun. It is our hope at Bet Emet Ministries that as you study the evidences presented for yourself then you will be better able to decide if you believe in the contents of the "Jesus Story" as fact or fiction.

Now we return to our study on Tutankhamun.

One of the crucial disagreements between Akhenaten and other Hebrews with the Amun-Ra priesthood is that it was the age of Aries symbolized by a lamb but the established Amen-Ra Priesthood was opposing of changing the symbols of the Bull (the age of Taurus) which has been recognized and used in their worship of God for some 2,600 years. Opposing these "shepherds" (lambs...Age of Aries) the Amen-Ra Priesthood of Thebes did not wish to change the very heart of their worship of God. No wonder that these Egyptians came to hate "shepherds" (previously Egypt was centered in bulls...the Age of Taurus). As you can see the word "shepherd" is a code word of those wishing to acknowledge that God was doing a new thing in the Heavens; He was moving the Heavens (Precession of the Equinox) and as Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) desired the lamb symbolism was to replace the Apis bulls as the very symbol of all Egypt religion. Not everyone as you can imagine was happy with this after "having worshipped this way" for over 2000 years. This was just more fuel to the fire beside the mixed blood of Moses (Akhenaten) since being a "half-blooded Egyptian" that many did not wish to assume the throne of Egypt. But that is not the only reason. Another target of Egypt's wrath toward Akhenaten was the popular god Osiris, judge of the afterlife. Under Akhenaten, the Osirian funerary practices so central to the Egyptian way of life were purged of all religious symbolism as Akhenaten did not emphasis "life after death". That is why there is so few if any references to "life after death" in the Torah. After the 5th year of his reign, the plural form for god (neteru) no longer appeared in any writing of the time. We find this expressed in Akhenaten's proscription again graven images in Exodus 20 with the first 3 commandments.

Exod 20:2-6 2 I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. 3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me. 4 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: 5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; 6 And shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments. (KJV)

Now this is very important. Later we find that the Jewish sect, the Essenes, took the view that they had nothing to feel guilty about since they had not been a part of nor responsible for the long passed death of Tutankhamun, the Son of God at the hands of the Atenist Priests Pinhas (the earlier Hebrews). Thus the Essenes thus regarded this Egyptian Karast/Christ (Tutankhamun) as their sacrificial lamb (Passover Lamb) since he died in the Age of Aries anyway. They did not need one for the age of Pisces which was beginning to emerge as is symbol was "the fish" and not the "lamb". The end of the Age was upon them and new age was coming. We find that the teaching of "the Christ" is revealing the same.

Matt 28:20 20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. (KJV)

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

165 aion-

- 1) a period of time, an age (2,160 years)
- 2) forever, an unbroken age, perpetuity of time, eternity
- 3) the worlds, the universe

Of course the word "world" in the above verse is mistakenly interpreted instead of the word "age" in hopes that readers don't get the clues necessary to put this complicated Roman mis-mash together correctly.

On the same day, the 14th day of Abib, the Essenes, instead of sacrificing a lamb for their atonement, held a Messianic Banquet awaiting the return of their dead, Teacher of Righteousness, at the end of the world, when he would celebrate the meal with them. This Messianic Banquet is very similar to the Last Supper.

Later Christians stopped the practice of animal sacrifice because they were Essenes and therefore regarded the slain Egyptian Messiah Tutankhamun, the "historical Joshua-Jesus" himself as their sacrifice:

"For even the Son of a man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark, 10:45) and

"... Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world" (John, 1:29).

During the Babylonian exile, in the 6th century B.C.E., Ezra and Israelite priests re-wrote the books of the Pentateuch, which had originated at the time of Moses and had been destroyed in the Babylon captivity. The oral traditions were again committed to writings but this time many things were altered; especially the identities of key Biblical characters to cover up their Egyptian identities (David, Solomon, Moses, Joshua-Jesus). They went so far as to refer to the date of the Passover as either "the first month" or as Nisan. The priests replaced, in exile, the solar calendar used previously with the Babylonian lunar calendar. As a result, Tishri (September - October), which was the 7th month of the Israelites' year, became the first month of a new calendar.

Answer for yourself: And again why was this done? To separate any idea of "atonement" from the Passover which is originally carried after the death of Tutankhamun when Akhenaten ordered Israel to slay a lamb as an offering of atonement for the killing of his son Tutankhamun, the Son of God, the Living Image of the Lord.

To manage the confusion caused by the calendar change, Ezekiel divided the year into two parts with the religious observances of the first month repeated in the seventh. After their return from Babylon, the priests stopped the practice of two annual observations of the same event. This was the most opportune time to separate Atonement Day (in autumn) from Passover (in spring). Splitting one event (originally the Passover and Day of Atonement were one day following the murder of Tutankhamun) into two separate events was followed by changing the significance of the Day of Atonement from a day of repentance, for killing the Egyptian Messiah and Son of God, to become a day for general repentance for sin for all mankind.

Now here comes a rather big joke. It became increasingly interesting and ironic to me when I discovered in my study that the writers of these Hebrew Scriptures in the 6th century replaced the Egyptian Messiah as the victim slain at the Passover with an enemy of the Israelites, none other than an Egyptian Pharaoh himself; the one that opposed Akhenaten. To top it all these redactors made the Lord as the murderer instead of "the Lord; the Image of the Living Lord being the victim which is historically the truth:

"The Lord smote ... the firstborn of Pharaoh that sat on his throne..." (Exodus, 12:29).

It was Tutankhamun, the Image of the Living Lord (the representative of the Divine Force and Cosmic Energy of Eternal Life we know as God and who was symbolized as Osiris) that was killed; not the Pharaoh that persecuted his father Akhenaten much later.

No longer are we reading in these Hebrew Scriptures about the death of the Egyptian Messiah, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun, but rather the reigning Pharaoh of Egypt in Akhenaten's absence who was his son. This is a cover-up par excellence.

In their attempts to cover up that the Hebrew killed the Egyptian Messiah and Son of God who was an Atenist like themselves the writers of Hebraic historical documents left important evidence that exposes what they did. If it was simply the firstborn of a ruling Pharaoh who was smitten, there is no reason to add the words "that sat on his throne".

Therefore the biblical verse suggests that there was another Pharaoh who was not sitting on this throne who was the rightful heir and that was Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) Unintentionally, these redactors left the evidence that the victim was none other than Tutankhamun (Joshua-Jesus) who sat on his father's, Akhenaten/Moses, throne. Akhenaten was still alive, hiding in Sinai. This would have been the perfect cover-up except that the Essenes worked secretly to keep the memory of their Teacher of Righteousness alive, until his return foiled the cover-up. That is why the Dead Sea Scrolls which were discovered only about 50 years ago are so important. The Bible itself confirms that Jesus and Moses were of the same era. That Jesus lived 14 centuries earlier than had been thought would explain an event described in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke of the meeting of Jesus and Moses at the time of what is known as his Transfiguration:

"And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them. And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. And they appeared unto them Elias (Elijah) with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses. and one for Elias ..." Mark, 9:2-5.

The biblical text is a straight forward factual description of an event; the only problem is discerning "when" it actually happened. It is irrational to view the factual nature of this text as simply some kind of a "spiritual experience" and that it never actually happened! When John the Baptist died many centuries later, the Essene leaders who had been waiting for the "Second Coming of Christ" (their slain Teacher in the Spirit and Power of the Egyptian Messiah), thought that John was this possible "returning Messiah. The evangelists (the writers of the Gospels) chose to ignore the Essenes' belief in John the Baptist, as the "Second Coming of Christ/Karast", and elected to use the time period of John the Baptist, to tell the story of "Joshua-Jesus; the Egyptian Christ", as his First Coming. This led to the evangelists adopting the time of Herod the Great and Pontious Pilate for the birth and life of their Jesus. In this way their fictional account of a "literal Christ" whom they declared was God in the flesh as were their Caesars was given a historical anchor and "marker"; thereby making him appear as a real historical person and validating the Roman Emperor who was himself a "type and shadow" of another who was God in the flesh as was their creation of a "historical Christ".

After "Joshua-Jesus" died at the foot of Mount Sinai, and the subsequent death of Phinehas, they both disappeared from the scene. However, later in the book of Joshua, we have both Joshua and Phinehas reappearing alive and as if they had never been killed. This, as you be able to see now quite well, is but a literary ploy to cover up the death of the true "historical Joshua-Jesus" in Egypt by the Hebrews who was the Pharaoh Tutankhamun. This is an unbelievable contradiction in the Bible but cleverly done by the redactors of Rome beginning with Irenaeus who responded to Marcion's "First New Testament" which taught only the "Mystical Christ Within" with the anti-Gnostic "Second New Testament" which replayed the slain Son of God, the Egyptian Messiah as the "historical Joshua-Jesus" as if he had come the first time in the first century. Let me end this article by reminding you that I and thousands of others who have investigated this topic relentlessly have not be able to find just "one" shred of "unforged" or "dishonest" testimony to the existence of a "historical Jesus Christ" in the New Testament outside of this one grossly forged Christian Bible which was pawned off on the world by the power of the Holy Roman Empire as an "infallible, inspired, and inerrant" oracle from God.

Bet Emet Ministries has spent years looking for a Jewish Jesus. The good news is that we found "the mind of Christ" which was truly Jewish and which taught us some of the highest ideals of God we could ever hope to ever learn; truths that changed our lives for the better. Looking even deeper and not being able to find any credible evidence for a "historical Jesus" in the first century in Judaism we did find a "Jesus"; however this "Jesus" lived long before the first century as attested by the Talmudic Rabbis. Looking into the origins for this "earlier Jesus" took us to Egypt where along the way we found the "Gnostic Christ Within" which we also found had been taught since the beginning of mankind; in particular again the beginning of Egypt by its enlightened Priest. Again in looking into this "Mythical Christ Within" we found the "Mythical Christ" from Egyptian Astronomy which revealed this "Higher Christ Within" on the metaphysical level. Observing types and shadows from Egypt own down through history we were consistently at a loss to find the "historical Jesus" as a real person in the Roman first century. But that sad fact does not negate the wonderful "spiritual truths" given us by the Divine Creator as taught in the "inner mysteries" of the religion of Egypt which find expression with the "Mystical Christ" and "Mythical Christ" on our websites. But absent from all of this research undertaken as the most serious search for God and the Divine I have been unable to find any unforged evidence for the existence for a "historical Jesus" in the First Century. Based on all my findings and presentations on our 14 other websites believe me when I say I have thoroughly researched this most difficult subject like few ever in the history of the world. Considering all that I have uncovered the evidence is overwhelming and conclusive and it is my conclusion that such a depiction of a "historical Jesus" in the first century in the Roman "Second New Testament" is not only a tragic misrepresentation of the spiritual truths of the "Christ Within" as taught by the Gnostic First New Testament but is a blurred presentation of a much earlier slain "historical Karast/Christ" of that lived long ago in Egypt in 1350 B.C.E.; he truly was the "Image of the Living Lord" and the "Son of God" and his name we remember today as Tutankhamun.

THE 18TH PHARAONIC DYNASTY OF EGYPT: IS THERE A LINK TO JESUS?

Few would acknowledge, given the state of our society's technological expertise, that our understanding of history could be significantly inaccurate.

During and after my years in Seminary and during my early years of my pastorate, I became interested in the deeper hidden origins of Christianity and decided to do some further reading on the "famous Rabbi Yehoshua" from a Jewish perspective. Reading "outside the box" and "Christian viewpoint" I found, much to my dismay, that there was no historical evidence of this Rabbi Yehoshua outside the New Testament from the time in which he was supposed to have live. I was shocked to find that there is absolutely no unaltered or unforged historical evidence that Jesus, Joseph or Mary ever existed, let alone that Joseph was a carpenter or that Jesus was born in Bethlehem and lived in Nazareth. Amazing to me is that the more I studied the more that I encountered unbelievable parallels to the "the Jesus Story" throughout most of these ancient nations and their religious literature from Egypt own down to the emergence of Greece and Rome. It seemed that the story of "Jesus" had been told almost identically over and over again for thousands of years prior to his assumed historical birth.

Answer for yourself: If Jesus was not an historical person, where did the whole New Testament story come from in the first place? As my studies finally took me to Egypt I found the genesis or core of all later "Jesus Stories" when I encountered the Osiris, Isis, and Horus myth. As shown on prior websites of this ministry the very basis for the "Jesus Stories" we find in the New Testament are the personifications of the Sun in its path through the Heavens and the Zodiac. From these observations of the moments of these orbs by the Ancients patterns and cycles and laws were recognized and represented in the form of legends and myths to capture for all time the hidden message in such movements of the Creator as He wrote on the blackboard of the Sky. But here was more. What I found as well is that among these Ancient myths and legends, mixed in with this "Osiris-Jesus" story we find the shadow of a historical truth that goes all the way back to Egypt as well. I discovered that if you want to find the "historical Jesus" then you have to look to Egypt once again and the Pharaohs of the 18th dynasty. This will become plain to the reader as we study the 18th dynasty and see how the truths surrounding it, although jumbled today, can be sorted out and in so doing we find the true historical reference to a "King Jesus" hidden in Ancient Pharaonic history. Let us see this unfold as we study.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever noticed the similarities between the two Biblical stories involving Moses, Joshua (Jesus), a mountain, and a tabernacles; one in the Old Testament and one in the New Testament? First of all we need to understand that the word "Joshua" and "Jesus" are interchangeable. That being said then we need to ask which on the surface appears to be a "far out" question. Could these two stories be "doublets" or be regarded as different versions of the same events?

Answer for yourself: What is a Biblical doublet? In literature dealing with Biblical rhetorical structures, doublets are usually referred to as rhetorical parallelism or synonymous parallelism which is characteristic of the Hebraic language.

Most of our readers will more than likely jump the gun and say without a doubt that these New Testament and Old Testament "doublets" are different historical stories separated by great lengths of time and assume that I have lost my mind. But I assure you that there is more here than meets the eye at first glance. Let us see the evidence.

In the New Testament account of the Transfiguration if recorded for us in Matt. 17:1-5

Matt 17:1-5 1 And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, 2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. 3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. 4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. 5 While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. (KJV)

Understanding that these stories come from oral traditions before they are recorded we will take only a second to refer the reader to our "Jesus-Astrotheology" website where the astronomy behind such events and its personification is described beyond any doubt. But for our purposes here we will deal with the events as an assumed historical event. Thus we are led to believe that the New Testament Jesus took the disciples Peter, James and John to a high mountain where "he was transfigured before them" and they saw him talking with Moses and Elias (Elijah). We also see that Peter suggested that the disciples should make three tabernacles, one each for Jesus, Moses and Elijah.

Answer for yourself: Does this bring to mind an earlier story of the Old Testament Moses who also was "transfigured" before his people as well? It should. The Old Testament account is the one that relates how Moses received the Ten Commandments of the Lord on Mount Sinai, the holy mountain in the wilderness.

According to the Bible, for three months the Israelites camped at the foot of Mount Sinai following the Exodus. The Book of Exodus relates for the reader that Moses was summoned to meet the Lord on the mountain to receive tablets of stone bearing the Ten Commandments:

Exod 24:13 13 And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua: and Moses went up into the mount of God. (KJV)

In Moses absence the Israelites are said to have gathered together all their earrings and made a golden calf and worshipped it. As they descended from Mount Sinai, Moses and Joshua heard the noise of the subsequent celebrations and Joshua commented:

Exod 32:15-18 15 And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written. 16 And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables. 17 And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp. 18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noise of them that sing do I hear. (KJV)

Moses was so angry over what had happened while he was away that he cast down the tablets bearing the Ten Commandments and shattered them.

Exod 32:19 19 And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount. (KJV)

The God of Moses had neither shape nor image. In his first encounter with the Lord on the same mountain, before the supposed time of the Exodus, when Moses was attracted by the burning bush that was not consumed by the flames, he heard the voice of the Lord in his mind.

Exod 3:4 4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. (KJV)

Yet on the occasion of his journey to obtain replacement tablets inscribed with the Ten Commandments, we have an indication of a physical presence:

Exod 34:5-6 5 And the LORD descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the LORD. 6 And the LORD passed by before him... (34:5-6).

Here we have the Lord standing with Moses.

Answer for yourself: Who was this "LORD"?

Answer for yourself: What does the Hebrew word for "LORD" mean?

It can mean two things so we have to choose. The word for Lord in Hebrew (Adon) and Greek (Kyrios) can mean either:

- The Lord in the sense of God, the Invisible Creative Energy of the Universe or
- A master in the sense of a human superior

So in reality this "LORD" we find in the text can refer to God or a human being which carries authority. Many interpretations have been presented down through time as to the identity of this "LORD". In this case it has been taken by many scholars and by the apostle Paul as indicating Jesus.

Answer for yourself: How so?

1 Cor 10:1-4 1 Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; 2 And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; 3 And did all eat the same spiritual meat; 4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. (KJV)

As with the Talmudic references to Jesus, there are strong indications in the New Testament that an assumed historical figure of Jesus was present with the Israelites in the wilderness of Sinai at the time of the Exodus as seen above. This leaves no doubt in the minds of biblical scholars about what Paul was trying to say:

"It is much more likely that Paul here means that the Rock really was Christ...That is to say, he believed that the Messiah was in some form present with the people during this critical period in the wilderness" (R. Hanson, Allegory and Event, p. 79).

Answer for yourself: Could this reference have been a person like an "anointed Pharaoh" who held an official position once in Egypt who was leaving to go to Palestine which again was Egyptian land?

In addition to receiving the new tablets, Moses was told:

Exod 34:18 18 The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt. (KJV)

Moses again does not appear to have been alone when he came down from the mountain with the two new inscribed tablets for Joshua was with him just as we see in the account in the New Testament where again Moses and Joshua/Jesus are found together again on the mountain. After their descent, Joshua entered the Tabernacle and Moses followed him a number of times, re-emerging to report to the Israelites what was happening inside. The account of these proceedings echoes the story of the Transfiguration found later in the New Testament:

Exod 34:29-35 29 And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him. 30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him. 31 And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them. 32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai. 33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a vail on his face. 34 But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the vail off, until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded. 35 And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What happens to this Joshua/Jesus? Well we have the Biblical account but are you aware that there are traditions in Egypt that connect this Joshua/Jesus whom we find side by side with Moses on the mount of Sinai with the Pharaoh Tutankamun? Impossible you say? Well we might need to learn more before we dismiss such Egyptian information out of hand having previously seen the unreliability of the Biblical texts all these years during our prior studies. This becomes all the more apparent when we find upon doing such study that the knowledge of astronomy and the path of the sun can be shown to be the personified stories of the Jesus from Matthew chapter 1 through chapter 28. That being the case there is no stone that does not need to be examined or turned over to find the truth behind the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Is there the remotest chance that our "Jesus Story" could be a combination of personified astronomical myth mixed with a forgotten Egyptian historical events surrounding a group of Pharaohs?

What I want to get to is the reason for these "blurred stories" we have inherited that were taught to us as "divine historical truth" and accepted without question in our Christian Bibles.

Ahmed Osman, an Arabic and well known authority on Egypt and Egyptology, states that it is his belief that it was at this time, before the Exodus of Egypt, when Moses was at Sinai when his son came to him in a move of political-religious reconciliation and it was at this time that the Joshua/Jesus was killed. This is of course the historical Tutankamun. At this time Moses was in Sinai with only a handful of followers and some Midianite allies and the vast majority of Israelites who were followers of Moses/Akhenaten were still in Egypt.

Now again I warn you to not dismiss this outright as a preposterous impossibility; especially when we see what the Jews write about this event in their Talmud! Support for the view that I have expressed as to when the "historical Jesus/Joshua/Pharaoh Tutankamun" met his death is to be be found in rabbinical tradition, which says of the occasion:

"According to. . . (Bava Batra 121a) it is the day on which Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the second tablets of the law"* (Rot and Wigoder, The New Standard Jewish Encyclopedia, p. 191).

There are many gaps in our knowledge of Egypt that must be filled in if we are ever to make sense out of this religious confusion and jumbled chronologies as we find in the Biblical record. In order to understand the circumstances, it is necessary to trace at this point the relationship between the Israelites and the royal house of Egypt and to identify some of the most important biblical figures by their Egyptian names. Until we learn to recognize the "Biblical characters" by their Egyptian identities then it will be extremely hard to sort all this out; thus let us get our feet wet by introducing the Egyptian characters that go disguised as "Jews" in the Biblical record.

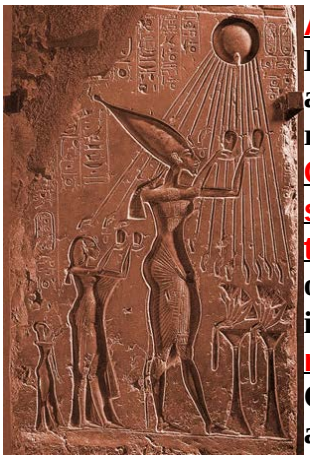
THE HIDDEN HEBREWS OF EGYPT

I am indebted to Ahmed Osman, David Rohl, Ralph Ellis, Charles Pope and many others for bringing to light this information today. Let us begin with Joseph the Patriarch.

Joseph the Patriarch, of the coat of many colors, who originally brought the tribe of Israel - his family - down to Egypt from Canaan in the fifteenth century B.C., was the grandson of Isaac and the favorite son of Jacob. We saw in a prior article that there is a good chance that Isaac's real father was Tuthmose III, the Napoleon of Egypt, a Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty. This Joseph we know was sold into slavery in Egypt by his jealous half-brothers and was appointed as a minister early in the reign of the Pharaoh Tuthmose IV (c.1413-1405 B.C.) after, according to the Old Testament, foretelling the seven good years that would be followed by seven years of famine. Joseph, in Egyptian record, is to be identified as Yuya, who served as a minister to both Tuthmose IV and his successor, Amenhotep III [the Biblical Solomon] (c. 1405-1367 B.C.) (A. Osman, Stranger In The Valley Of The Kings). Although there was no evidence to suggest that he might be of royal blood, the tombs of Yuya and his wife, Tuya, were found in the Valley of the Kings in the early years of this century buried among the Pharaohs. This is highly unusual to say the least.



Yuya's position in Egypt meant that he was resident in the royal palaces. The young prince who was to become Amenhotep III (the future King Solomon) met and fell in love with Yuya's infant daughter, Tiye. On the death of his father, Amenhotep III married his sister (as all Pharaohs did to inherit the throne), Sitamun, in order to inherit the throne, as was the Egyptian custom, but shortly afterwards Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) also married Tiye, the daughter of the Hebrew Joseph.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? It is here we have the mixing of the royal bloodline of the Pharaoh and Egypt with the bloodline of the Hebrews! This marriage of Joseph's daughter, Tiye, to Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon), made Tiye rather than Sitamun his Great Royal Wife (queen). Joseph's daughter now was "God's wife". Later, Tiye had a son, Tuthmosis, who disappeared in mysterious circumstances. Her second son, given the name Amenhotep IV (the Biblical Moses), was born, probably in 1394 B.C., at the fortified frontier city of Zarw on the eastern boundaries of Egypt proper. The Biblical records tell us that Moses was half-Hebrew so this fits. Zarw had been presented to Tiye by the king as a kind of summer palace where she could be near to her Israelite relations, who had been allowed to settle at Goshen in the Eastern Delta rather than Egypt itself because Asiatic shepherds had been "anathema" to Egyptians since the successful invasion of Egypt by the Hyksos in the seventeenth century B.C. We see from the Biblical text that when Amenhotep IV (Moses-Akhenaten) was born the ruling Pharaoh gave instructions to the midwives in attendance upon Tiye (Solomon's wife..the mother of Moses) that the child she was awaiting should be killed at birth if it proved to be a boy.

Exod 1:15-16 15 And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives, of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah: 16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him: but if it be a daughter, then she shall live. (KJV)

The reason for the king's hostility was that Tiye was not the legitimate heiress and could not therefore, as was again the Egyptian custom, be accepted as the consort of the State god Amun. Also, as she was of mixed Egyptian-Israelite blood her children could not, by Egyptian custom, be regarded as heirs to the throne. If her son succeeded to the throne, this would be regarded as forming a new dynasty of non-

Egyptian, non-Amunite, part-Israelite rulers over Egypt. The midwives did not carry out the king's orders, and on learning - perhaps from the midwives themselves - of the threat to her new-born baby's life, Tiye sent him by water to the safe-keeping of her Israelite relations at nearby Goshen. This is the source of the biblical story of Moses being found by a princess in the bulrushes by the bank of the Nile: Zarw was largely surrounded by lakes and a branch of the Nile and connected by water with Goshen.

Amenhotep IV, the Biblical Moses, spent most of his youth in the Eastern Delta and at Heliopolis where he was educated by the priests of Ra, the ancient Egyptian solar deity, and also absorbed the traditional belief in a God without an image but yet a God which is represented by His many Attributes (Neteru). The Aten, another understanding of the One God he would later introduce to Egypt, is depicted in paintings and sculptures as a circle sending rays that end in hands holding the Egyptian cross, the key of life, to the nostrils of the royal family. This is not a physical representation of the deity, but, like the Christian cross or Jewish star, a symbol, indicating salvation (as in Christianity), not the literal sun. At the Aten temple there was no physical representation to be addressed in prayer any more than the physical Ark of the Covenant, placed in the holy of holies in the Temple of Jerusalem, can be looked upon as an image of God. Nor can the Aten be identified with the sun god as this was either Ra or Atum.

The Bible statese that Moses was brought up in Pharaoh's court.

Acts 7:22 22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds. (KJV)

Moses' position at court would have most definitely ensured his admission into the initiate priesthood. A New Testament reference suggests he "was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds". Philo of Alexandria stated that Moses learned mathematics, geometry, harmonics, poetry, philosophy, Egyptian and Assyrian script and astronomy. This level of learning in those days is clear enough sign that he had joined the closed elite of the priesthood. The former Keeper of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, Sir E.A. Wallis Budge, suggested he might even have risen to the rank of High Priest. If this high rank was indeed bestowed, then Moses would have had access to every branch of specialist historical, religious and scientific knowledge vested in the Temples. This could be said for all the Pharaohs however.

Answer for yourself: Is this where acquired knowledge (Akhenaten, King Tutankamun) could have been misconstrued as sorcery by the later Jews when they recorded the inherited oral traditions?

It was not until he was a grown boy in his very early teens that Amenhotep was finally allowed to take up residence at Thebes, the capital city in Upper Egypt and the main centre of worship of the State god Amun. By this time the health of his father had begun to deteriorate and Tiye's power had increased correspondingly. In order to ensure her son's ultimate inheritance of the throne, she arranged for him to marry his half-sister, Nefertiti who was the daughter of Amenhotep III by his sister, Sitamun, the legitimate heiress. Nefertiti was to be appointed co-regent, with special emphasis on Nefertiti's role in order to placate the priests and nobles.

The young Amenhotep, whose monotheistic religious ideas were already well developed, offended the Amunite priesthood from the start of the co-regency by building temples to his God, the Aten, at Karnak and Luxor. In a climate becoming increasingly hostile, Tiye eventually persuaded him to leave Thebes and found a new capital for himself at Tell el-Amarna, some two hundred miles to the north and roughly halfway between Thebes and modern Cairo. Amenhotep named his new city Akhenaten - the city of the horizon of the Aten - in honor of his new God. At Amarna his monotheistic ideas underwent further development and he also changed his name from Amenhotep IV to Akhenaten in honor of his deity. The co-regency came to an end upon the death of his father in Akhenaten's Year 12. At the start of his five years of sole rule in 1367 B.C., Akhenaten shut down the temples of the ancient gods of Egypt, cut off all financial support for them and sent the priests home. These actions caused such bitter resentment that in his Year 15 Akhenaten was forced to install his brother, Semenkhkare, as his co-regent at Thebes. This action served only to delay the eventual crisis. Although some Egyptians had been converted to worship of the Aten, Akhenaten was warned in his Year 17 by his minister Aye - who was also his uncle, the second son of Yuya - of the threat of an army rebellion and a plot against the king's life. Aye advised a compromise, allowing the old gods of Egypt to be worshipped alongside the Aten. The king refused. Instead, the Biblical Moses, Akhenaten, abdicated - and fled to the safety of Sinai, accompanied by a small group of followers and taking with him his symbol of pharaonic authority, a staff topped by a brass serpent. Sinai was in those days a stone-mining area. Akhenaten (Moses), on arriving there, built his Tabernacle, the Tent of the Congregation, at the foot of the holy mountain.

His successor, Semenkhkare, did not survive him for long -perhaps only a few days - and was succeeded in his turn by the young king Tutankhamun, the son of Akhenaten (Moses). As can be seen from the scene on the back of the throne seat found in his tomb in the Valley of the Kings, the new Pharaoh followed his father in the worship of the Aten as the one God, but he reopened the ancient temples, allowed the worship of the old gods of Egypt and changed his name to Tutankhamun in honor of the State god Amun.

Answer for yourself: What does the Talmud say about this if anything:

The following text is taken from the Talmud:

On the eve of Passover Jesus was hanged. For forty days before the execution took place, a herald went forth and cried, "He is going forth to be stoned because he has practiced sorcery and enticed Israel to apostasy. Anyone who can say anything in his favor let him come forward and plead on his behalf." But since nothing was brought forward in his favor, he was hanged on the eve of Passover. Ulla retorted: Do you suppose he was one for whom a defense could be made? Was he not a mesith (enticer), concerning whom Scripture says, "Neither shall thou spare nor shall thou conceal him?" With Jesus, however, it was different, for he was connected with the government. (Sanhedrin 43a)

Answer for yourself: Connected with the government? How was this Jesus connected with the government?

Answer for yourself: Could this be a reference to the same event and we not know it because again the names were changed?

Tutankhamun ruled for at least nine, and perhaps ten, years (c. 1361-1352 B.C.) before meeting an early death, whereupon he was succeeded by Aye (Ephraim), his great-uncle and the last of the four Amarna kings. Aye ruled for only four years before he disappeared. Nothing much is known about his death as his mummy - if he was ever mummified - was never found, while the tomb he had excavated for himself in the Valley of the Kings, not far from that of Tutankhamun, was usurped by his successor, Horemheb, an army general who secured his seat on the throne by marrying Queen Nefertiti's sister, Mutnezmet.

The bitterness that divided the country at this period is indicated by the actions of Horemheb, who is to be looked upon as the biblical Pharaoh of the Oppression and later Exodus of the followers of Amenhotep IV (the Biblical Moses-Akhenaten). The worship of the Aten was abolished. The names of the Amarna kings were excised from king lists and monuments in a studied campaign to try to remove all traces of their rule from Egyptian memory, and it was forbidden on pain of death even to mention the name of Akhenaten. Therefore, his followers referred to him as Mos, a term used in Egyptian legal cases at this period to signify the rightful son and heir.

The small group of followers who accompanied Moses into exile in Sinai - not to be confused with the later Exodus - included the Amarna priesthood. Among them was Panehesy, who had been the Chief Servitor and Second Priest of the Aten (the Lord) at Akhenaten's temple in Amarna (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 57-63).

Answer for yourself: Why is this Panehesy so important? Simply because in the absence of any unforged record of a historical Jesus, either Gentile or Jewish till after 100 A.D., we find in the ancient Jewish tradition a record later recorded in the Jewish Talmud which speaks of the death of a Jesus by Panehesy. The name Panehesy is the equivalent of Phinehas (Pinhas), the priest named in the Jewish Talmud as having killed Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this Phinehas (Pinhas) is mentioned as killing the rebel King and opposer of his father and this religious reforms named Tutankamun?

So here we have the Talmud discussing this Jesus who was killed which many associate with Jesus of Nazareth and Egyptian records referring to a boy Pharaoh who was killed by the same person.

This is a lot to deal with at once:

- The identity of the Hebrew Patriarchs of the Bible are exposed as historical Pharaohs and we never knew it
- A confused and jumbled Biblical chronology that confuses the Biblical events and disorients them to their historical setting when paralleled with Egyptian history which is very detailed concerning these events
- The truth of the Exodus being dated incorrectly by two hundred years or so and which is tied to the Pharaoh Akhenaten (Biblical Moses) and his followers (worshippers of the Aten) as they leave Egypt after a religious-civil war
- The Egyptian record of a Joshua/Jesus/Tutankamun being killed and hung on a tree by Phinehas for sorcery and leading Egypt astray (in the mind of the followers of the Aten) which is also later recorded in the Jewish Talmud regarding a Jesus which is likewise killed and hung on a tree for leading the sin of sorcery and Israel astray which strangely appears to be the same story as the earlier story of the death of Pharaoh Tutankamun

Answer for yourself: What is the truth about these matters? Well you need to study this material sufficiently to see the truth from the fiction.

We need gather our breath and realize that our study is just beginning into these very important areas that involve Judeo-Christianity. Let me say in closing this article that it is known that the Israelites were in Egypt at the end of the 18th Dynasty and beginning of the 19th. It is possible today to create matching chronologies from Abraham to Moses on the one hand and from Tuthmose III, the 6th ruler of the 18th Dynasty (King David), and Seti I, the second ruler of the 19 Dynasty. Of the 3 periods of time given in the Old Testament (4 generations, 400 years, 430 years), 4 generations for the Israelite Sojourn in Egypt is the correct period of time and the other dates simply unreliable. This means that the descent must have taken place more than 200 centuries later than most scholars believed which explains why efforts to match biblical figures with Egyptian figures has been so protracted; they focused their quest on the wrong era. That is why historical records for the Exodus according to the Biblical record cannot be located since they are off by 200 years. Lastly the 4 Amarna Kings, Akhenaten, Semenkhkare, Tutankamun, and Aye - who ruled during a tumultuous period of Egyptian history when an attempt was made to replace the country's multitude of ancient gods with a monotheistic God, were all descendants of the Hebrew Joseph the Patriarch. We then find in closing that the Exodus was preceded by the ending of the Amarna rule by Horemheb, the last King of the 18th Dynasty. And buried deep within all this intrigue is the death of a Jesus/Joshua which finds its way later into Judaism and Jewish oral tradition and provides the only record for a certain historical Jesus that ever lived; the only problem is that it is not within the time period of the New Testament.

INTERPRETING THE "JESUS STORY" THROUGH THE 4 WAYS OF RABBINICAL TEACHING

The Websites and our spiritual pilgrimage follow but I must say that what I uncovered when getting to the bottom of the origin of the "Jesus Story" is that the "New Testament Jesus" can be understood in many different ways and in so doing yet communicate Divine Truth to the reader. I have discovered through my 20 years of study that we basically have 3 different ways to understand "the Christ" and the "Jesus Story" as I and others see it. Let it be understood up front that our "Jesus Story" is not "new"; it exits from the beginning of recorded time as found in a host of other nations and other "religions" where this personified central character, often termed "the Krst" or "the Christ", is found to be identified by a host of other names in these different religious expressions. This fact alone should make us aware that something lies behind our "Jesus Story" other than a supposed "literal" and "historical" person. We at Bet Emet Ministries have covered all 3 different understandings and presentations of this "Krst" or "Christ" which is termed "Jesus Christ" in our Christianity and the presentation of our research is distributed throughout the totality of our websites. Taken in order our Websites take the student through these 3 different understanding of "the Christ" in systematic order where we progress from our supposed inherited "literal-historical" approach to the understanding of "the Christ" to the ancient "Mystical", "Mythological" and finally the "Metaphysical" understanding of "the Christ" as taught by the ancients down through recorded history until the 2nd century and the rise of Roman Orthodoxy. Here is what we find when we do the exhaustive studies into this area:

- Historically...(Divine Spiritual allegory and myth taught through the medium of a personified and presumed historical person; although not accurate to the existence of a historical person yet very important in that it serves as an example to be emulated and followed by all mankind).
- Mythically...(personification of the Sun (the Sun being only the visible representation of the Cosmic Divine Conscious & Intelligent Energy and Divine Mind of the Creator) and its path through the Zodiac and the 4 seasons of the year; the equinoxes and solstices which again personify the growth and Spiritual maturation of the Soul and Divine Mind in "matter" and humanity)
- Mystically...(expressing a hidden teaching, a secret doctrine, given under strict and exacting conditions to approved candidates by the Masters of Wisdom regarding the descent of the Logos and Divine Mind of God into matter, ie., again mankind). Paul speaks of this:

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are all three methods of presenting "the Krst", "the Christ", or as we know of it as "Jesus Christ" equally accurate to truth? No they are not and our Websites will provide the evidence you need as a "truth-seeker" to not only see this for yourself beyond any doubt but make adjustments in your religious belief system when needed based upon the facts and evidence our Websites provide. Our focus needs to be on correctly interpreting "the Krst" and "the Christ"; both the Mystical and Mythical Christ and then being equipped with this understanding we can then and only then adequately deal with and understand what lies behind the erroneously interpreted "Historicity of the Christ" as seen in our inherited "Jesus Story" which is portrayed and interpreted to us as a supposed person of historical being, the Christ with flesh which is limited to but one person.

It goes without saying that we all begin to read and study the Bible from a "literal" perspective assuming that it is the vehicle for "literal truth" about Jesus Christ, never realizing that these ancient stories were written and were intended to be understood by the writers of this ancient Spiritual Mysteries only as Spiritual Allegories by the original writers and never to be understood as if a "literal" story. That is why we find upon study our "Jesus Story" repeated in identical form from beginning to end all the way back to pre-dynastic Egypt over 13,000 years ago. This "Christ Story" was never intended to be understood as if "limited" to but one person but to the whole of the human race. God had descended into "matte" and humanity had become the Temple of the Holy Spirit and Divine Mind of the whole Cosmos. It is this hidden mystery, that the Divine Mind incarnated into all "matter" and finds Self-expression in all manifestations of "matter", especially humanity, that is lost in our current understanding of "the Jesus Story" we have inherited today.

Bet Emet Ministries began several years ago to present websites dealing with Christianity which at first adopted this "Literal Interpretation" of Jesus in the "Jesus Story" since the "literal" approach toward Jesus in the New Testament is taught today by almost all of Christianity as they assume that Jesus Christ was a historical person. We all grow up in the Western Hemisphere assuming that the "Jesus Story" is a historical reality; that is until we do serious study of our faith which is required to get to the bottom of this "Jesus Story" and the religious synthesis within it. Only when my studies into the truth behind our New Testament progress to where I uncovered the First Gnostic New Testament which was later corrupted by Rome with its Second New Testament did I see when studying Gnostic Christianity that "the Krst" and "the Christ" (the Divine Mind of the Creator in all "matter") did I come to clearly see the Mystical Christ and Mythological Christ for what it truly represented. Many of our websites, especially the early ones from years ago, begin by approaching the "Jesus Story" from this inherited historical -grammatical method of interpretation because this is how we grow up and first get acquainted with the "Jesus Story". Only by submitting this "historical Christ" under the microscope of intense scrutiny can we be certain that the inherent problems in this interpretation of "the Christ" and the "Jesus Story" is a falsehood and then look elsewhere for its true meaning and find the "Mystical", "Mythological" and "Metaphysical" truths behind all the "Christ Stories" which remained intact for thousands of years until the 2nd century where we find Rome "radically reinterpreting" the whole of the "Christ Stories" and "limiting" this Christ to but one person the access to which only comes through the doors of the Roman Church. Oh, how convenient for world domination and the manipulation of humanity through fear and ignorance. These "truths" I felt were necessary to get to the readers, students, and "truth-seekers" in order to reveal the greater Spiritual Truths that lay within Biblical and Mystical Judaism that are not taught by mainline Gentile Christianity today. As a pastor I realized that it takes time for a "seed to grow" and if I strike out and were to say "everything you believe about Jesus is wrong" I would lose any hope of reaching people with the fruits of my studies. We must understand our Jesus correctly; that is what all incarnational life is meant to accomplish whereby one "awakens" to his True Self; that he is the expression of Divinity and Divine Mind as a human being. We sing "in him we live, move and have our being"; more correctly it is in "us" that God moves, lives, and has His being and it is this agency of the indwelling Christ, not limited to but one, but in all that needs to be restored to humanity so that man can become ONE again with God and all world religions turn their swords into plowshares because we are all ONE.So we begin with the study of the Jewish Roots of Christianity by following the the Rabbinical Methods of teaching and I applied them to Bet Emet's presentation of the "Jesus Story" which we find evolves over the totality of our Websites. There are 4 levels of Rabbinical teaching. Let us learn them now as we return "to the Faith once given the Saints".

PASHAT

The first level of understanding is PASHAT (simple interpretation). The Pashat is the "literal" meaning. It is similar to what Protestant hermeneutics calls "Grammatical Historical Exegesis" and also similar to what Protestant Hermeneutics calls "The Literal Principle." The PASHAT is the plain, simple meaning of the text; understanding scripture in its natural, normal sense using the customary meanings of the words being used, in accordance with the primary exegetical rule in the Talmud that no passage loses its PASHAT (b.Shab. 63a; b.Yeb. 24a). While there is figurative language (like Ps. 36:7) symbolism (like Rom. 5:14); allegory (like Gal. 4:19-31) and hidden meanings (like Rev. 13:18; 1Cor. 2:7) in the Scriptures, the first thing to look for is the literal meaning or PASHAT. This is how and why I developed the first websites and in so doing try to reveal the beauty of Biblical Judaism to the Christian student desiring the truth of his Jewish Roots. For it is in Biblical Judaism do we find our links with ancient Egypt in their purest form thus preserving better than any nation these Ancient understandings of God, Divine Mind, and the Cosmos and man's responsibilities to the Creator. These following websites approaches "the Christ" as an assumed "historical person" yet never telling the reader that behind this motif of a "historical Jesus" lies the greatest deception known to mankind. We will see this deception emerge as we try to verify what our Roman Bibles say on its pages when compared with the Hebrew Scriptures from which it taken. Only by seeing the host of problems that emerge doing such comparisions of Christian dogmas and doctrines with the Jewish dogmas and doctrines as well as the Hebrew Scriptures from which our Bibles inaccurately quotes and purposefully mistranslates does the door "crack open" as to the many problems and falsehoods that lie behind a "literal" and "historical" interpretation of our inherited "Jesus Story". This needs be said for until we see these problems and falsehoods then moving to a deeper understanding and a more true understanding of "the Christ" and our "Jesus Story" has no purpose since being taught since childhood that our Bibles and Christian faith is "infallible, inerrant, and inspired". I will let the evidences which I bring the reader to determine if such an approach to Christianity is warranted and can be proven in light of modern scholarship.

- RETURNING TO THE BIBLICAL FAITH OF JESUS/YESHUA BY EXAMINING CLOSELY OUR BIBLES
- http://www.christianjewishbible.netfirms.com
- (We begin our study by looking at our New Testaments since it is within this New Testament given us by Rome that we have the core of the problems concerning this Jewish Messiah portrayed as Jesus. Here we encounter, maybe for the first time for many readers, a host of unlimited examples of textual and Scriptural falsifications in our Christian Bibles when compared with the prior Hebrew Scriptures which lie in stealth in both the Greek and later English mistranslation of our Christian Old and New Testaments. Hundreds of examples exist where the facts and Scriptural truths that exist in the Jewish Masoretic Old Testament texts are shown to be purposefully changed in the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures by the Essenes and later incorporated into almost all Christian Old Testaments. Not to be outdone, Rome later emerges and continues the Scriptural falsification on a much larger scale by changing and altering the Hebrew Scriptures and eventually adapting its "literalized" solar-mythology" in their final production...the Second New Testament. Here we encounter the change of these ancient Divine Spiritual Mystical, Mythological, and Metaphysical Concepts as they become altered almost beyond recognition and reinterpreted and attached to the life of the "supposed literal and historical" New Testament Jesus. In order to see how "Mystical Divine Truths" of a "Metaphysical Realm" become "literalized", "historicized" and "limited" to but one supposed person of history one has to trace the adulteration of the Scriptural Texts and the forgery of the Hebrew Scriptures. So it is necessary that we become very familiar with the document called the New Testament which has incorporated such a religious agenda and the creation of a "replacement religion" over these last 1,800 years). This is our "introduction" to the "Jesus Problem" which can be laid basically at the feet of Rome and their "antisemitism".

- (The examination of the Jewish and Hebrew Roots of the Christian Faith as taken from a literal perspective. In so doing we expose many of the errors in doctrine and practice of today's Gentile Christianity with special emphasis upon the non-Jewish believer and his Divine place within the Israel of God instead of enmeshed in "replacement religion" as exists today in Gentile Christianity. We pay no attention in this site to the many problems concerning the Historical Jesus and approach the study from the normal assumption that the historical Jesus is true since that is how most of us grew up believing in the first place. In later sites we look at this problem in greater detail but to stress the greatness of Divine Truth as found yet in Judaism today as well as over the last 2,000 years we compare basically "Roman Christianity and its dogmas with the dogmas of Judaism and all the while keep our eyes on the alteration of the Hebrew Scriptures which changed the ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom as found in ancient Egypt and their later children the Jewish nation).

- (Now we look in depth to the non-Jewish believer and how he fits into true Biblical Faith without conversion to Judaism. This is very important information and necessary for every Christian to read and study in detail. This is a very revealing study of the Covenants of God with special emphasis upon the Covenants concerning the non-Jew which are called today the Covenant of Noah comprising the 66 commandments of Noah. Included in this site are Old Testament references to this covenant as well and revealing exposition of this same covenant in the New Testament as taught to the non-Jews in fulfillment of the Great Commission before Rome would change everything in the 2nd through the 5th century. It is here we begin to see the "pattern"; the "Pattern of Worship" which we find is the same for the Jew and non-Jew and how denominational Christianity has missed the mark throughout history due to it's antisemitic background and antisemitic dogmas and Scriptural forgeries inherited by Rome).

- (Having learned all of this knowledge from the above websites and fully convinced that repentance is needed in our "Christian religious belief system" then the question that should be asked is this one as I see it: "If I, as a non-Jew, who had not converted to Judaism, had lived in the first century in Israel and had come into contact with the Messianic Movement within Israel as we find it in Acts 15 for example, then what would I have been taught about how a non-Jew is to "worship" the Creator"? Is there a "Pattern of Worship" of God that I need to know about? Other questions come to mind: What was I to do having learned these truths about the early Gentile inclusion into the Israel of God? How was I to worship in contrast as to how I learned from Roman Christianity? How can I bring this understanding into my life today? How can I worship the Creator in "Spirit and in Truth" in light of what I have learned in the above websites that has shown me that I have been badly taught and so badly misquided by my spiritual leaders in Christianity today? What lies behind these "Jewish and cultural" expression of Worship of God as seen in the Biblical Festivals as well as the Equinoxes and Solstices? Is there a "Comic Pattern" of worship that is reflected in the Jewish Nation and their Jewish and cultural worship of God? Is there something bigger out there that I fail to see being limited by only the "Jewish expression" of the worship of God? Do I begin with a through study of Judaism and advance to a deeper understanding of the God of the Cosmos? Is the Macrocosm reflected in the Microcosm of Jewish worship? Yes, yes, yes! But all of that must come later. We must get our feet on the ground of Scriptural integrity and learn these "basic principles" and the truth about our New Testament and our corrupted "Jesus Story" before we move into much "deeper waters" and the hidden Divine Truths behind our "Jesus Story". If you want those answers then these forthcoming websites are for you. Now having mastered the above sites we move on to these "deeper Spiritual waters" that Rome never intended you know!

REMEZ

The next level of understanding of the Scriptures taught by the Rabbis is called in Hebrew REMEZ (hinting at a prior truth or a hidden truth that goes beyond the current text). Peculiarities and contradictions in the Biblical texts are treated and presented to the reader as hinting at a deeper Divine and Spiritual truth than that conveyed by its PASHAT. The fun of discovering our Jewish Roots, Sabbaths, and Biblical Festivals is over and is in reality only the "introduction" to the deeper Mystical and Metaphysical teachings to come. Now it is time for serious investigation of our inherited faith. Our Websites get more challenging as I begin using the principle of Remez to hint that there are problems with the "Jesus Story" beyond the Pashat "interpretation" and begin to question many of the teachings of Christianity and their presentation of Jesus as the Jewish Messiah. We still approach these issues as if "historical" but as your studies progress you begin to slowly get the picture that there is severe problems with what Christianity teaches about "the historical Jesus Christ" and its presentation of Jesus as the Jewish Messiah. It bears saying again that we approach this information yet as if "historical" but as our websites progress we will soon move to the "Mythical" and the "Mystical" presentations of "the" Jesus Christ. You might say we are in the process of cracking the egg shell regarding the "Jesus Story".

Ever wonder why the Jews and Gentile Christianity cannot agree on the Jewish Messiah? At last the unbiased truth concerning the Jewish Messiah and with it many explanations as to how the Christian theology concerning the Messiah deviates so drastically from the Jewish Messianic concepts as well as emphasis on the corruption of the Gentile's religious texts (OT and NT) which culminates in the creation of a Messiah which was never prophesied by the Jewish prophets.....the answers for the Gentile Christian are not always comforting but if you want the truth it is here for the interested and unbiased student and true seeker of truth. This is a selective summary of what went before on the other sites where I pull together pertinent information concerning one topic and one topic only: THE MESSIAH. If your desire is to study what the Jewish Scriptures taught about the Jewish Messiah before they were altered and changed as they were purposefully mistranslated into the Greek and later carried over in their corrupted forms into the Christian's Old Testament and New Testament texts, then this material is for you. Along with this site is the examination of text after text not only in it's Hebraic original form but as it was altered and changed thereby causing New Testament believers to ignorantly accept and cherish beliefs about Yeshua/Jesus which not only are incorrect but which render them idolators before God).

 - http://messianicprophecy.netfirms.com
 - (A very detailed examination of the Hebrew Scriptures and how they were later altered when translated into the Greek, Latin, and English versions of Christian Bibles. We trace the corruption of the Jewish Scriptures from the Hebrew in which they were originally written and show how these Jewish Scriptures were later purposefully mistranslated, misquoted, misapplied, and even invented in order to alter the human messiah into a "cosmic Godman" by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt. Later these very same altered passages will become forced "fulfillments" when applied to Jesus in later Latin and English versions taken from the Greek forgeries of the Jewish Scriptures. We show repeatedly how the Greek translations were forged in order to include the Essene concept of their "angel messiah" and "cosmic Godman" and later how this concept would be further adulterated when applied to Jesus some two hundred years later through the further forgery of other Hebrew Scriptures by the Roman Gentile Church. In other words we show beyond any doubt how the Holy Word of God has been corrupted today. No wonder the Jewish people don't believe in the Christian Jesus; their Jewish Scriptures read completely different than those of the Christian Church in "key" messianic places)

Of all the Old Testament scriptures translated and quoted (or purposely mistranslated or misquoted) by Christian evangelicals in hopes of finding validation to most of their Gentile Christian doctrines, Daniel 9:17-27 and Isaiah 53 are perhaps the two most popular. In both cases, Christianity relies on a claim that the only reasonable interpretation of those scriptures is theirs. But is this true? Have our Christian Bibles been forged to force fulfillments as applied to Jesus when the true Hebrew Scriptures read differently than our Christian Bibles? Well...it is time to see the truth for yourself concerning Daniel's 70 weeks and then you decide who is right....Judaism or Christianity)

- THE ESSENE CHRISTIAN FAITH AND ITS LEGACY OF SUN WORSHIP
 - http://essenecx.netfirms.com
 - (As stated earlier Divine Spiritual allegory and Spiritual Myths of the ancients have been "literalized by Rome" and presented to us in our Christian Bibles as if a "literal" and "historical" truth that fits into a time-line of Rome's making. We saw when we looked at the manipulation and adulteration of the Hebrew Scriptures let alone the testimony of Judaism for these last 2,000 years that the "Jesus" of the New Testament is not their "Jewish Messiah". We begin to see this Christian deception through a comprehensive and challenging investigation into the true origins of the Essene-Christian faith as we begin in ancient Egypt and it's worship of God. In so doing we spend some time understanding Egyptian Religion where astral-theology and solar-worship was personified into "savior Godmen" such as Osiris which is the first and the "pattern" of all personification of Divine Spiritual concepts that followed. We trace such personified solar beliefs through successive Gentile nations and make note of similarities as well as differences, until we come to the Essene/Qumran cult, who, in rejection of normative Biblical Judaism because of their inability to assume the Priesthood following the Maccabee war, evolved away from Biblical Judaism and adopted these astral-theological religious ideas which had more in common with Egypt, Persian, Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, Pythagorianism, etc., than with Judaism. The Essene mistake is the same one Rome will make later; they will "literalize" these Metaphysical Spiritual concepts and "historicize" them and apply them to the Jewish "human" messiah in the likeness of King David (historically really the Pharaoh Tuthmose III) until we end up with a "corrupted Judaism" which is more commonly known today as Messianic "literalized" Christianity. It is the same perversion of purely Metaphysical Spiritual Concepts. What we find is that the Essenes "literalized" these prior Divine Allegories concerning Divine Truth of the incarnation of Divine Mind in "matter" and humanity as expressed by the Ancients down through time through the medium of Spiritual myths and symbols. It is in the hands of these apostate Essenes where these Divine concepts were "literalized" and were purposefully included in a falsified translation of the Jewish Old Testament called the Greek Septuagint (LXX). In this Greek perversion of the Hebrew Scriptures the human "anointed of God" becomes a Superman! In so doing these ancient Spiritual and Divine Mystical, Mythological and Metaphysical Concepts lose their original and intended meaning and these "radically reinterpreted" doctrines become parts of the Greek Old Testament for the Greek speaking world and for all later Christians and the Christian Church; thus providing the substrate for all later quotes of the New Testament. The bottom line being that personified Sun-worship which is the ultimate Spiritual and Divine Truth for all created manifestation was applied to the life of the hoped for and expected Jewish messiah as recorded in the New Testament and it is we, not knowing that these existing ancient Divine Spiritual Mysteries and concepts, which were only to be taken allegorically and symbolically, have been misled to see in them a "literal" and supposed "historical" understanding when these ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdoms were never originally intended to be taught as such. In so doing we spend a lot of time with these altered texts in order to see how this was done and how extensive this misrepresentation of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom is exampled in our current Roman Bibles).

- PAUL...THE TRUE FOLLOWER OF JESUS...OR...SUBVERTER OF THE FAITH OF JESUS AND FOUNDER OF A NEW RELIGION?
 - http://paulproblem.netfirms.com
 - (Now we move to the Paul Problem. It more than likely will be news to most of our readers that there are two completely different Pauls taught in the New Testament. In other words, within the New Testament we have the record of the historical Paul who only wrote seven authentic epistles as well as Rome's counterfeit Paul who is credited with writing 2/3 of the New Testament. This latter "fake Paul" never historically lived. The only Paul of history we know conclusively today in our Information Age to have been a Gnostic Christian in the New Testament, a man who was filled with the Spirit of God and belived only in the mystical and metaphysical interpreation of the Ancinet Scriptures. The Gnostic Paul's Christ was the indwelling incarnation of God in mankind, known and called by the Ancients long before this Paul as the "Krst/Christ." All of human life was devoted to awakeing this Presence and Power lying laten within mankind: "Awake thous that sleepeth, and arise from the dead" is the cry of the true St. Paul, a Gnostic believer. The other forged literatue in the Bible falsely given the name Paul as its presumed author, is a clumsy attempt to present to the ignorant masses of that day anti-Gnostic and anti-metaphysical teachings to do away with the Gnostic teachings of St. Paul by Rome. Let us not forget that the earliest gospel was Paul's gospel, a Gnostic gospel. This same Gnostic Paul warns the brethren to not be led astray and accept a later false gospel which would try to undermine the Gnostic teachings of St. Paul or the Gnostic Christ as well. The Gnostic Paul will state in 2 Cor 11:4: "For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel..." The true Gnostic Paul was forced to say this early in his ministry because in his day there already existed those who completely misunderstood the mystical and metaphsyical nature of the "Christ Story" or the "Jesus Story" and were mistakenly teaching this "mystery hidden before the foundation of the world" as presumed literal history. Again, the Gnostic Paul would state in his very first book, Galations, chapter one, verses 6-9: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: 7Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Let it be said that the gospel that the Gnostic Paul taught never was about a supposed literal or historical Jesus; Paul's Christ was not a human being; he was the incarnated Divine Mind in each of God's chidren stuggling to be raised from the dead in this Earthly life. Let it be said that I am hard on Paul, the countefeit Paul, since Paul, a Gnostic believe, has been presented to us on the pages of this New Testament as a believer in the literal and physical Jesus of Nazareth which he never was! This false Paul has been presented by the false literalizers of Scripture, the Roman Catholic Church and her equally deceived daugher, the Protestant Church, for 2000 years. I must say that I deal with Paul "literally" as this is the way he has again been presented to us on the pages of the New Testament and in so doing I spare no ink in pointing out the problems this anti-Gnostic Paul presents regarding a Jewish interpretation of "the Christ". Understand that this is a very challenging website which exposes the very depth of the deception behind the New Testament's presentation of the true Gnostic Apostle Paul. This website reveals the truth behind the purposeful manipulation of history and facts to cover up the truth about the Gnostic Paul who was understood by all in the first century to be an enemy of the Jerusalem church who taught an anti-Gnostic gospel and looked for the coming of literal and historical Messiah-Christ for their salvation, when the Gnostic Paul knew that the only salvation for man was internal; the work of the indwelling and resurrected Christ in manind, not one supposedly outside and external to mankind. Hard as it is to realize, as our eyes slowly come to see the light among the Spiritual darkness in this Bible, it was the Jerusalem Chruch that taught "another gospel" that St. Paul had warned us about. I expose what the true religious belief system of this anti-Gnostic Paul of Rome's forgery and reveal how, in spite of the incongruities of the Paul Problem in the New Testament, that his mystical gospel is a synthesis of Gnosticism, Mystery Religions, and Judaism. This is not meant to be bad, but only the restoration of the Ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom which had remained intact and unchanged within humanity for over 10,000 years and only with the rise of Rome would such Spiritual truth fall prey to Rome's "radical reinterpretation" and "literalization" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Along with this I reveal how this Romanized false literalizing and historicizing St. Paul as well as later pro-Pauline writers purposefully misuse the Jewish Scriptures in their presentation to the non-Jewish world a new replacement religion and how they make it seem as if a supposed "literalized" Jesus was the very centor of it when no historical Jesus was ever to be found in the first century, given that no Roman, Jewish, or Greek writer ever mentioned his historical existence. Such a vacuum for his supposed historical existence cannot be easily explained. This supposed historical Jesus and his story can be found, however, from start to finish, but not in Palestine or in Judea. The "Jesus Story," itself Gnostic through and through as it was originally taught, is first found in Ancient Egypt where the "Jesus Story" as the Christ in the New Testament is nothing more than the retelling of the metaphsyics of Ancient Egypt as seen in Horus, the Ancient Egyptian Christ. Once you see for yourself that the same "sayings" of Horus, taken thousands of years earlier from the Egyptian Book Of The Dead, are later found put into the mouth of this supposed literal and historical Jesus in the New Testament, then you better understand why the Gnostic St. Paul could never write of a literal or historical Jesus. There never was one; only the indwelling Presence of the Logos, the Divine Mind incarnated within mankind; a Cosmic Christ consciousness in need of awakening from the death of matter. Rome will give the world "another gospel" where the first quote of Rome's 4 gospels does not show up in any Christian writing, or the presence of these 4 gospels does not first see the light of day, until 180 C.E. This is strong stuff and not for the faint-hearted. Those who are ready to recieve the deeper meaning of the Scriptures should preceed; however, if you have not grown beyond the milk and simple literal interpretations of the Bible's verses, then this material is possibly not for you at this time in your life. Knowing the truth of this matter, I am constrained to look at Paul in a different light from what traditional Christianity teaches today where the Gnostic Paul is never taught, and only the false Paul is taught continually from the pulpits of our Churches Sunday after Sunday. I have no "kind things" to say about the Roman lies that pass for supposed truth about Paul in the New Testament, nor should you once you come to see the truth for yourself. The Book of Proverbs states in chapter 6:16-17: "These six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood,..." God hates a lying tongue, especially when these lies are in the Bible that is supposed to be a revelation from God to man but, as we are seeing, so often is not. You better hold on; we must find the "real Paul" because we don't know of him, given the deception in the Scriptures and Rome's agenda bent on making sure you never find out about the true Gnostic Paul. Rome and their Catholic monks forged all of the New Testaments writings that carry Paul's name but 7. The Gnostic Paul only wrote 7 authentic epistles and each of these he put his name on. So we have to be hard on this Romanized Paul and their lies since Christians believe that he taught all the things that go under his name in the New Testament which have to do with a supposed historical Jesus. In truth, the Gnostic Paul wrote none of them. We will see as we study that the blame for this deception is again laid on the lying pens of Rome so we deal on this site as "if" this Romanized Paul was responsible for these writings since we are taught he wrote them all by Church tradition. Scrutiny of the false Pauline writings will reveal conflicts after conflicts as well as contradictions after contradictions. This should be all the evidence we need to see that the Paul we have heard about in our Christian experience our whole life is a lie! We must wait till a later website to meet the true Paul, who was a Gnostic Christian believing in the indwelling Christ only in his life!)

- THE PAGANIZATION OF THE FAITH OF YESHUA ...AND THE BIRTH OF "GENTILE CHRISTIANITY"
 - http://paganizingfaithofyeshua.netfirms.com
 - (We move on now to look at more "literalization" of Sun-Worship as it was applied to the Jesus of the New Testament by the writers of the this New Testament. This is a very, very challenging study and expose of how "literalized Sun-Worship and how "literalization" of the Ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom today is masqueraded as "orthodoxy" in Christianity. The subject matter is diverse and will require adequate reading on your part but well worth the price as you learn of the origin of the Divine Allegories and Sun Myths which were later personified by the Indo-Germanic nations and later written into the translation of the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt. These accounts would be later embellished by the Gentile Church as they applied them to the life of the Jewish Messiah as represented through this Jesus as they build it off the falsifications of the Greek Old Testament as altered by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt. This site exposes the false theology connected with Jesus which lines almost every page in the New Testament in one way or another. It is here we see that our "Jesus Story", taught to us as if a "literal" person, is but the repetition of the prior Divine Solar Spiritual Allegories of the nation's Sungods. Our "Jesus" is shown to be a collection of multiple personified identities collected and handed down through recorded history; such a collection of solar identifies is in truth a "nobody" when viewed again as if a "literal" and "historical" person. Not possessing this knowledge we read our New Testaments never aware that our "Jesus" is in truth not a "historical person" but behind this Spiritual Allegory is the highest Spiritual revelation that is possible to mankind. We just never knew it thanks to the Essenes and Rome's dishonesty with the Hebrew Scriptures. A through understanding of this site, as well as the others of Bet Emet Ministry, exposes beyond any doubt the lies and idolatry that has been foisted upon unsuspecting Gentiles who are yet today pawns of this theological deception and antisemitism of Rome)

This approach, teaching God's higher Divine truths through the vehicle of a godly example, the "assumed historical Jesus of the New Testament", works well up to a point because in doing so we are presented with a "Godly" example of a life to be emulated as found in the Jesus of the New Testament (for the most part). A life patterned after the Jesus of the "Jesus Story" will hopefully issue forth in one bearing the fruit of morality and ethics and a life lived in the Fruit of the Spirit. This is the reason why Israel does not evangelize today because Christianity has accomplished for them their task as God's Priesthood; for better or worse when looking at the Dark Ages and the impact of this "replacement religion". As a pastor I wish they could have accomplished this without the masked idolatry connected with the "Jesus Story". The non-Jew has learned of the God of Israel and has learned how to live in peace and harmony through the teachings of Christianity. Sadly in all of this the main character, the Jewish Messiah, has been so badly misrepresented in the character of Jesus who, for example, is made to cleanse all foods and abolish the kosher laws in Mark 7:14. This is rather strange for a Jew who is obligated to observe Kosher. Hopefully you see the problems of what I speak and they only begin here. Again through our websites the student is made aware of the problems inherent in many places in this New Testament's depiction of the New Testament Jesus and "the Christ within". Yet, in such a presentation this Jesus is the non-Jew's "pattern" for he, real or not, is the only Jew to ever witnessed to us and came knocking on the doors of our lives as non-Jews. Sadly the Jewish community is closed to the non-Jew for the most part due to the tragic treatment of their people by the Christian Church these last 2000 years. As I say often it is sad that when we answered the door of our lives as we heard the "knock" of this New Testament Rabbi named Jesus that we did not possess, at that time, enough knowledge of the truth about "the Christ" and the true "Jewish Messiah" that we could not recognize that this Jew named Jesus, as God's "light to the Gentile world", came dressed like the idolator Constantine teaching a replacement religion. Lacking this knowledge which Bet Emet's Websites provide the student we fell for the Roman "counterfeit Christ" and "counterfeit Jesus" and no wonder the Jews cannot accept this Roman Jesus as their Messiah. Good for them! But hopefully as your studies mature you begin to see that there are other ways to understand the "Jesus Story" but surely understanding the "Jesus Story" as a historical truth concerning a literal person who lived 2000 years ago and who embodied the historical Jewish Messiah is not one of them. Now for enlightenment that will take your breath away!

DRASH

Another level of Jewish hermeneutic and understanding the Scriptures is called in Hebrew "drash" meaning "search", this is the allegorical, typological or homiletical application of the text. Creativity is used to search the text in relation to the rest of the Scriptures, other literature, or life itself in order to develop an allegorical, typological or homiletical application of the text. This process involves eisegesis (reading of the text) of the text. Ironically as I found this expression or interpretation of the texts reflected most accurately the type of "belief" of the earliest Christians (called Chrestians who believed only in the Gnostic Metaphysical Christ within) who were not only looking for a historical Jewish messiah to be revealed but at the same time understood that the "logos" or "the Christ/Sophia/Egyptian Karast" lived within all mankind and could never be limited to but one person as Rome will make it appear. This understanding of "the Christ" reflects Paul and his 7 authentic epistles where he teaches the "Christ within". Now we find the true Paul who, like the earliest Chrestinas, taught only the "Christ Within".

As you might expect a few years later, as time allowed, Bet Emet provided a website dealing with the Mystical Interpretation of the "Jesus Story" and "the Christ" as we showed that the religious beliefs of the earliest "believers" who were called the first "Christians", long before Rome emerged to dominate the Christian faith, did not accept a historical Jesus at all but rather understood "the Christ" as a Divine Concept as Divine Mind that lives within every man and woman and is not exclusive to just one person as is portrayed today by "literalistic Roman Christianity. It is in this site that we restore the earliest Gnostic Christian understanding of the "the Christ" as it existed for almost 5 centuries before being utterly destroyed and almost totally wiped out by Rome with its replacement religion we have today which I call "Literal Christianity".

- MARCION AND THE "FIRST" NEW TESTAMENT...WHO WERE THE ORIGINAL CHRISTIANS AND WHAT DID THEY BELIEVE ABOUT "THE CHRIST"....THE STUDY OF GNOSTICISM
 - http://firstnewtestament.netfirms.com/
 - (Now we put all the pieces together and the whole picture comes into focus. We now look at the true Paul, a Gnostic which never taught a human Jesus Christ but rather "the Christ within" in his 7 authentic epistles. We trace in this website how the earliest "Christian" believed in the "Christ within" and not "a Christ without". We see how the ancient religious allegories were understood not only by these ancients who were given them but by the Gnostic Jews and Gentiles in the earliest centuries of the church as well long before Rome will come an "literalize" all of it and give it a fictitious historical time-line in creating a "historical Jesus". In so doing we will see how the earliest New Testament expressing these allegorical Divine truths is butchered by Rome and destroyed and how we end up with the forgery we have today. Never let it be said that archeology and hard study are not our friends. That is why Judaism has always taught that "study" is the highest form of worship!

An unbiased study of History will show you that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence anywhere that the "Jesus Story" originated as the biography of a man named Jesus, and quite a lot of evidence that it did not. An unbiased through study of Comparative Religion will reveal to you that the basic plot of the "Jesus Story", from beginning to end, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions thousands of years prior to the alleged time of Jesus and if you continue such dedicated studies into Astronomy and Solar Mythology you will find that beyond any doubt the "Jesus Story" is nothing more than an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down; namely, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the path of the Sun through the celestial sphere and the 12 Houses of the Zodiac during the year. Personification of the Sun through the sky as found in the story of ancient solar and lunar gods follow in chronological procession through the year the exact chronology of the "Jesus Story" when personified from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew chapter 28. This truly is the most amazing study.

This website will be a lot different from anything you most likely have ever studied. Growing up in the Western Hemisphere we are traditionally taught a "literalistic" and not an "allegorical" or "symbolic" understanding of Christianity. This "literalistic" interpretation of "Jesus" and "the Christ" is based upon the inherited religious documents we received from Rome which we were taught to accept as infallible and inerrant without every questioning them. However great advances in Biblical Studies and archeology have been made in the last two hundred years and one in particular in the last 50 years has made a startling impact upon Christianity and few know of this. I am referring to the discoveries of the Nag Hammadi Library along with the Essene's Dead Sea Scrolls in the last 50 years which has turned our traditional Roman understanding of Christianity upside down and basically taught us that almost everything we had through we had "known" from Roman Christianity up to now concerning "Jesus" and "the Christ" was wrong. That is simply because when we discover from study of these archeological finds and see for ourselves that the First New Testament written and given to us by the earliest Gnostic Chrestians like Marcion and Paul did not teach a "human Jesus Christ" but rather an allegorical and symbolic "Indwelling Christ Only" as the Logos within each of God's children. This explains why there were no genealogies, birth or infancy narratives, or the 4 traditional Gospels in the earliest Gnostic Gospels and not added to the Roman Second New Testament till after 180 A.D. It is this "allegorical Christ" and "allegorical Joshua-Jesus Christ" ["pattern"] that the earliest New Testament and the authentic Pauline epistles taught but few know this today since Rome's efforts to destroy all of this literature by burning the libraries of the world as well as murdering the Gnostics until few remained to safeguard this Spiritual Metaphysical Revelation which can be traced to the beginning of mankind. In this website I reveal these truths concerning the "allegorical Christ" of the earliest Chrestians. Along with this we tackle the difficult problem of Christian forgeries of later Pauline Epistles and Gospels in their attempt to create a "historical Jesus" and a "historical Christ" in order to mimic their Godman-Emperor. This information goes a long way not only in explaining the lack of credible and unforged evidences for a historical Jesus but shows how a Second New Testament was latter forged in Paul's name, who was long dead, along with the names of long dead Apostles in Rome's attempt to place a historical Jesus of their creation within an appropriate time-line. By comparison of what was written and contained within the First New Testament with what was later written later by Irenaeus and others in Rome's attempt to refute the Gnostic Christ and the Gnostic Joshua-Jesus we can easily now come to terms with this creative theology of Rome which was little more than a synthesis of "literalized" Sun Worship as exposed on our other sites. What should strike you as you study these materials is that the concept of the "Logos" and the "allegorical Christ" goes all the way back to the beginning of mankind where God gave Revelation of Himself and His plan to the Ancient Egyptians who first wrote of the Karast/Christ and provided the "pattern" adopted by all later world religions until the rise of Rome!

SOD

The 4th and final level of understanding the Scriptures is called in Hebrew "Sod" meaning "hidden". It is here that I reveal the hidden links to Egypt and Astronomy which they "allegorized" to capture for all time the Divine Concepts that they witnessed written in the sky and Heavens above them. The Sky is God's Bible! When you learn to "interpret" the Sky and the stars then no man can deceive you about Divine Truth any longer! God, writing on the blackboard of the sky and Heavens, expressed to these Ancients sages and Priests eternal Spiritual principles that were later captured in "myths" and "legends" to preserver for all time these Godly truths that would last through all time and yet today survive in spite of the destruction of Egypt by Alexander the Great and later Rome. These Laws of the Cosmos were expressed in allegorical Spiritual myths that were reaffirmed by the same Laws witnessed operating in Nature. Ancient man, understanding that these same Laws operated within himself and his body saw therefore that "he was created in the image of God"; the image he witnessed operating above and around him when noticing the same Laws and Cycles in the Heavens and in Nature operating within his physical body as well. This is truly beautiful when you see it as it brought tears to my eyes to see and comprehend Gods' earliest message to me and you that has not been changed or adulterated by the agendas of men and apostate religions down through history. It is so simple when you see it. That is the way God intended it to be in the beginning but we strain at a nat and swallow a camel today with our highly developed and evolved theologies down through Christian history.

It has been a hard and long process for me to accomplish but my task is about through when I complete this website on the "Mythical Jesus Christ" as seen in the stars.

Now it is time to devote this website to the comprehensive understanding of the "Mythical Christ". In so doing we will prove that the "Jesus Story" is actually an allegory for the path of the Sun "personified" as it travels through the 12 Houses of the Zodiac and through the 4 seasons of the years (the Spring Equinox, the Summer Solstice, the Autumn Equinox, and the Winter Solstice). You will come to see that this is the oldest and most important story humans ever knew as it also is full of Divine Truths that are to be understood "allegorically" and not "literally" as we have erroneously been taught today by a literalized Christianity of Rome's making. The Sun was viewed by the ancient Spiritual Masters as the "visible representation" of the "invisible hidden reality" of God. This Sun and its path through the Heavens is repeated over and over again for mankind so that man cannot miss the Truth and Message of God involving the Spiritual evolution of his Soul. It is we today who have not a clue to this Great Bible in the Sky. We owe a great debt to Ancient Egyptians and their great wisdom and their foresight in preserving for the the world this earliest understanding of God and Divine Mind and its incarnation into "matter" and humanity where we trace by looking at the path of the Sun the birth, life, death, rebirth and progressive Spiritual Evolution of man's Soul.

- THE EGYPTIAN RELIGION AND ITS RELATIONSHIP TO JUDAISM AND CHRISTIANITY
 - http://www.egyptcx.netfirms.com/
 - We have all heard that "all roads lead to Rome" but in reality all roads lead to Egypt. This is especially true when one studies Christianity and Judaism and finds that these sister-faiths are nothing more than evolutionary developments of the Egyptian Religion. Understand from the beginning that Judaism is a much more faithful picture of this Planet's original understanding of the Divine than Christianity. Judaism comes in a close second. As a Pastor I am amazed where my studies have taken me and the things I have learned over these last twenty years in my pursuit of Jewish Roots of the Christian Faith. Never did I expect to find what I have uncovered and consider myself fortunate to live in an age where archeology and other such disciplines are giving back to mankind what Rome destroyed, covered up, and took from us over the last two thousand years. The study of error is often a little less important than the study of truth. The history of the human mind, in its progress from ignorance towards knowledge should tell us the mistakes into which it has sometimes wandered, as well as its steps in the right path. This is the goal of this website: to re-examine Gentile Christianity as to its earliest roots and determine if what is considered "Christian orthodoxy" today is a faithful representation of the earliest understanding of God by the Ancients since it is they who coined the religious concepts which we are told that we adhere to today in the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere.
 - There is much to say about the knowledge contained in this Website but let me be brief. This website will reveal to you how the Ancients understood the message of God and His revelation to them from their critical observations about the Heavens and the sky as well as Nature. The Egyptians Priests and scholars understood that God was revealing His Laws and intentions in the operations of the Divine Laws that governed the Cosmos. These Ancients holy men saw that these same Laws operated within their own bodies as well and that they were "created in the image of God" as what God was doing "above them" and "around them" He also was doing "within them". These Ancients sought out God and His way like no other nation has ever done on the face of the earth and tragically this knowledge was lost to us until only recently with the discoveries of archeology. We must understand that when allegory, metaphor, simile, and myth which expressed both the identity and actions of the Creator as understood by the Ancients in grasping for understanding of God and His workings in the Cosmos, was altered and stripped of its symbolism and rendered for all time as if "literal" by those who will come later through "conquest" and destroy Egypt and their understanding of God, then not only is Divine Truth lost forever but it plunges its recipients into abject idolatry. Such is the plight of the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere as these allegories and metaphors that once expressed Divine Truth were altered by Rome and "literalized" and applied to men's lives; in this case Jesus. If you have been diligent to study the website referenced just above this one then you saw for yourself this tragic loss of Divine Truth by Rome's "literalization" of such Egyptian Ancient truths concerning the "Logos" and "the Christ".

- ASTROTHEOLOGY AND THE "JESUS STORY" OF THE NEW TESTAMENT: DOES IT ORIGINATE WITH THE STARS?
 - http://jesusastrotheology.netfirms.com/
 - This website is presently under construction*. This will be the last website for Bet Emet Ministries and in so doing we will go where few have gone. In this website we will show beyond any doubt from Astronomical examples of the Sun, Moon, Stars, and Constellations, that the Ancients preserved what they witnessed in the stars and Heavens seen in the cycles, patterns and paths and movements of these Heavenly orbs in "allegories" and in "myths" and "legends" not only concerning physical movements of these Celestial orbs as taken from their observations but expressed within these "solar myths" and "lunar myths" deeper Divine Truths of a Mystical Nature. These hidden deeper Divine Revelations from God to mankind dealing with the Spiritual Nature of mankind and his expected Spiritual maturation were again saved for all time through the agency of Myth which was never to be interpreted "literally" but rather were to function as "allegories" and "symbols" only that were but vehicles for transmission of higher truths from God. From these celestial patterns the Ancients extrapolated the Laws, Ordinances, Commandments, and Covenants of the Creator and gave them to mankind as a "blueprint" for our existence. These myths held the message of God to mankind. Later these myths were told through lives of personified man-gods like Osiris, Dionysus, Attis, Amon, Mithra, and Jesus. Since we include Jesus in the same sentence with other astral myths then this will be a hard study for as you examine the evidence presented you will see without a doubt that an unbiased study of History shows that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence anywhere that the "Jesus Story" originated as the biography of a real historical man named Jesus. In fact the evidence, or should I say the lack of it, and the forgery of all that does exist outside this one New Testament, is hard to deny and makes a belief in a historical Jesus almost impossible when knowing from the above studies the hundreds of forgeries in the religious texts of the Christian Bible. Nowhere outside of this one forged book by Rome can we find this "historical Jesus". As if that was not enough an unbiased and through study of Comparative Religion reveals to the reader as seen in the above studies and sites that the basic plot of the "Jesus Story", from beginning to end, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions thousands of years prior to the alleged time of Jesus and if you continue such dedicated studies into Astronomy and Solar Mythology you will find that beyond any doubt the "Jesus Story" is nothing more than an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the path of the Sun through the celestial sphere and the 12 Houses of the Zodiac during the year. What is most startling is when you see for yourself that the personification of the Sun and its path through the sky as found in the story of ancient solar and lunar gods follow in chronological procession through the year the exact chronology of the "Jesus Story" when personified from Matthew chapter 1 through then end of the book. The Synoptic gospels follow the path of the Sun in its travels through the sky from beginning to end. Most may have no idea of what I am saying I can only tell you to hold on and read the articles on this site and you will quickly come to see of what I spoke. Let it be said when you see this and that all the other "Jesus Stories" are but Ancient allegories of the Heavens and the Sun and its path through the Zodiac which was later "literalized" then without a doubt there is no more room for idolatry connected with any Jesus of any kind. Then we can follow in the footsteps of Moses and quit worshipping a false "god-man" and return to worshipping our Creator in Spirit and in Truth. You come to see that the "Jesus Story" is nothing but a retelling of the "Osiris Story" and the "Horus Story". It is from these two Ancient Egyptian stories that all other "saviors" have come.

Orthodox Christians, since they are committed to a belief in the literal truth of the Bible, hold that after the flood men became even more evil than they were before, so that 4,000 years after the creation of the world, god sent his only begotten son to suffer and die for the salvation of the human race. This ministry of Jesus, the Christ, was supposed to be a unique event in human history but as we show it is anything but that; it is the repetition of everything that came before. This opinion of Jesus' uniqueness is no longer tenable among those who accept reason as the criterion of truth.

If you are diligent to study and read these websites then you have it all. There is little that exists that is not covered in one way or the other or has somehow escaped my attention over these almost 20 years of study. There is nothing I would trade for my years of study and the truths that I have gathered and although it has been challenging to my very core I fully am aware that because of such serious studies my walk with God, the true God, is closer than ever. It is truly well with my soul because "I KNOW THE TRUTH ABOUT HIM SEPARATED FROM ALL THE FICTION" that men have written down through history to promote their own religion and political agendas.

- THE SACRED MYSTERIES....OUR LAST WEBSITE
 - http://thesacredmysteries.netfirms.com
 - This is what we have been waiting for; the conclusion of all of our websites and the final answer as to just "Whom" is this "Jesus" we have heard about all our lives and how this should affect our lives for the better. It is here we at last meet the true Gnostic Paul and, as he called it "my gospel," as well. Central to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom is the concept of the Divine Spark/Cosmic Fire or seed buried within each person. It was the purpose of the ancient Spiritual Mysteries to bring to life this Divine Spark in the life of every person so that it would illuminate life on this Earth and so aid mankind in its Spiritual evolution of its True Self and True Being which is Divinity "incarnated" into "matter". This Divine Spark embedded within the "animal" body which housed man's Soul and Divine Mind was symbolized by various figures and characterizations at different times down through recorded history and in different nations and places. We find these symbolisms today in the nations as their personified Sungods and Goddesses which are preserved for mankind in the nation's Divine Legends and Spiritual Mythologies. Their names were Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules, Ishtar, Isis, Persephone, and even Jesus and so on. They were all labeled by Rome to be "pagan" Christs but these Divine Myths are, when correctly understood and interpreted correctly, are the highest expressions in metaphors and allegories of man's True Divine Self; as Plato has so appropriately said man is a "god in an animal body". The philosophers of the ancient world and even the ancient Egyptians before them knew that these figures were only symbolic of the highest Metaphysical reality within mankind and were never to be understood or taken to be historical men or women; it is we who do not understand this precious ancient Mythology today. Many writers today write of this subject completely devoid of its true understanding and mislead millions in so doing. These Divine Truths in these Spiritual Mysteries are "Spiritually discerned" and eclipse the intellect of many.
 - We will see in this website that over 5,000 years ago in ancient Egypt and some 2,000 years ago in the area of the eastern Mediterranean, the Divine Soul or Spark within humanity was called the Christ (from Krst, Karast or Krist, Egyptian for the anointed ("messiah") mummy). What we find when we wade through all of this ancient theology found in ancient Egypt and the Gnosticism and Spiritual Mysteries of the ancient nations is that early Christianity was nothing new at all; in fact it was originally before the rise of Roman "literalism" only the re-statement of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Gnosticism of the ancient Spiritual Fathers as far back as ancient Egypt and beyond and not a replacement of this Spiritual Wisdom as Christianity as we know it today has tragically become. We come to see that a "radical reinterpretation" of almost all the ancient Spiritual Wisdom was the legacy of Roman Orthodoxy. Christians of any intelligence during the first two centuries at least did not regard their movement as the bearer of the first light into the heathen darkness, but only the republication of very ancient Spiritual Truth. If you undertake this study with Bet Emet you will find what all do; namely, that the earliest of the Church Fathers and their writings attest to this very fact that "True Christianity" (the religion of "the Christ" within humanity) has been with mankind since the beginning of time. Augustine's quote to truth will wake the dead! Sadly today Rome as "radically reinterpreted" all the ancient Spiritual Wisdom in order to dominate and control the world through fear and ignorance and in so doing forcing it through the doors of the Roman Church to avoid the supposed "fires of Hell" which don't exist by the way; it worked....we call the legacy of such theological inventionism today the Dark Ages and it lingers in our Churches Sunday after Sunday and billions and billions of people have walked through their lives following "another Gospel" and "another Christ" never knowing that they never had the Divine Truths that this Creator imparted to humanity in the beginning of its infancy. The truth of this matter is that the indwelling god is himself being brought to birth within the womb of humanity; in you and me. This is our calling, this is your purpose; to aspire to progressive Spiritual Perfection by reaching toward the mark of your high calling in "Christ". We come to see in this website that man is a Spiritual Intelligence, who has taken flesh with the object of gaining experience in the worlds below the Spiritual, in order that he may be able to master and to rule them, and in later ages take his rightful place in the creative and directing Hierarchies of the Universe. Man, being himself, is to come to know the Divinity whose life he shares. Each individual is gestating a Divinity within the depths of his own nature from life to successive life. Yes, Christianity taught reincarnation as do all major world religions and did so until 533 A.D. when a vote of hands struck this Divine Law of Science and Physics from the pages of intended Spiritual Truth but once it was heard shouted in the halls of the Vatican.

- Christianity has fervently exhorted us to look into the empyrean to find the unapproachable God. All the while the infant deity slumbers unheeded within the heart awaiting to "come forth" from the "dead". Yes, resurrection from the dead was something to be experienced on this side of Jordan as the Gnostic Paul so appropriately says: Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV) Christianity has largely nullified the force of St. Paul's almost frantic cry to us: "Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is within you?" In fact we have heard of it all our lives but never recognized its because "being born again" has again had its "true meaning" radically altered once again by the Roman Church.
- In this last of our website we will see that the supreme Creator was at first given various names, such as the First Cause, the Great Spirit, God, the One. Creative energy emanates from the One and manifests in various ways, depending on the plane or level of existence that is involved. The ancients understood that the the gods of primeval religion were the active manifest powers, faculties, organs of God himself that flourish in the Universe and Cosmos. Nature was understood by the Spiritual ancients as God's body, elemental forces the agents and messengers (angels) of his operative economy, Universal and Divine Mind His thinking faculty and the ultimate contribution His Spiritual heart to mankind and all of this was imparted and incarnated into mankind awaiting "awakening from the deadness" of Spiritual apathy and ignorance of his True Being. The ancient system of Spiritual Wisdom thought it not blasphemy to define the organic structure of deity to explain to human grasp the cause and nature of the world. Reverence was not withheld from even the lowest instrumentalization of Godhood and its manifestation in our physical realm. The ancients deemed it not dishonoring to deity to recognize His being in all things. They saw God manifested in nature, and not as abstracted from nature. And they studied nature as the living garment of God's immanence. In so doing many cultures compare the Creator to the Sun. The Sun pours out its life giving rays, as does the Creator. In order to exist, all life absorbs a tiny amount of energy from the Sun. The Creator is our Spiritual Sun and it is the very embodiment of our cells and their nucleus. There have been various solar gods, such as Ra, Apollo, and Christ but they are all nothing more than personifications of the "Internal Sun" that is the core of every cell in our bodies and the very Living Conscious Energy within each cell that makes the Body of Christ or as the ancient Egyptians termed it the "Body of Ra". We come to see that there are many levels or planes of existence or manifestation. There are terrestrial and celestial worlds (as Paul says), noumenal and phenomenal realms, physical and ethereal planes, material and spiritual bodies, heavens, fairy-lands, underworlds, hells, limbos, Isles of the Blessed, Elysian Fields, the meadows of Aarru-Hetep and homes on high. And the beings on these worlds and planes of existence range from high divinity down to man and these beings are shown to be the very "gods" and "goddesses" of which we read in the ancient mythologies of the nations. The ancients understood that God, through the Law of Incubation and Incarnation, has filled all "matter" with Himself with an intended purpose of perpetual Self-awaking and Self-awareness of Himself. In all that exists, even in mankind, God has His being and He lives and moves and has His being in us as He does in all "matter". Through the Law of Dismemberment God has "fragmented" Himself into infinite Divine Sparks that has "fallen" into "matter" and incarnated Himself into all existences as we see in the Egyptian Ennead, the Egyptian Ogdoad, and Jewish Kabbalah. Here again we see that all the world's religions before the rise of Rome shared the same Spiritual Ideas of God, man and Cosmos. All of life is shown to be perpetually evolving Spiritually until the Universal Mind inherent in all "matter" achieves the "fullness and stature" of the Divine Mind or "Krst/Christ". This is what Paul actually says in Ephesians 4:13 13:"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ:" This is why the "only Christ" that exists is the Divine Mind which "fell into matter" to save the Souls of mankind which equally "fell to their deaths" in "matter". This Divine Mind we see in his "fall into matter" was termed by the ancients the "death of Christ" as they recognized this "fall" of Christ to his "death" involved the "crossing of planes" of Celestial existences and termed this the "Crossification" or the "crucifixion of the Krst" or "the crucifixion of the Christ" in order to save the Souls trapped in Amenta/Hades/Hell and material incarnation in "matter". This is the only truth taught about the allegorical "dead of God" or "Krst/Christ" which was taught for thousands of years and existed in such integrity in all of the nation's ancient Spiritual Wisdom and was always taught in all world religions and their Spiritual Myths and Divine Allegories down through time until the rise of Roman Orthodoxy when the "indwelling Christ" and gestating Divine Mind was "externalized" and "separated" from humanity and confined to but one person of Rome's historical invention, the "Jesus" of the New Testament. In this "Jesus" of Rome's devise we can yet find if we possess the ancient "keys" to correctly interpreting the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom which has been so tragically twisted by Rome the compilation and synthesis of all "incarnated Christs" down through ancient religions which is so perfectly personified down through history by the ancient Spiritual Wisdoms of the major world religions; all having in common the same idea that man is a "god in an animal body" slowly evolving himself in his return to his Fathers' House as the Prodigal Son Divine Allegory so appropriately states. Let me finish this with a quote from Paul: "Know ye not as to your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you, unless ye be reprobate?" (2 Cor. 13:5). It is here we find the ONLY Christ ever given humanity and mankind will ever know! It is here we must call forth the Christ "from the dead" within us: "Come Forth" must be our cry as we find the Son, the Divine Mind in us, calling forth the Father from the "dead" within us and all humanity as we see so clearly in the resurrection of Osiris by Horus, his Son, the Egyptian Christ, which is re-told in the "Jesus Story" where the Jewish Christ calls Lazarus forth from the dead; "L-Asar-Us", is Egyptian for Lazarus in Hebrew. Here we see "Asar" is Osiris, the Father God of "the Christ", who is called forth from the death to which is "fell in matter" . Here we see Horus calling his Father God Osiris from the dead within in all humanity to where humanity comes to know its True Self as Divinity in "matter". Humanity is to experience the Lazarus story personally. The cry is to come forth for every person as Paul shows us: Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV) Shame on you Rome for such a terrible deception that has robbed from mankind these last 1,800 years his true Divinity and purpose of his incarnation!

So we began our study with the question:

Matt 16:13 13 When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? (KJV)

Now you have you the "plan-o-gram" to find all the answers! ?The rest is up to you to study to show yourselves approved by verifying what we show you then you can be assured that you will not stand ashamed when you meet this Creator face to face when you cross your Nile/Jordan...(the same)

IN CLOSING

As stated earlier we begin our study with Bet Emet Websites with a "historical" assumption and present studies to show the beauty of Judaism over the dishonesty in Christian theological dogma and do so by using the depiction of the New Testament Jesus as if "historical" because he provides a vehicle for the teaching of Jewish theology, monotheism, morals, values, ethics, etc. It is not my purpose to reveal the weaknesses behind such a historical presentation of Jesus at this time as it will be developed and proven at a later time as one's studies progress through the Mystical Jesus and the Mythical Jesus as detailed on the above websites.

Of concern for us of course is the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament and its reliability as understood "literally" since it is being taught as a literal truth today about a historical man who lived 2000 years ago. You will come to see in time as you study that the Ancients as far back as Egypt understood this "Karast/Christ" entirely different from how we have been taught today under the direction of Roman and Protestant Christianity. Here are some big questions for you to ponder in light that most Christians trust in this Jesus Christ for their Eternal Salvation.

- Answer for yourself: Who or what is truly behind the name "Jesus Christ"? Can it be proven that the "Jesus Story" is nothing but the personification of the Sun and its passage through the various houses of the Zodiac as it passes through the 4 seasons and the equinoxes and solstices? If so then what do you do now?
- Answer for yourself: Are the infancy narratives and later depictions of the life and ministry of Jesus Christ in the New Testament nothing more than solar stories told as allegories which were later "literalized" and subsequently written into Rome's New Testament and depicted as a literalized historical Jesus Christ when in fact they were understood by the Ancients as astrological myths taken from astronomy?
- Answer for yourself: Did Rome destroy the Gnostic Christ of the earliest "Christians" which had existed since the beginning of time over the first 5 centuries of the early Church and replace it one of their own making? What are you to do when you see this from your studies on our Websites?
- Answer for yourself: If I study the Websites and find that the "Jesus Story" follows chronologically the Gospel of Matthew from chapter one through the end of chapter 28 and see for myself that the "Jesus Story" presented there parallels identically the personification of the Sun in its path through the Zodiac then what should this mean to me regarding my belief in Jesus as the historical Christ and him being the Jewish Messiah?
- Answer for yourself: Have we as Christians and followers of the "the Christ" been deceived by Rome and spent a good part of our lives worshipping a man as God as Rome has declared in their New Testament since the Nicean Council (325 A.D.) when in fact we should have been worshipping the one true Creator as the Pharaoh Moses (Akhenaton) instructed when he stood up to the religious establishment of Egypt when some were straying from the truth in their worship of the "godman" similarity to what we have done today with Rome's historical Jesus? Are we guilty of idolatry as Christians because we have believed a fable no more real than Snow White and the seven dwarfs?

Well the following studies in the above websites is not for the weak of heart as I will present over and over again infallible proofs that the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament is but a hoax perpetrated upon us by Rome in their hatred of the Jewish faith and Jewish Gnosticism back in the first century. You will see, in the last websites depicting the Mythical Christ, as we move chronologically from one sign of the Zodiac to the other, from month to month, from season to season, from Spring equinox to Summer solstice, from Autumn equinox to Winter solstice, and repeating again this cycle, along with the study of selected events from the depiction of the life of Jesus in Rome's New Testament, that if you study with us and finish the studies on this website, that the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament is nothing more than the literalization by Rome of the path of the Sun through the Zodiac along with other solar myths later incorporated into their "Jesus Story" as later literalized by Rome as well. In so doing you will see as I and many others have that we have not been taught the truth about "the Christ within" and how He is so integral to the proper worship of the Invisible God as Egypt and Moses taught. It would seem that Egypt got it right in the beginning but thanks to Hellenism and Romanism we lost these earliest and correct understanding of Divine Concepts witnessed in God's Heaven and Nature. In a way these were our classroom and where we were to be instructed by the Creator about our life and purpose in God's creation. We are truly blessed today to live in an age where archeology and the information age can bring these truths back to life for you and me.

As a "retired Pastor", and moved by what my studies revealed over the years, I feel moved to share this information and evidence from such studies with those interested in the truth behind the origin for "Jesus Story" which is taught to the world today as a historical reality when in fact it is not. In the websites that are delineated above such evidence is presented to the reader in hopes that the missing puzzle pieces concerning the "Jesus Story" will be plainly evident to him and he can, in the light of such knowledge, no longer be deceived by the astrological allegory of "the Christ" as found in the New Testament which is erroneously taught "literally" today. I make very few promises to our readers but I make this one now: If you do these studies, and read these articles on this website then you will be thoroughly convinced as I was that the "Jesus Story" was never meant to be understood "literally" as it has been taught to you and me. Thus the worship of Jesus as a historical person or connecting this assumed historical person with God or believing him to be God is the most vulgar idolatry according to Moses and the Ten Commandments and a terrible affront to the Creator and constitutes blasphemy of the Name of God.

Currently Bet Emet Ministries offers a CD with all our websites contained on it where the above information is available for easy search and study where you can work through this material at your leisure. If you would desire the synthesis of our scholarly studies into these areas concerning the origins for the Christian faith and the truth behind "the Christ" and the Jewish Messiah along with the "Jesus Story" then one is available for a small donation to support the efforts of this ministry. Inquire if you so desire by e-mailing me at the link below. Shalom.

We offer a CD of all out websites contained on one disk if you are interested with detailed instructions as how to study them "in order"...please inquire for the CD for such through study will take you some time if you ever hope of cracking the "Jesus Puzzle"

Greetings to a fellow truth seeker

In response to your request for the CD from Bet Emet Ministries, a CD that contains all of our published studies, sixteen websites, total, sites on very important areas of thematic studies that provide the "key" to proper interpretation of Christianity as it exists today, then we ask that you consider a small donation to our ministry that allows us to continue to procure necessary materials to further our studies in these important areas that archaeology and Egytologoty today are bringing to our attention. I ask that you consider a minimum donation made out to Craig Lyons of $50.00 for literally my life's work...twenty years of scholarly study into the true origins of the Christain faith, the origin of the Bible and the true people who wrote these religious and Spiritual documents that came to be included in the Bible. As you will see, the origin for our Bible stories do not rest with the Hebrews or Jews, but with the Ancient Egyptians originally. Along with the Cd is included a very important 10 pages of detailed instructions as to how to approach these studies and study them "in order." There is a certain and proper path, or order if you so wish to call it, in which these studies need be followed, studied and addressed for their maximum benefit to the student. It is rather like climbing the stairs of ancinet knowledge...you cannot get to the 16th step without properly traversing the steps between each other in "order" if you desire to obtain the goal in your pursuit of Spiritaul truth. Such a sequential order assures a constant and progressive evolution of thought and understnding. This "order" in the study of these sites is critical if one is to build upon this new knowledge and follow the studies one step at at time and not get "lost" or overwhelmed by so much "new information." So often we read the end of the book first and get confused or just quit, or worse, we get scared not knowing how the teacher arrived at his conclusions. Fearful or overwhelmed, many stop their quest for Spiritual truth and their incarnational evolution stops. Hence, this information, approached in sequential thought, is of a vital necessity if one is to trace the evolution and man's departure from these Ancient Divine Spiritual Truths that all mankind were once given in the beginning of Creation. It is imporant to see how these ancinet Spiritual truths were held sacred for over ten thousand years before the rise of Roman orthodoxy where they will change radically and rapidly with Rome's "literalization" of the Divine. Today we are so far from this One Truth, this "faith once given the saints," that it is a crying shame and the fruit of such a departure from these ancinet Spiritual truths, especially as seen in our country which prides itself of being a Christian nation, speaks of our departure in America today from the Creator's will for mankind. In fact, for over the last 1,800 years, Rome has sadly been the leading culprit and the greatest sinner in this tragic departure from Divine Truth yet both it and its daughter, Protestantism, have churches that fill our land but little truth comes from them, focusing on tradition than the historical-critical study of the Bible. There is hope for your "return" to "the Faith" once given the Saints and this CD will show you exactly what we have "lost" and how we are to "recover it all" once again.

If you would like to obtain this CD with its instructions as to where to begin and how to proceed, then please respond prayerfully with your gift for this abundant truth that will not only change your life as never before, but reveal to you the goal of your incarnational purpose, which is no less that your realization in this Earthly life of the fullness and stature of Christ. I ask that you resond as the LORD lays on your heart to with your gift and suppor to my efforts and I thank you for your support as we are endeavoring at this time to reach out on a much larger manner if God permits. Please address all checks or money orders to simply Craig Lyons and the CD is out asap. Thank you. Please share this knowledge with others for we are moving into a new age of awareness in a Cosmic sense; it is time for mankind to take their next step in the evolution of its Spiritual consciousness as we strive to become one with the Divine ONE Himself. And this cannot happen without truth and knowledge. Remember, the only religion that God ever gave man was TRUTH!

BET EMET MINISTRIES

"Hebrew for "House of Truth"

Craig Lyons M.Div.

The following is the recommended reading list for students of Bet Emet Ministries. Each of these following books is very important in your study of the origins of the Christian Faith for one or more reasons. If I had it to do all over again instead of the several hundred or so books collected and read over 20 yrs these would be the only books I needed to read to get the total picture of the corruption of "the faith once given the saints". From my viewpoint looking backward I consider each of these books mandatory for ones understanding of the difficult problems which confront us once we begin to study the origin and corruption of early Christianity. I make few promises but I will make an exception at this time: If one undertakes to read as many of these books in the following categories then there will be little that will escape him in his quest for truth concerning the Christian faith, the "Jesus Story", as well as Messianisms within Judaism which originated with Egypt in the beginning of time. This is all the more important when one gets down to the difficult task of trying to reconcile the Jewish Messiah as taught by Judaism and the blurred image of him as found in our depiction of the "Jesus Christ" in the Second New Testament which Rome gave us in refutation of the earliest Gnostic First New Testament which has been so tragically altered today and which so few tragically are aware. Blessings to all in your search for God's truth. These books will reveal to you the different "karast/Christ", or should I say "Jesus" which is found down throughout recorded history: the Mystical, the Mythical, and the Historical. Only two are "true" and one is an absolute falsity due to the tragic loss of the "gnosis" and knowledge of the previous two. Can you guess which one is false?

A Christian's religious belief system, when tested and exposed to contradictory facts from Biblical languages, Biblical history, Biblical culture, the study of Gnosticism as well as Comparative Religions, Astronomy and Astrology, and Archeology, must in the Spirit of Truth and Repentance, be flexible enough to change.

Blessings.....Craig Lyons M.Div. 2004

Answer for yourself: What will these books teach me?

These books will help the reader confront the many challenges regarding the orthodox approach to the inherited "Jesus Story" and the history of Christianity and its true origins. These books point their critical finger at many of the rigid dogmas of Christianity as well as the LITERAL interpretation of the "Jesus Story" which has sadly created not only mental servitude with attendant idolatry but at the same time stifled the real understanding of the original Christian message that goes all the way back to the beginning of time in Egypt. If you read these books you will come to see beyond any doubt that the true meaning of Christianity is to be found in the Mystical and Mythological Teachings. These books will help you see through the false traditions inherited in our day and will show you the need for a revival of the effort to discover the esoteric significance of the Christian heritage, to understand the ALLEGORICAL method of Biblical interpretation, and to find behind the myths, legends, dramas, symbols, and allegories, the spiritual vision which they embody as understood by the Ancients. Only in this way will there ever be a new birth for Christianity and an new enlightenment which is no desperately needed in the Christian world comprising over 3 billion people in the world today.

I CONSIDER ALL OF THESE BOOKS A MUST....YOUR LIBRARY NEEDS EACH OF THEM OR AT LEAST REPRESENTATIVE FROM EACH CATEGORY.....IF YOU READ THESE BOOKS OR AS LEAST THE "GREAT ONES" THEN YOU WILL KNOW ALL THAT NEEDS TO BE KNOWN...(ALMOST)..BUT YOU GET THE POINT....MOST PROBLEMS WITH CHRISTIANITY ARE DEALT WITH IN THESE BOOKS AND FEW THINGS ESCAPE EXPOSURE IN THESE BOOKS...THEY COVER IT ALL..... needless to say I have many more books that I could recommend...but this is the best of crop.. you might can get some of them inexpensively at http://www.bibliofind.com under the "used" book searches.

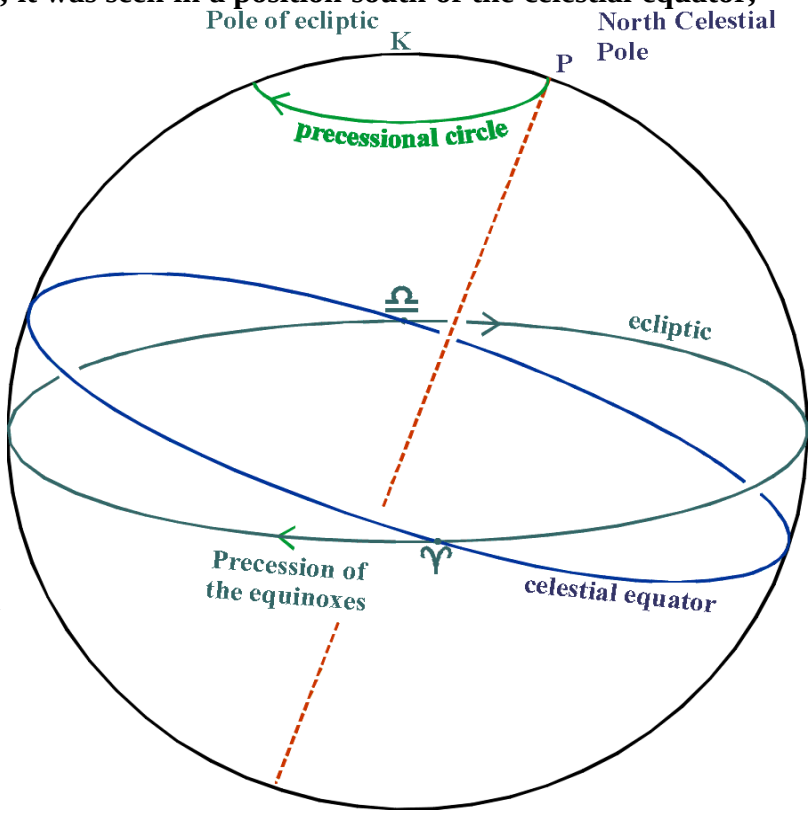
THE PRECESSION OF THE EQUINOXES



Being a circle, the Zodiac has no obvious beginning, so a specific point must be determined from which measurement can commence. This is where the problems begin to occur, in particular because astrologers sought to align the Zodiac with the four cardinal points that mark the alteration of seasons: the equinoxes (where the Sun crosses the equator in spring and autumn) and the solstices (where it is furthest from the equator in summer and winter). In the early Classical period these were regarded as fixed in space although, in fact, they are subject to an almost imperceptible precession at the rate of 50 seconds per year. What this means in simple terms, is that the Sun does not cross the equator at exactly the same place on the ecliptic each year. It crosses at a point 50 seconds of arc to the east of the previous year. During a lifetime this shifting point of intersection between the ecliptic and equator is so small as to be negligible, but over several centuries it will be noticed that the backdrop of stars that once lay behind the crossing point is moving westwards. In layman's terms "the Heavens are moving" slowly and almost imperceptibly but this can be noticed over hundreds and thousands of years and was done by the Ancient nations like Egypt who studied the stars. This is the phenomenon called "Precession" and this celestial phenomena is caused by the Earth's axis slowly rotating around the celestial poles. Whilst the background of the fixed stars remain more or less constant to each other, at least for a long time, the ecliptic's intersection with the equator slides backwards through the Zodiac, completing one circuit in approximately 26,000 years - the 'Great Astrological Age'. It common knowledge that the day marks the period of the Earth's rotation upon its axis, while the year marks the period of its revolution around the Sun. However, many people to not realize that there is also a period of approximately 25,800 years known as the Great Year, during which the poles of the Earth's axis trace an imaginary circle in the sky. This gyration of the Earth's poles occurs because our planet is an ellipsoid, flattened top and bottom and bulging at the equator. The gravitational pull of the Sun and Moon on the equatorial protuberance produces an oscillating movement similar to the wobble of a spinning top which tilts first one way and then another. Astronomers call this wobbling motion "nutation," a word derived from the Latin word "nutare", meaning to nod. Consequently, the Earth's axis is not always inclined in the same direction. About five thousand years ago, the North Pole pointed toward the star Alpha Draconis. By 2100 A.D., it will be pointing almost directly at Polaris, the present North Star. In the year 7500 A.D. Alpha Centei will be the Earth's polestar, and by 14,000 A.D., it will be Vega (Alpha Lyrae). The celestial equator is a projection of the Earth's equator upon the imaginary sphere of the heavens. Similarly, the extensions of the Earth's poles are called the north and south celestial poles. The ecliptic is the apparent path of the Sun through the heavens, and can be imagined as a line passing through the zodiacal constellations as they are seen at night. Since it is the Earth, and not the Sun, which moves, the ecliptic is really the plane of the Earth's orbit extended to meet the celestial sphere. The angle between the ecliptic and the celestial equator is called the obliquity of the ecliptic. At the present time, it measures nearly twenty-three degrees thirty minutes.

During the course of the year, the Sun appears to move slowly along the ecliptic to the left. When it reaches the point where the equator of the sky intersects the ecliptic, days and nights are of equal length. These points of intersection are called Equinoxes from the Latin "equi", equal, and "nox", night. The spring, or vernal equinox, which occurs on or about the twenty-first of March, marks the point at which the Sun enters the sign (not the constellation) Aries. Before that time, it was seen in a position south of the celestial equator, and the nights were longer than the days in the Northern Hemisphere. After the passing of the Sun over the celestial equator for southerly to northerly declination, the days are longer than the nights. Take note please where the lines of the "celestial equator" intersect with the "ecliptic" for it is at this point that the Sun "passes-over" each year; one moving from the southern hemisphere to the northern hemisphere at the Vernal Equinox and correspondingly 6 months later as it moves again over this same plane and the same intersection of the "celestial equator" with the "ecliptic" at the Autumn Equinox.

Answer for yourself: Why is this so important? It is at this moment the "Sun was on the Cross" and this concept is at the heart of the "dying/rising" god theologies we find all the way down through recorded history and which is at the core of the "Jesus Story" as well as a host of other "crucified sungods".

Due to the Earth's nutation, the point at which the Sun passes the intersection of the ecliptic and the celestial equator is seen each year in a slightly different position against the background of stars. Thus, the signs which are measured from the equinox, gradually move away from the constellations, whose names they bear and which provide the unmoving sphere against which the vernal point shifts slowly backward. This retrograde movement is called the precession of the equinoxes.

In astrology, the thirty degrees of the ecliptic, known as the sign Aries, are always counted from the vernal equinox, even though year by year the slow retrograde motion of the equinoctial point along the ecliptic amounts to about fifty seconds of a degree, or a degree every seventy-two years. (This makes the normal human lifetime equal to one degree, or one day, of the Great Solar Year.) The vernal equinox marks a natural point of beginning, shown by the balancing of days and nights (think Ma'at, harmony, peace, the Kingdom of God), whereas the constellations are arbitrary divisions of the heavenly sphere and no one is yet certain where they begin.

The movement of the Vernal Equinox from one Zodiacal sign to the next - by which we are presently moving from the Age of Pisces to Aquarius - is a subdivision of this cycle that takes approximately 2,160 years.

The need to correctly identify the position of the Vernal Equinox, which sees the crossing of the Sun from the southern hemisphere to the north around 21 March, was a matter of vast significance to ancient civilizations.

Answer for yourself: And why was this?

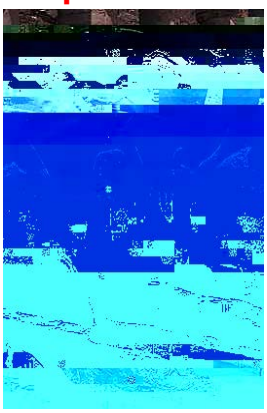
The Sun's return to the equinox gave the official signal for the start of spring, a time of great jubilation and spiritual worship, where whole communities engaged in New Year festivities and ceremonies that spanned several days, dedicated to celebrating the return of the Sun's domination over the darkness of winter, the return of life over death. Let us not forget that man's greatest enemy and greatest fear since the beginning of time was his "fear of darkness". This "fear of darkness" lies at the very heart of so much of our "religious beliefs and doctrines" in Biblical Judaism and Christianity and few every know this. If you have never read this article stop right now and do so before you continue.

The great civilizations of the Egyptians and Mesopotamians placed tremendous importance on precisely locating and dating the "return of the Sun." The astrologers of the ancient period were observers, driven by religious and social needs to correctly locate the Vernal Equinox in order to set their calendars and regulate society. The people of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia were not using the tropical Zodiac (it hadn't been invented yet), and so they had no need to establish a fixed reference point from which it could commence. But they were concerned with astronomical measurement of the cosmic points that indicated seasonal change, and they placed a heavy investment in their astrologers to keep their yearly cycles up to date by reference to the stars.

For our purposes in this study one of the most important things for us to understand is the previous precessional shift - the movement of the Vernal Point out of Taurus and into Aries, which took place within the golden heyday of ancient astrological worship, in the 2nd millennium BC.

Answer for yourself: Why is this time period of great importance to Judaism and Christianity today? It was during this time we have the great nations of Egypt and Israel from which much of our religious theology originated in Christianity.

Taurus has one of the longest histories of the Zodiac signs. The Sumerians refer to a star-bull ushering in the springtime, a reference to the Vernal Equinox being placed in Taurus sometime between the fourth and second millenniums BC (the 2,160 year of the Age of Taurus). This was the age in which the bull cult arose in Minoan Crete, the age of Montu the Bull in Egypt and the era of the biblical golden calf.



Bulls, ploughs and agriculture seem such an essential and mundane part of ancient life that one might expect them to be taken for granted. But domestication of the ox and bull and the invention of the plough was no mean accomplishment; in the native civilizations of North and South America neither occurred, a major factor in the failure of these civilizations to develop technology and effective defences. It was during the period of the great astrological age of Taurus that the people of the Middle East made this breakthrough, and around the same period began to employ the wheel, the lever and the most powerful invention of agriculture, the plough.

The first sign of the appearance of the wheel is traced to Mesopotamia and dates to just after 3500 BC. The earliest finds are solid wooden wheels which were attached to rafts for drawing loads upon a primitive cart. Shortly afterwards wheels and axles appear, along with levers and wedges from the earliest ploughs. Pulleys and large-scale irrigation systems had not yet been devised but the mechanical principles were in gestation, waiting for man's inventiveness to catch up with the potential of exploiting powers other than his own physical labour. The harnessing of animal power in the domestication of the ox opened the door to organized and efficient farming and that in turn allowed communities to settle, mature and develop their infrastructure. The tireless oxen, a creature capable of matching the strength and productivity of many men, provided the means whereby supplies of food stock could become far greater than the supplies required for its production. Domestication of the ox was a genuine cause for human celebration. The creature was honored for its resilience and strength and also for the fertility that it conveyed upon the land. From the Old Testament we can see how they were viewed as sacred, to be treated with great respect.

The Egyptians have a long history of bull-centered symbolism in their worship of God and it is here that we find "sacred bulls" (Apis bulls). These were said to incarnate the spirit of their gods and their death was followed by a period of national mourning. Often, these were depicted with the crescent Moon for horns.

Prior to the Age of Aries the predominant iconography in Egypt was the Bull of Heaven, which was replaced by an endless array of ram images from the 2nd millennium BC onwards. It is noteworthy that the physical manifestation of the god Montu was in the form of the bull, and the pharaohs who ruled at the end of the Taurean age bore names that spoke of the completion of his power. Mentuhotep (literally 'Montu is satisfied') reigned from 2060 - 2010 BC, followed by his successors Mentuhotep II and III. Some scholars have also dated the story of Moses overturning the Golden Calf to this same period, suggesting that there was a widespread awareness amongst rulers that they were ushering in a brand new age and needed to respond with demolition of the old (the Age of Aries replacing the Age of Taurus....Ram symbolism for the prior Bull symbolism). Throughout the ancient world there are numerous depictions of the Sun god wrestling with and overthrowing the Bull, most of which have been translated as pictorial celebrations of the shift from the Age of Taurus to Aries. Some have carried other interpretations, mainly based on the Sun god overcoming darkness because the stars of Taurus were illuminated by the full Moon in the midst of winter.

In ancient Egypt the ram was revered as an emblem of the Sun and held sacred except during the New Year ceremonies when lambs were offered to the Sun in sacrifice. The same is largely true in ancient Greece. Hamal, the alpha star of Aries, was worshipped by the Greeks at the festival of Jupiter Ammon, where they celebrated the return of the Sun to Aries with the slaughter of rams.

Answer for yourself: Do you remember Mithra and the slaying of the Bull (symbolic for the Constellation of Taurus)? This is the same idea; namely the Constellation of Taurus being replaced after 2,160 years by the Constellation of Aries at the Vernal Equinox.

Answer for yourself: Why was this a great "Spiritual Time" for all of mankind in the northern hemisphere?

This was a time of great spiritual significance; the re-emergence of the Sun from death at the Winter Solstice where correspondingly the Earth "had died" and withheld her food and her "salvation" to mankind. It is the time of the resurrection of the light and with the understanding that God's Sun was a "symbol" for the God of the Cosmos who provided His "salvation" to mankind through the medium of light, heat, warmth, the renewed chain, the vanquishing of darkness and its threat of "death" to all life then you can easily see how the Ancients came to understand at this great time of the year that it is the time of the "resurrection of God".

Now you see the importance of the article on the "fear of darkness" even better.

Like the mythical phoenix, which arose in its own ashes, the Ram was chosen as a natural symbol of resurrection because of its ability, when shorn, to replenish its stock of wool. In so many ways and in so many places man was continually taught by God, in Nature as well as in the Sky and in the Heavens, that God was "life" and that God provided for all life "a rebirth" of the "same"; not different but the "same". It was this "same Sun" that was reborn, it was this "same" plant that grew again, it was this "same" tree that blossomed again, it was this "same moon" that was born from the dead each month, it was this "same" Sun that rose from the dead daily, it was this "same" Sun that rose from the dead of the Winter Solstice each year in renewed life, it was this "same" Constellation that reappeared at the Vernal Equinox every 25,920 years (12 Houses, each ruling the Vernal Equinox for 2,160 years according to the Precession of the Equinox". Man understood like the Ram in the Sky and like "Mother Earth" he will follow this SAME PATTERN of all life above him (Sky/Heaven) and around him (Nature); man will live again! We have here "Eternal Life" at is foundation. Man will follow in the "same order" what God was speaking to him "above him, and around him".So as Above, So beneath!

"The Ram, who is rich with an abundance of wool and, when shorn of this, with a fresh supply, will ever cherish hopes", writes Manilius in the first century BC. Astronomica; Loeb, p.233; Ch 4. 124-128. This may help some Christian theologians place into better context the reference to Jesus as the "Lamb of God"; and demonstrates that the phrase need not imply that Christ was the literal sacrificial atonement for man's sins, which many find confusing and clearly contradictory to Christian teachings. Biblical references draw heavily on the symbolism in the description of Christ as the Light, the Resurrection, the Lamb of God. It is not by accident that Easter - the resurrection of the Lord - is held in the full Moon period that follows the Sun's entry into Aries, and our western custom of giving eggs is based on a similar need to offer symbols of new life and new opportunities.

It was a natural act by which the stars of the constellation that held our attention at this period, the final death of winter and darkness, the re-emergence of the Sun's full glory, should be characterized in the form of a living representation. Principally a symbol of the resurrected Sun, the ram became a visible manifestation and symbol only of the Sun-god and its creative power; subsequent generations spoke of a mythical golden fleece, able to return life to the dead in the same way that Aries heralded the end of the season of death. Through this association the sacred Ram was an embodiment of the principles of fertility, vitality, new life and creative energy. The connection with the Sun was also reinforced by the culmination of Aries as Sirius rose heliacally and announced the annual inundation of the Nile for Egypt. It was the opportunity for mankind to experience renewed life from God and this "renewed life" came to man in many forms. It is the time to focus on God and His love and His salvation and provision given to mankind in many a forms and ways and with that man's attendant responsibilities to his Father in Heaven!

Man realized he was "IN COVENANT" with the Creator!

The glory that Egypt invested in the ram can be witnessed at the Great Temple of Amon-Ra at Karnak, built in 1480 BC. This includes an impressive avenue of ram-headed sphinxes and is oriented to the Summer Solstice at sunset. The temple is designed around a long passage, arranged to permit a beam of light from the Sun to reach down to a darkened sanctuary at the end. The path was narrowed so that the chamber could only be illuminated for a few moments on the day of the Summer Solstice. Impressive arguments have also been made that Karnak, together with other Sun temples such as the one at Luxor, form part of a huge reconstruction of the constellation Aries over the Egyptian landscape.

We are only just beginning to scratch the surface with our understanding of how deep and impressive was the full extent of the Egyptian worship of God, symbolized as the resurrected sun, which was also characterized in the symbol of Aries; or in our acceptance of how firmly this has underpinned the origins of Christianity.

It is no longer ground-breaking to demonstrate how many of the New Testament Psalms are translations of ancient Egyptian hymns to the Sun-god, or how biblical symbolism draws heavily on astrological ideas, motifs and parallels. It is no longer controversial to maintain the obvious fact that Easter, the pivotal point of the Christian calendar, is simply an altered form of worship of God, symbolized as the resurrected Sun as it reappears in its crossing of the Vernal point and initiates the season of spring. The name itself ties it to the astrological philosophy that recognizes the East, the point of ascension, as the spiritual source of new life and growth. It is the same astrological symbolism that proclaimed the birth of the 'New King' by the bright star rising in the east. The resurrection of Christ - the 'light too bright to look upon', the lamb (ie., 'resurrection') of God is now justly, irrefutably accepted as a mythological continuance of the New Year festivities that were so important to our ancestors.

But what has been dismissed far too lightly, is the apparent 'coincidence' that the transition of an astrological age accurately dated the coming of a new world order, and spanned the lifetime of a new physical manifestation of the 'one true god'. Astrologers have been too quick to 'turn the matter upside down', verifying the value of astrology by claiming that the onset of Christianity is reflected astrologically by the Christian adoption of the fishes as its symbolic motif.

Answer for yourself: Would it not be more likely, that astrologers were forewarning of the monumental significance of this precessional event with a view to past dynasties having trashed the iconatry of the old gods the last time that it happened? We only have to look at the turmoil in Egypt at the changing of the Age of Taurus where the Age of Aries displaced it and the resultant Exodus to understand the importance and huge ramifications of such "Celestial" and "Spiritual" events.

Answer for yourself: Would an attempt to create a new world order, based on a new spiritual source, not attempt to identify itself with the fishes, precisely because this was the sign of the Zodiac whose age was about to begin?

Answer for yourself: Could an attempt to redefine man's relationship with his God not be consciously manipulated or developed at a time that was perfectly suited to symbolically reinforce a spiritual need to do so?

Answer for yourself: Whereas Taurus justly was the age of the Bull and left its mark in the Heaven because of the benefits mankind accrued from the association at the time, was the overt use of fish symbolism in the rise of Christianity at the start of the Piscean Age, a deliberate attempt to identify with a symbol that was assumed to hold the new age power?

To my knowledge, these questions have never been properly probed or explored by historians, religious leaders or astrologers. But they appear to leave us with one of two very radical and startling suppositions. Either astrology verifies the Christian faith in a way that has never been fully appreciated or acknowledged, or Christianity is far more a mythological expression of ancient astrological belief than anyone in the organized church is willing to admit.

THE SOURCE FROM WHICH MOSES DREW THE TEN COMMANDMENTS AND THE LAWS OF NOAH

If I were to tell you that of all the people to have ever lived on this planet that the Sumerians and Egyptians knew God best I am sure most would thing that such a statement is totally foolish. Before you jump to that conclusion I would hope might be curious enough to look the the evidence that substantiates it. Let us begin with our understanding of Moses being an Egyptian. We saw in this website previously that the Laws of Noah were the bedrock upon which the Ten Commandments or "Categories" were constructed later. Now let us look a little deeper if we could.

MOSES THE LAWGIVER....AN EGYPTIAN PHARAOH

Ancient Egypt had a formative influence on the ancient world that no other nation had and it sadly goes almost unrecognized today. Egypt's influence was through its stability and links with is own remote past, and Egypt's reputation for secret wisdom was due to the peculiar geographical and climate features of the country. The Nile River Valley and the Nile Delta comprised approximately 12,000 square miles of fertile land, the villages and towns of which were situated along its length. The Mediterranean Sea lay to the north, vast deserts to the east and west and dense jungle to the south, making unsuspected invasion near impossible, and its virtual isolation allowed Egyptian civilization to develop unthreatened by its neighbors. Because of this, the ancient Egyptian culture was very static, and it existed virtually unchanged for millennia, its origins going back beyond 3000 B.C.E.; some records indicated 20,000 yrs or more. This kind of information sure sinks the boat of Bishop Usher's chronology of mankind existing only 6000 yrs or so which Roman Catholicism gives the world today. Archeology today is making a joke out of much that Rome forced down the throats of people now going on for almost 2000 yrs.

Much of the knowledge concerning ancient Egypt is based on complex rituals related to death and the afterlife. Since Egyptian civilization was a product in many ways of the natural forces that surrounded it, the people looked to Nature to explain the unexplainable. Understand that Nature was influenced by the Heavens and the Cosmos; thus they are intertwined and inseparable. The three main elements of the Egyptian religion were:

- 1. A solar monotheism--one god as the creator of the universe who manifested his power in the sun and its operations.
- 2. A belief in the regenerative power of nature which expressed itself in the adoration of ithyphallic gods, fertile goddesses and a series of animal and vegetation deities.
- 3. A perception of anthropomorphic divinity, the life of whom existed in this world and in the world beyond.

THE EGYPTIAN PERCEPTION OF GOD

The Egyptian word for God is NTR or Neter which is illustrated by the hieroglyph of an axe-head supported by a wooden handle, a strong and formidable weapon in skilled hands. The use of this sign as an emblem of God is probably very ancient and based on prehistoric man's belief that God was a mighty and formidable warrior, which conception they carried through even in their most sophisticated philosophies. While it is quite possible that the word means "strength" and "power, " other attributes are "renewal" or "renovation," as if the fundamental idea of God was one who had the power to perpetually renew itself and was self-creating. Above all else, the ancient Egyptians believed in one God, who was self-existent, immortal, eternal, and invisible--the Creator of heaven and earth. Their principal religious theology was based upon this belief and no matter how far back we trace its history, there is no time when this belief was not predominant. If examined closely, the gods are found to be nothing more than forms, manifestations, phases or attributes of the god Ra who was, in turn, the outward manifestation or symbol of the One God of whom it was not their custom to address.

UNDERSTANDING THE GODS OF EGYPT AND THEIR RELIGIOUS CONCEPTS

The word Neturu means "gods" and refers to beings which in some way partake of the nature or character of God. They were referred to as intermediaries between God and man, and the word has also been translated as "Those who from Heaven to Earth came." They are spoken of in the Bible as the Anakim, and in Chapter 6 of Genesis they are also called Nephilim, which in Hebrew means the same thing, "Those who have come down from the Heavens to Earth." Close examination of the following gods will give the reader an adequate conception of the Egyptian attitude regarding the multifaceted aspects of God and the religious concepts at the heart of the Egyptian Religion:

THE EFFECT OF EGYPTIAN THOUGHT AND THEOLOGY ON THE ANCIENT JEWS

The Jews, having come from Chaldea as a group of nomadic tribes under Abraham, moved down into Egypt during the time of the great famine, and the duration of their residence was a period of some 400 years. As a result of this residence, the religious and philosophical concepts which made up the heart of Egyptian culture were absorbed and woven into the framework of their belief system. It may be significant that this period coincides with the rule of a pharaoh named Akhnaton (believed by many scholars today to have been the Biblical Moses), who tried to introduce a religious revolution in Egyptian thought and practice. During his reign, he attempted to replace the traditional Egyptian gods by a form of monotheism based on the worship of the disc of the Sun which for him was the ideal representation of the Incorporeal/invisible Creator/Energy which we call God. It is interesting to speculate what interaction may have occurred between the Hebrews and the court of the pharaoh. It can be questioned whether this Egyptian monotheistic experience was the result of Jewish influence, as the story of Joseph implies, or whether it was Akhenaton's religion that played a positive role in bringing monotheism to the Jews. That is a valid question but if you study this for yourself you will see that the second scenario is the more correct.

The Laws of Moses were to a great extent derived from the laws of ancient Egypt. The early history of the Jews was influenced by an Egyptian religious background, not only by their residence within its borders but also under the guidance of Moses, who was well versed in Egyptian philosophy and theology. Upon close examination, the ancient doctrines of Egyptian religion can be easily discerned within the teachings of the Old and New Testaments.

THE MANY FACES....ATTRIBUTES OF GOD

The names the Egyptians applied to their gods (manifestations of the one true God) bear testimony to their conceptions of God, for these names represented some quality or attribute which they would have applied to Him. From the appellations by which the gods are known, in texts from all periods, it is seen that Egyptian concepts of God were almost identical with those of the Hebrews, Muhammadans and Christians of later periods.

When classified, some of these names can be read as:

- "God is One and alone, and none other existeth with Him…the One Who hath made all things."
- "God is life, and through Him only man liveth…He breatheth the breath of life into his nostrils."
- "God is a spirit, a hidden spirit...the Divine Spirit."
- "God existed when nothing else existed, and what existeth He created after He had come into being."
- "God is the eternal One...infinite; and endureth for ever and ever...He shall endure to all eternity."
- "God is the hidden being and no man hath known his form...He is a mystery unto His creatures."
- "His name remaineth hidden...His names are innumerable...and none knoweth their number."
- "God is truth, and He liveth by Truth...He resteth upon truth…"

For consideration, the following is presented:

- Ra as Almighty God, the Creator, but also the Invisible God (the Sun was only his symbol).
- Thoth as the Mind of God, the Wisdom of God and the Word.
- Isis as Aima Elohim, the Great Mother; as Mary, the Mother of God; and also the Love of God.
- Maat as the Truth of God and the Justice of God.
- Horus as the God of Battles or the Vengeful God.
- Osiris as God Made Manifest in the Mind of Man, the Son of God.
- The "Company of Gods" as the God of Hosts.

THE GODS BECAME ANGELS

The gods of Egypt, like the angels of biblical lore, can be broadly described as personified powers meditating between the Divine and the human. Even in its devotion to monotheism, ancient Israel was able to embrace the image of a council of gods by turning all of them into angels that serve the One God. This acceptance of a belief in angels was a development made relatively easy because lesser gods and angels could be referred to as "sons of God." This type of development naturally led to a kind of monotheism whereby all the many gods and goddesses would be seen, at least philosophically, as aspects of One God. Later development in both Judaism and Christianity shows a remarkable growth of angelic folklore as a result of continuing this ancient practice of absorbing the gods of polytheistic religions by turning them into angels.

Just as the gods of Egypt represented aspects of Ra, the angels of the Old and New Testaments likewise represent aspects of God.

- Tzaphqiel - Righteousness of God
- Raphael - Healer of God
- Michael - Perfection of God
- Khamael - Severity of God
- Haniel - Glory of God
- Gabriel - Strength of God

THE SOUL

The ancient Egyptians saw man as consisting of nine parts which could be simplified into the threefold division of man along the lines of Spirit, Soul and Body, which accords with the New Testament views of St. Paul, and can be summarized as follows:

- The body (Khat) and its double (Ka) constitute the physical part of man;
- the soul (Ba) was comprised of the mind and feelings which had its seat in the heart (Ab) with a vehicle of its own called the shadow (Khabit);
- the spirit (Khu) was the divine/immortal part of man which had its seat in the name (Ren) and a conceptual body (Sahu) which derives its manifestation from the power (Sekhem) which provided vitality for the lower vehicles.

Therefore, later Egyptian belief was that man had three parts--a body, soul and spirit. The soul and spirit of the righteous passed from the body and then resided for eternity in heaven, but the physical body did not rise again and was believed never to leave the tomb. As stated in the Vth dynasty, about 2400 BCE: "The soul to heaven; the body to earth."

Genesis 3:19: ...till you return to the ground, for out of it you were taken; for dust you are and to dust you shall return.

I Corinthians 15:40-53: There are also celestial bodies and terrestrial bodies, but the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestrial is another...However, the spirit is not first, but the natural and afterward the spiritual

…Now I say brethren that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God…for this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality…then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: "Death is swallowed up in victory."

John 3:6-7 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit if spirit. Do not marvel that I said to you, "You must be born again."

JUDGMENT AND THE AFTERLIFE

The gods that lived in the Hall of Judgment with Osiris were forty-two in number. As the deceased passed each, he addressed him by his name and declared that he had not committed a certain sin. After pronouncing the name of each god, the deceased always said, "I have not done…" and the whole group of addresses has been called the "Negative Confession." The fundamental ideas of religion and morality which underlie this confession are exceedingly old, and from it can be discerned the ancient Egyptians' duty toward God and neighbor. The following is the soul in the Hall of Judgment:

Homage to Thee, O great God, Lord of Maati! I have come to unto thee, O my Lord, and I have brought myself hither that I may behold thy beauties. I know thee, I know thy name. I know the names of the forty-two Gods who live with thee in the Hall of Maati...I have not committed sins against men...

For consideration, the following are some of the negative confessions compared with the Ten Commandments from The Second Book of Moses --Exodus: THIS IS ALL THE MORE IMPORTANT WHEN WE REMEMBER THE TEN COMMANDMENTS GIVEN TO US BY PHARAOH AKHENATON/MOSES WERE BETTER UNDERSTOOD AS "CATEGORIES" OF LAWS:

- Negative Confession: I have not uttered blasphemies against God. Commandment #3: You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain.

- Negative Confession: I have not opposed my family and kinfolk. Commandment #5: Honor your father and mother.
- Negative Confession: I have slain neither man nor woman. Commandment #6: You shall not murder.
- Negative Confession: I have not committed fornication. Commandment #7: You shall not commit adultery.
- Negative Confession: I have not committed theft. Commandment #8: You shall not steal.
- Negative Confession: I have not uttered falsehood. Commandment #9: You shall not bear false witness.
- Negative Confession: I have invaded no man's land. Commandment #10: You shall not covet your neighbor's house...nor anything that is your neighbor's.

Let us remember that on this Noahide website the exegesis of all of these "CATEGORIES" are given to the student which now we see really finds its true origin in Egyptian Religion; the first monotheistic religion of mankind. We are beginning to get a glimpse of how well the Egyptians knew God and their moral and ethical responsibilities to Him as well as others created in His image.

The belief that the deeds done while in the body would be subjected to analysis by the divine powers after death belongs to the earliest period of Egyptian civilization. All the evidence shows that each soul was judged individually and was either permitted to pass into the kingdom of Osiris or was destroyed. The Egyptian underworld, or Amentet, also contained a region where the souls of the wicked were punished for an indefinite period of time. It has been said that the judgment of the dead was determined, in the presence of Osiris, by weighing the deceased in the balance against his own heart. As Osiris weighed the heart of the dead, Maat, the goddess of Truth and Justice, balanced the scale. If the heart of the deceased weighed true, he went to his eternal reward in a blessed afterlife. If his heart weighed too heavy, he would be thrown to the animal gods who tore him to shreds. Consider the following:

Romans 14:10-12: ...For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ...so then each of us shall give account of himself to God.

2 Corinthians 5:10 For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that each one may receive the things done in the body according to what he has done whether good or bad.

I Peter 4:5 They will give an account to Him who is ready to judge the living and the dead.

Matthew 12:36, 37: A good man out of the good treasure of his heart brings forth good things and an evil man out of the evil treasure brings forth evil things. But I say to you that for every idle word men may speak, they will give account of it in the day of judgment.

2 Thessalonians 1:8-9: ...in flaming fire taking vengeance on those who do not know God...These shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power.

Matthew 26:46: And these [the unrighteous] will go away into everlasting punishment but the righteous into eternal life.

THE INESCAPABLE CONCLUSION FOR A THINKING BELIEVER

Upon much study of Jewish Roots I stumbled onto this harmony between the ancient Egyptian religion and that of Judaism and parts of Christianity. This literally took my breath away and from this understanding came the dawning and understanding as to the origin and evolution of all religions--the mind of man. Understand that there is big difference in observing the Parallels can be traced between one nations god and another's, and this is because perceptions of Divinity. As long as we stay with the Egyptian understanding that these "gods" and "goddesses" are but pictures of the various manifestations and aspects of the One God then we are in safe ground. However when personification of forces in the Cosmos and Heavens as well in Nature remain as allegory and methaphors describing the incorporealness of the Creator then we are safe from idolatry as we have seen in the articles concerning blasphemy previously on this website. But when these allegories and personifications of forces in the Heaven above and Nature become "literalized" and worship is attached to this "literalization" then we are swallowed by the sin of idolatry. This is the great Sin of Roman Catholicism and its daughter religion Protestantism with what they have done to the human Jesus by making him equal with God. Such are projections of man's own psychic needs but this never can justify idolatry. Humanity casts a reflection of itself onto the backdrop of the unknown and peoples it with the images of its own characteristics. What has been called religion, in the past and in the present, is simply the personifications of the mind's own conceiving and answers only to the desires of the humanity who dreamt it into being. While all religions contain within themselves the seeds of Truth, they are, nonetheless, only man's attempt to interpret the Mind of God.

Upon reflection of what I have written and with your understanding then you should now more clearly understand the role of Law as the manifestation of Whom God is and what God does and what God is not and what God does not do. If so then my effort to communicate these truths to you have been rewarded. Egypt got it right; Christianity sadly gets it wrong since it exists primarily as a "Lawless" faith. This is not what the historical Jesus believed. Jesus surely did not believe what Paul taught in Romans and what is expressed in much of this theology; that we are "not under the law, but under grace (Rom. 6:14).

The Laws of Noah and Moses and the whole Egyptian Divine Revelation correct Paul and Christian theology in this regard.

If you study Egyptian religion, all the more important now as you see the connection with the Mosaic Laws, then you will find that God was recognized by the ancients as the Creator of the Heavens, the Cosmos which includes the Sun, moon, stars, constellations and all that is above. In their understanding of it these Ancient Egyptians saw the sun rise and set which they interpreted as symbolic of God who created life. The Sun was for them only a picture of the true Creator and Lifegiver. They saw in the warmth of the Sun which arranged the seasons the gift of life; beginning with photosynthesis, warmth, light, and the unending cycles of this pattern they saw in this the Sun was but only the image of the God of all creation. The sun would rise and be born as it traveled across the sky. It would live its life and set which was for them a picture of death. Such cycle repeated itself and in this they saw life and death cycling only to be reborn. This was the cycle of God and it had an eternal message to them. God was speaking thought the Sun to them and revealing Himself to them through the Heavens. God was for them the God of birth, life, death, and rebirth. They saw the same cycle of birth, life, death, and rebirth in the Heavens over the years and applied it to other things in the heavens. The stars were born only to die as well. A shooting star was a perfect example. Also the rising and setting of stars on the horizon as they rose above it and set beneath it. This was the same message of birth, life, and death, and rebirth. This was the same message and the same cycle spoken over and over by the Creator over the centuries. There was a message from God the Creator in Heaven and these cycles followed patterns and LAWS. But it does not end here. These ancients saw that the Sun affected Nature. In mother Nature the ancients saw the same cycle and Pattern of Laws since it was likewise affected by the Heavens. The Sun brought the spring's new growth. They saw the emergence of new growth and vegetation in the Spring with the renewing warmth and the the early harvest. From this birth they saw that birth issued in life and growth as well in the later harvests which then was followed by the changing of the seasons with autumn and fall. The Solstices and Equinoxes spoke the same message with their impact upon Mother Nature. The cycle of Laws in the Heavens affected Mother Nature as well and the Pattern continues. The Laws of God continued. Life in the spring was followed by death in the winter which cycled again only to be reborn in the Spring. JUST LIKE THE SAME CYCLE IN THE HEAVENS WE SEE GOD WAS DOING AND SPEAKING THE SAME MESSAGE IN NATURE AS IN THE HEAVEN. Next the ancients noticed the SAME CYCLES AND LAWS OF GOD OPERATING IN THEIR OWN BODIES. The 28 day menses of the woman, like the cycle of the moon spoke to them this SAME ORDER which they had seen in the Heavens and in Nature. The 280 gestation of a baby they saw was the same as the time from the spring equinox to the winter solstice; counting 277 days later where the Sun stood still in the heavens in its southerly setting then only to rise northward again on the 280th day. They saw that this is like the birth of the Sun which spoke to them of new hope again of new life; for the coming life of spring which they found parallels to the birth of the child in this same time frame. Understand that in all these Laws and Cycles and Patterns the Egyptians saw a DIVINE ORDER manifested in these unchangeable LAWS.

These Seasons of Harvest were pictures of God speaking to mankind...that He is the God of ORDER ORDER IN THE HEAVENS...ORDER IN NATURE..ORDER IN MANKIND. The cycles taught the same lesson to all everywhere.....this was the simplest message given to man that God was the Creator of ORDER and man understood that in looking at these same Laws which he saw in the Heavens and Nature which were also operating in his own body that he was CREATED IN THE IMAGE OF GOD; THE IMAGE OF WHICH HE UNDERSTOOD AS ORDER OPERATED BY DIVINE LAW. Understanding that he was created in the image of the God of ORDER then man knew he was was to ORDER himself as God had ordered everything else.

Now we understand more clearly "be ye holy for I am holy.....be like the God you SEE above, around, and within you. We are to be like God and we do that through ordering our own universe and lives. This is the beauty of God and His message to us. This is not difficult to understand or comprehend; that man is to live by God's message or order and Law. This is not difficult theology and there is no man made religion here. The message of Eternal Life and moral responsibility to ORDER our lives by living the LAWS we see operating in the Heavens, in Earth, in our Bodies is the deepest message God ever sent mankind. Mankind has created a lot of theology that opposes this message of God we see here; only only has to look at Pauline Gnostic theology to see a perfect example of this. Change as we may try we can never alter God's voice to us we see and hear every morning, every day, every month, every year, ...ye who have ears to hear...hear what the Spirit of God is speaking to you about true Eternal Life and the responsibilities we have to share in it...to order our lives to the same Laws of ORDER that God is constantly speaking. The Egyptians understood this ORDER and LAWS and we find their example in their Negative Confessions above and the subsequent elaboration of them in Moses' Law Code today called the Torah. God's Torah is the blue print and the pathway to establishing this ORDER and His LAW in our lives and in this world. It is given to us by the Jewish people and protected by them today as well and finds it origin with the Egyptian religion of Moses. Let us learn while the light is shinning in our lives...let us learn the difference between the true message of God and the message of men who have taken these concepts and altered and tried to destroy them.

As a pastor I find it tragic that much of Christian theology has strayed so far from the simple revelation that the earliest Monotheists understood about the Creator. Egypt communicated this to their children the Jews which came into being through Egyptian intermarriage with Semites. Moses/Akhenaton took to the world the Laws of God he learned in Egypt and we are so privileged today to be able to hear them and learn from them when so many attempts have been made by mankind to eradicate this message. Alexander the Great conquered Egypt in the 4th century B.C.E. and Hellenized it and the culture and religion of Egypt was forever changed and altered. From this sad affair the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt will stray from this Divine Revelation and "literalize" these Divine concepts and out comes their "Angel Messiah" theology that a man is literally God and due worship and other Gnostic thoughts which find its culmination in Paul's Gnostic rejection of the Law. In place of man being able to make himself righteous before God by his repentance and renewed obedience to the Laws of God we have 2.5 billion Christians thinking that such does not matter but rely upon their standing before God on the erroneous teaching that they need only ascribe mentally to a theological concept about Jesus given to us by those who strayed from these Laws in first place. We may have lost the original Egyptian Revelation of God but it should give you pause to thank God right now that all the latter attempts to destroy and eradicate their Jewish children and their religion received from their Egyptian parents have failed. We are truly blessed today to have the ability to study and learn these truths for ourselves in light to Catholicism and its censoring of such truth for over 2000 yrs. Baruch Ha Shem!

TRACING THE HEBREW PHARAOHS OF EGYPT...WHO IS THIS KING DAVID?

It did not take me long in Seminary to figure out that the Bible is basically a historical work which had become distorted as a result of its long oral tradition which and also to some extent at the hands of Biblical editors who eventually set it down in writing. Because of this long oral tradition which was both "forgotten" and "altered" down through history we are deprived today of important and necessary truths and facts concerning the identities and events that shaped the beginning of the Jewish nation let alone the subsequent development of Christianity.

The more I studied the more convinced I became of the alteration of key facts concerning not only the Patriarchs but their true identities as well. The more I read of the finds of modern archeology in the last two hundred years the more convinced I became that the identity of major figures in Egyptian history were disguised and depicted as major Jewish figures in the Bible. This was deception at its highest level and I had to get to the bottom of it and it would be a challenging but yet a very rewarding study to say the least. Let me get your feet wet for what is to come in the forthcoming articles.

Out study will be begin with the examination of King David and progress until we are centered on the very important 18th dynasty of Egypt. At the end of the 18th dynasty (after Hatshepsut and 4 other pharaohs) there reigned a strange pharaoh named Amenophis IV, who later called himself Akhenaten. Amenhotep IV was a pharaoh so revolutionary, so radical that those following him had his name which he changed to Akhenaten and face deleted from the Egyptian records so completely that only 3000 years later did archaeology rediscover his new royal capital at Akhet-Aten (modern el-Amarna). The story of Akhenaten is all through the first five books in the Jewish-Christian Bible but due to revisionism we don't recognize him. He is the Biblical Moses and I will present evidence to show that this is a fact. This amazing and courageous Pharaoh worshipped only one god whom he called Aten (the sun disk), and founded a new capital, Akhet-Aten (Horizon of Aten), today called Tell el Amarna. This period is called the Amarna period in Egyptian history. Countless books have been written about Akhenaten but few have put together key pieces of Egyptian and Biblical History together correctly as I hope to reveal to the reader. Of course the point of such study is to see the unbelievable knowledge that Egypt possessed about the God of the Cosmos and their unique and deep understanding of this God and his workings in the Cosmos and its ultimate meaning for mankind. At the same time we will focus upon the efforts of Akhenaton, the Biblical Moses, to bring a religious revolution to bear on his nation who had at his time fallen into the deception of the worship of the "God-man" Osiris which is so similar to the same sin of idolatry which is attached to the worship of the Christian God-man Jesus Christ. The startling ramifications of such a deception, both back then and now, will become evident the more we study. At the crux of this whole study is the growing understanding and revelation that if Moses, the Egyptian Akhenaton, lived today he would oppose such worship of the post-Nicean "God-man" Jesus created by Rome.

It did not take me long to recognize the more I studied Egyptian history and religion that there exists a unique link and relationship between Akhenaten's monotheism and Jewish monotheism that does not exist in Christianity. There had to be a link between the two and my efforts at continued in-depth study revealed to me in time this very important connection between the Egyptian Pharaohs and the Biblical Patriarchs and later Jewish leaders like King David and King Solomon which we will examine in these next articles.

Answer for yourself: Just what is this link and are major players and Pharaohs in Egyptian history depicted in our Christian Bibles under different names like King David, Solomon, etc? Could it be that Moses was a Pharaoh himself and what if any is the link with Joseph whom was sold into slavery and ended up in Egypt where he married the daughter of the Priest of On (Heliopolis)?

What we will find in examining Egyptian history and religion is that most have missed this link connecting major figures in the Bible with these major figures in Egyptian history. The error to which most has fallen is that they approach such studies trying to fit Egyptian history into the Bible rather than, as common sense would suggest, fit the Bible into Egyptian history. You need to stop and read that sentence once again. What we find upon study is that acceptance of the wrong date for the two dates given in the Old Testament for the length of the Israelite Sojourn in Egypt, four hundred years instead of four generations, will cause us to place incorrectly the events depicted in the Bible at the wrong time and the wrong place. For example this incorrect dating explains why there is no evidence for the Exodus at the time that traditional scholarship looks for Biblical Exodus. It simply occurred at a different time and a different place in Egyptian history and our failure to recognize this leaves us looking for evidence of its occurrence at the wrong time in the timeline of Biblical history. Truly this is a fascinating study to say the least and obtaining the knowledge long lost to this world concerning not only Egypt and their religion but the true identities of King David, Solomon, Moses, etc., as well as what they believed about God has important ramifications upon the Christian faith and their understanding of basic tenants of their faith let alone the "Messiah" today. It is to these issues we now turn as we begin our study with King David of the Bible. Get ready for your world to be rocked.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered how we stumbled onto this knowledge of the existence of the Hebrew Pharaohs of Egypt? I suggest that we read this information before we continue out study into King David.

RECOVERING THE TRUE IDENTITY OF KING DAVID AND OTHER KEY BIBLICAL FIGURES...WERE THEY OBSCURED BY MISLEADING TEXTS?

Little did I ever think when beginning the study of the "Jewish Roots" of Christianity in the 1980's that I would find myself baptized in Egyptian religion but all roads seemed to lead there as my studies into discovering a "Jewish Jesus" expanded. Behind the Jewish people I first discovered this very important link with Egypt which goes concealed in the Hebrew Old Testament to all but a few with a discerning eye when reading the texts and studying the Jewish connection with Egypt. As I grew in my studies of the original Biblical languages as well as my growth in archeology and Jewish history Egypt kept recurring over and over again in my studies. Soon I found repeatedly references in my readings that began to link very important Biblical messianic figures like King David with Egypt and the dynasties of Pharaohs. At first I was bewildered for I thought that unlike the New Testament the texts of the Old Testament were relatively free from tampering as I had found extensively in the New Testament. But that was not the case as I was to discover as my studies continued to develop. Before we begin to look at the Biblical King David and find his true identity some things need to be said about how we lost this information about Thutmose III (King David) in the first place.

LOOKING AT THE TRANSMISSION OF THE BIBLICAL TEXTS & THE LOSS OF THE TRUTH

I was to find in my studies that the sacred books that make up the anthology modern scholars call the Hebrew Bible - and Christians call the Old Testament - developed over roughly a millennium; the oldest texts appear to come from the eleventh or tenth centuries BCE. The Hebrew Bible, written over a period of more than 500 years, consists of many types of literature and reflects varying points of view. The Bible has undergone substantial changes with regard to its early manuscripts and their translated versions. This Book is a collection of various materials and the worst part is the crude 'editing' where the joints are much in evidence. Gathering and the codification, giving the final written form, of the Books of the Bible took centuries. It uses descriptive methods. Its language is abstract, very rich in images. The smallest or shortest of reports turns into a story in the Bible, full of puzzling descriptions whose ambiguity is intentional. There's no getting away from the fact that the Bible is a very human book. It was not written by God, it was not edited by God, it was not translated by God. In the beginning it wasn't written down at all. Most parts of the Bible started life as sayings or stories that were handed down from generation to generation as part of an oral tradition and doubtless became altered, adulterated, and embellished in the process. Eventually they got written down, which tended to fix them a bit more, but before the invention of printing they were handed on by being copied out, and inevitably mistakes were made. And when they were translated from the original Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek, they suffered still further alteration because translation can never be exact. Yet the Bible is essentially a religious book, but, unlike most ancient religious books, the Old Testament is characterized by a strong sense of history; even laws and exhortations are woven into the narratives.

The Pentateuch is also called the Torah, or Law, and seems to have reached its current form with Ezra - in the books of Nehemiah and Ezra a rough summary can be seen which matches the Torah as it is now. An interesting clue as to how the current Torah came about is revealed by an episode in the time of Ezra. In the book of Nehemiah Ezra is described as reading the Law to the people. Verses 13 - 18 tell of the first celebration of the "Festival of Booths", or Sukkoth, which is described as not being celebrated like so since the days of Joshua, assistant and successor of Moses. Apparently the festival had been added, and it is not unreasonable to imagine that adding other things were both "added", "deleted", and "concealed" as well as "manufactured" over time.

Answer for yourself: Why would the priests and scribes do this? Simply said "agendas". As intimated previously the war between Persia and Egypt had a strong influence upon Ezra in shaping the texts which would later become the history of the Jewish people and in so doing we see today the true identities of the Patriarchs concealed. We have to face the facts that the Old Testament, as well as the New Testament, are are edited works, collections of various sources intricately and artistically woven together.

The five books of Pentateuch (Genesis-Deuteronomy), for example, traditionally are ascribed to Moses. But by the eighteenth century, many European scholars noticed problems with that assumption. Not only does Deuteronomy end with an account of Moses' death (a tough assignment for any writer to describe his or her own demise), but the entire Pentateuch shows anomalies of style that are hard to explain if only one author is involved.

By the nineteenth century, most scholars agreed that the Pentateuch consisted of four sources woven together. This notion of four sources came to be known as the Documentary Hypothesis (J, E, P, D) and, in various forms, it has been the prevailing theory for the past two hundred years. Israel thus created four independent strains of literature about its own origins, all drawing on oral tradition in varying degrees, and each developed over time. They were combined together to form our Pentateuch sometime in the sixth century B.C.E. by Ezra and his successors.

By this time, many of the other biblical books were coming together. Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings form what scholars call a "Deuteronomistic History" (because the work's theology is heavily influenced by Deuteronomy), a history of the Israelite states over a five-hundred-year period. This work contains much of historical value, but it also operates on the basis of a historical and theological theory: i.e., that God has given Israel its land, that Israel periodically sins, suffers punishment, repents, and then is rescued from foreign invasion. This cycle of sin and redemption shapes the work's way of writing history and gives it a powerful religious dimension, so that even when the sources behind the biblical books are "secular" accounts in which God is far in the background, the theology of the overall work places history in the service of theology. In other words history is altered to serve the purpose of created theology. The last edition of the Deuteronomistic History, the one in our Bible, comes from the sixth century BCE, the time of the Babylonian Exile. In this context, it offers an explanation for Israel's poor condition and implicitly a reason to hope for the future.

In addition to the prophets, the Hebrew Bible contains what Jews often call the "Writings," or the Hagiographa, hymns and philosophical discourses, love poems and charming tales. These include Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes (or Qoheleth), Song of Songs, Esther, Daniel, Ezra-Nehemiah, and Chronicles. These books were the last completed and the last to be received as Scripture, although parts of them may be very ancient indeed. The books of Psalms, for instance, contains many hymns from Israelite temple worship from the monarchic period, i.e., before the Babylonian Exile in the sixth century BCE; songs such as Psalm 29 may be borrowed from the Canaanites, while Psalm 104 closely resembles Egyptian hymns. In its current form, the 150 psalms fall into five "books," modeled on the five books of the Pentateuch.

Israel did not exist in political, religious, or intellectual isolation from its geographical neighbors. Intellectual and even direct literary contact is nowhere more evident than in Israel's book of Proverbs. William Kelly Simpson, in his The Literature of Ancient Egypt: An Anthology of Stories, Instructions, and Poetry, as well as man other scholars teach us that the book of Proverbs looks a great deal like the instruction literature that has survived from ancient Egypt. The commonality of the book of Proverbs with Egyptian instruction literature suggests that it may have been the court wisdom that was used to train the next generation of Israel's leaders for effective public service. The Instruction of Amenhotep has the most direct bearing on the book of Proverbs. Written in thirty chapters and probably dating to 1200 B.C.E., it has close parallels to many verses in Proverbs 22:17-24:22. Thus we find that Proverbs also has many old parts, including one apparently translated from the second-millennium BCE Egyptian text the "Instructions of Amenhotep" which we find in Proverbs 22. Bryce, in his A Legacy of Wisdom: The Egyptian Contribution to the Wisdom of Israel, 1979, has done a thorough study of parallels between biblical and Egyptian wisdom literature. He notes that there are varying degrees of dependence, from direct literary borrowing to "thought" borrowing; the latter is barely recognizable in the Hebrew Bible because it has been so seamlessly integrated over time and through redaction. Although there are differences in wording, proverbial parallels with Egyptian Instruction sayings seem quite close here in Proverbs. This he states is the evidence of direct literary borrowing from earlier existing Egyptian wisdom.

Answer for yourself: What have we learned so far? Simply that the Hebrew Old Testament was "put together" from many different streams of thought and traditions somewhere around the 6th century B.C.E. and that the name of Egypt keeps coming up repeatedly.

Richard Elliott Friedman, in his masterful book Who Wrote the Bible? teaches us, as do other scholars, that Ezra, in the end, was the one who created this synthesized work that we call the Old Testament which the Jewish nation and Christians have read all these years. In this book Friedman shows the reader how the Jewish scriptures are the product of traditions of oral transmission and eventual scribal transmission which were handed down over hundreds and hundreds of years if not longer.

Answer for yourself: Is it likely that oral transmission of tales and stories change or information can become lost the longer oral transmissions are handed down over chronological history? That is not a hard question when you think about it.

Over centuries, myths, legends, hymns and other literary forms were passed down orally from generation to generation from the time of the Egyptian sojourn, Babylon captivity, and the Persian repatriation of the captured Jewish nation. Only much later following the Persian defeat of Babylon and the repatriation of the Jewish nation did Ezra reconstruct or should I say "create" the Old Testament as the "assumed" history of the Jewish people.

Much of the earlier history of the origin and emergence of the Jewish people from their Sojourn in Egypt was lost or forgotten. The apocryphal writing tells how Ezra dictated all the writings which had been lost in the destruction of Jerusalem during and following the Babylonian war. A. Soggin, in his Introduction to the Old Testament published in London in 1989 states on page 13-14 that the traditions given by Ezra "do not seem to have any historical foundation".

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that much of the historical information in the Old Testament is not accurate to the findings of archeology and much is out of historical chronological sequence? Well it is and no greater example can be found than when dealing with Egyptian history and Egyptian references in the Old Testament as we will come to see. Remember that Ezra is behind this synthesis of oral traditions that become the written texts and the "official history" of the Jewish people after returning from the Persian captivity. Having no Torahs in captivity and with Ezra "writing" the past history of this new emerging nation of Jews being returned to their homeland it is not far fetched to see how and why Ezra would create a history for these Jews which is not truthful nor accurate to the facts that archeology has provided us today.

A. Soggin is not the only author nor source that reveals that the production of Ezra in drafting the Old Testament has within it many historical inaccuracies regarding the identity and origin for the Jewish nation which was returned to Israel by Persia following the Persian defeat of the Babylonian nation. One could go so far as to say many of these tradition given these returning Jewish captives were "made up" and this is where Ezra comes in as the Egyptian roots of the Jewish Nation is purposefully omitted and concealed by the work of Ezra and instead of identifying correctly the Pharaohs of Egypt they were purposefully characterized as Jews in giving the returning Jews a "false history" of their past which they remembered not. There are reasons why Ezra would conceal the Hebrew-Egyptian link that we have already discussed above. There is reason to believe that Ezra had an official position at the Persian Court and functioned as a commissioner for the affairs of the Jewish minority within Persia. At any rate, he was able to obtain palace sponsorship and aid for a trip to Jerusalem in 458 BC, some 57 years after the completion of the Temple. The reason for the trip was to restore strict religious observance and revive the national identity of the repatriated, which had declined since the original return and this was done under the watchful eyes of Persia and this explains why Judaism has so much Persian apocalypticism within it. The war between Persia and Egypt explains also why the true identity of the "parent" of these returning Jews were misidentified when Ezra rewrote the Old Testament since Persia certainly did not desire that these returning Jews learn that at Persia was almost at war with "their biological parents". Cyrus the Great of Persia frees the captive Jews from Babylonia 539 B.C. and finally conquers Egypt, the biological parents of this returning nation, in 525 B.C. some mere 14 years later. Also if you had not already guessed it these Jews of the Bible had "black skin" as did their Egyptian parents. If Persia was to hope for the friendship and loyalty of these returning Jews let alone allow them to function as an "outpost" half-way between Persian and Egypt and thereby be a warning of any impending Egyptian retaliation then it was necessary to conceal the true identity of these black skinned Jews as children of Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Did the war with Egypt play a role in Ezra's misidentification of key Biblical characters like David and Solomon let alone Abraham and Jacob? Well considering the above it does not take a rocket scientist to figure that one out.

Eventually these "traditions", both true and untrue, were recorded in early scribal forms and were revised over time while at the same time combined with other texts and edited in a process called redaction. The Jewish scriptures, the product of many different theological positions contending over many centuries since their origin in Egypt were later recorded, edited, combined and redacted in the form that we have them today during a process that took many centuries to form. Although some believers hold the Old Testament to be a seamless, monolithic text, historical-critical methods developed by modern scholarship and the findings of archeology in the last 200 years proves them as representing many different perspectives on God and Israel's relationship with God when filtered primarily through the Egyptian, Babylonian, and Persian religious systems. So the bottom line is that not everything in it is "true" which can be said of the New Testament as well. Let us never forget that men with agenda write books and not God.

THE TRUE IDENTITY OF KING DAVID OF THE BIBLE

Answer for yourself: How much do you presently know concerning the Pharaoh Tuthmose III and the other Amarna Pharaohs? Well if you are like most then you know very little if anything at all.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever compared the accounts in the Bible of David and his wars and military battles described in the Tanakh with the exploits of Amenhotep III's great grandfather, the 18th Dynasty Pharaoh Thutmose III as they were written on the stone walls on the Temple of Karnak in Thebes?

Answer for yourself: Do you know what you find when you do? You find that not only are their achievements equivalent and identical but so are their very names as well!

I will try to present evidence showing that the Pharaoh Thutmose III is the King David we find depicted in the Old Testament. Thutmose is an Egyptian compound name comprised of "Thut" (from Thoth, the Egyptian god of wisdom) and "mose" (an Egyptian title or suffix indicating son or rightful heir).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in the ancient Egyptian language, like the later Hebrew language, words were written without vowels? Should we not expect knowing this that the Hebrew language was a later development similar to the Egyptian language if the Jews were the offspring of the Egyptians? It sure would seem so and writers like Godfrey Higgins in his Anacalypsis proves the point as do many other scholars today.

The first element of the famous Pharaoh Tuthmose III was always written as "twt", i.e. with 3 consonants. For some mischievous reasons the middle consonant letter was changed to the vowel "u" by some Egyptologists. When "Twt" was written, in the equivalent Hebrew alphabetical characters, it becomes "Dwd". When "Dwd" is pronounced phonetically it becomes "Dawood" which the Hebrew name for "DAVID" (Moustafa Gadalla, Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, p. 147.

Answer for yourself: Is this but a coincidence? Is there the remotest chance that the Egyptian warrior Pharaoh King was the Biblical warrior King David who was better know as the historical Tuthmose III? Is the Biblical account historically without merit?

"Thut", in Egyptian, was, therefore, written as "Twt". The ancient Hebrew language, although very different from Egyptian, originally derived its written structure from the Egyptian language (Cross, "Origins of the Alphabet" in Ebla to Damascus: Art and Archaeology of Ancient Syria, 271-278.) As with Egyptian, the consonants were written and the vowels were vocalized only.

Answer for yourself: Can you guess what you get when you transliterate the Egyptian word "twt" into Hebrew? Let me give you a hint. The name begins with a "D".

Because of their similar alphabets, you end up with "dvd". If you add the vowels necessary for pronunciation in Hebrew you get David! (Cross, "Origins of the Alphabet" in Ebla to Damascus: Art and Archaeology of Ancient Syria, p. 88).

Now let us look at one event recorded and attributed to King David.

2 Sam 8:5-6 5 And when the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men. 6 Then David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. And the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the same things are said of Thutmose III in prior Egyptian history where it is recorded on stone monuments that Thutmose III defeated an earlier coalition of Syrian and Canaanite kings as described in the Bible and attributed to King David? Are you aware that it is told in Egyptian stone and history that Thutmose III also established garrisons in these same regions in order to permanently secure Egyptian control there? Is this proof that these two men are the same? (Cross, "Origins of the Alphabet" in Ebla to Damascus: Art and Archaeology of Ancient Syria, p. 106, 119).

Answer for yourself: Is this name similarity and identical events described above connected to both Thutmose III and King David just a coincidence? Well this is not enough evidence for me yet to make such a certain identity between King David and Thuthmose III so we keep studying so we can be certain. More evidence to connect the two as identical personages is easily located when one knows to look.

It is a historical fact that at the beginning of the Egyptian 17th Dynasty that much of Egypt was still being dominated by foreign rulers known as the Hyksos. The Hyksos were an important influence on Egyptian history, particularly at the beginning of the Second Intermediate Period. Most of what we know of the nature of the Hyksos depends upon written sources (of the Egyptians), such as the Rhind Papyrus. Also of considerable importance is the systematic excavation of the capital of the Hyksos, Avaris (Tell el-Dab'a). Today the term Hyksos has come to refer to the whole of these people who ruled Egypt during the Second Intermediate Period of Egypt's ancient history, and had to be driven out of the land by the last ruler of the 17th Dynasty and the earliest ruler of Egypt's New Kingdom. Through the initiative of the early Pharaohs of the 17th Dynasty, the Hyksos were attacked and eventually driven out of Egypt during the reign of Ahmose I. Ahmose and his son Amenhotep I extended their campaigns into Asia, "principally to deter any fresh incursions by roving bands into the Eastern Delta [of Egypt]" (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 121). The Hyksos were basically a Semitic people who were able to wrestle control of Egypt from the early Second Intermediate rulers of the 13th Dynasty, inaugurating the 15th Dynasty. The basic population of Egyptians allowed, from time to time, a new influx of settlers, first from the region of Lebanon and Syria, and subsequently from Palestine and Cyprus. The leaders of these people eventually married into the local Egyptian families (like Joseph?), a theory that is somewhat supported by preliminary studies of human remains at Tell el-Dab'a.

Answer for yourself: Does this remind you of Joseph who married the Egyptian priest's daughter and had children from the mixed marriage of a Semite and Egyptian (Ephraim and Manasseh)?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this Hyksos were called "Shepherd Kings? Is this the reason possibly that the Old Testament attests that Joseph warned his family when entering Egypt to not mention this fact?

Gen 46:31-34 31 And Joseph said unto his brethren, and unto his father's house, I will go up, and shew Pharaoh, and say unto him, My brethren, and my father's house, which were in the land of Canaan, are come unto me; 32 And the men are shepherds, for their trade hath been to feed cattle; and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that they have. 33 And it shall come to pass, when Pharaoh shall call you, and shall say, What is your occupation? 34 That ye shall say, Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle from our youth even until now, both we, and also our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen; for every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: As you can see Joseph did not want the Pharaoh to know that his people and family were "shepherds". Is this a veiled reference to the Hyksos from Palestine?

Parallels for the foreign traits of the Hyksos at Tell el-Dab'a/Avaris (capital of the Hyksos) have been found at southern Palestinian sites such as Tell el-Ajjul, at the Syrian site of Ebla and at Byblos in modern Labanon. By about 1720 BC, the Hyksos had grown strong enough, at the expense of the Middle Kingdom kings, to gain control of Avaris in the northeastern Delta. This site eventually became the capital of the Hyksos kings, but within 50 years, they had also managed to take control of the important Egyptian city of Memphis.

Manetho, and Egyptian Priest-Scribe records in his Aegyptiaca., frag. 42, 1.75-79.2:

- Then," he says, "the kings of Thebes and the other parts of Egypt rose against the shepherds, and a long and terrible war was fought between them." He says further, "By a king, named Alisphragmuthosis, the shepherds were subdued, and were driven out of the most parts of Egypt and shut up in a place named Avaris, measuring ten thousand acres." Manetho says, "The shepherds had built a wall surrounding this city, which was large and strong, in order to keep all their possessions and plunder in a place of strength.
- Tethmosis, son of Alisphragmuthosis, attempted to take the city by force and by siege with four hundred and eighty thousand men surrounding it. But he despaired of taking the place by siege, and concluded a treaty with them, that they should leave Egypt, and go, without any harm coming to them, wherever they wished. After the conclusion of the treaty they left with their families and chattels, not fewer than two hundred and forty thousand people, and crossed the desert into Syria. Fearing the Assyrians, who dominated over Asia at that time, they built a city in the country which we now call Judea. It was large enough to contain this great number of men and was called Jerusalem.

Answer for yourself: What was the city the fleeing Hyksos built in Palestine? It was Jerusalem. Were these Hyksos related to the Semitic Hebrews? Wow.

Now back to our study of King David.

When Amenhotep I died without a male heir, he was succeeded by the commander of the army who became Pharaoh Thutmose I. Inspired by previous successes, Thutmose I, now as Pharaoh, led his army into Canaan and Syria and crossed the Euphrates River at the Carchemish. After routing Mitanni forces, he set up a monument (stele) to his achievement on the north side of the Euphrates. The heiress daughter of Thutmose I, Hatshepsut was married to her step-brother Thutmose II who became Pharaoh. Thutmose II and Hatshepsut had no surviving sons. After the death of Thutmose II, his young son Thutmose III (by a minor concubine-wife Isis who was possibly of foreign birth) was denied the throne by Hatshepsut who had been married to Thutmose II of full Egyptian blood. Thutmose III, being the offspring of a mixed marriage, was not entitled to the throne. Hatshepsut continued to rule even after Thutmose III had clearly come of age (Diop, The African Origin of Civilization, p. 12). So we find in the final analysis that Tuthmose III, the son of a concubine, came to the throne of Egypt as the fifth ruler of the 18 Dynasty in odd circumstances. The dynasty has been founded nearly a hundred years earlier when, after just over a century rule by the invading Hyksos shepherds, the princes of Thebes united in the 16th century B.C. in a successful attempt to drive them out of Egypt, and Ahmosis was crowned as the dynasty's first ruler (1575-1550 B.C.E.). As we saw shortly before the death of Tuthmose II, Hatshepsut have birth to a daughter, Neferure. The normal method of ensuring the right of Tuthmose III (born of the concubine Isis) to inherit the throne would have been marriage to Neferure, his half-sister, who was the heiress. This marriage never took place between Tuthmose III (David) and Neferure. We only know that Hatshepsut continued to insist that Neferure was the only legal heir and her daughter was called "the Lady of the Two Lands, mistress of Upper and Lower Egypt". In these circumstances, Tuthmose II had to have his son adopted by the State god Amun in order to ensure his right to the throne which reminds us of the passage in Psalm 2 which is said of King David:

Ps 2:7 7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. (KJV)

This makes all the sense since Tuthmose III was only of half royal blood and since Egypt was a matriarchal society the throne and rulership came through the wife thus the marriage of their sisters. This brings many questions to our mind at once. Thuthmose III was not recognized as King-Pharaoh during the time of the rule of Hatshepsut, the wife of Thuthmose II.

If we follow the life of King David we find the same scenario of rejection of David as we find with Tuthmose III.

Upon Saul's death, David went to Hebron where he was anointed as king of Judah, according to The Lord's instructions, at about age 30 (2 Samuel 2:1-4). A seven and a half year civil war followed between the forces that supported David, and those that did not recognize David's right to the kingship and throne who supported Ish-bosheth, Saul's only surviving son, for the kingship of all Israel. The military and political situation grew steadily in favor of David however, and when Ish-bosheth was assassinated, David was anointed king over all Israel (2 Samuel 4:1-12, 5:1-5).

Answer for yourself: Does this account above concerning Tuthmose III remind you of the account in the Old Testament when all of Israel would not accept David as their King and only David's military might finally persuaded the total nation to acknowledge him as King as did the military successes of Tuthmose III which persuaded Egypt to acknowledge him as Pharaoh?

When the male blood line of the founding dynasty ended at the death of Amenhotep I, an even greater emphasis was thereafter placed on preservation of the female blood line which by this time had already distinguished itself and wielded considerable power. Ahhotep I had become an interim ruler upon the death of her husband Ahmose I and was immortalized for rallying Egypt's forces against the Hyksos. Her daughter Ahmose-Nefertari was given the title, High Priestess of Amun, and was the first to be designated as the "God's Wife" (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 139-140). It is important for us to know that the royal offspring of 18th Dynasty Pharaohs were considered to have been conceived through Divine visitation of the state god Amun with the "God's Wife" (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 139). This concept is clearly demonstrated by large murals in the mortuary temples of both Hatshepsut and Amenhotep III. Ahmose-Nefertari was, according to the famous turn of the century archeologist Flinders Petrie, "the most venerated figure of Egyptian History" (Petrie, A History of Egypt During the XVIIth and XVIIIth Dynasties, p. 41).

Upon Hatshepsut's death, the succession of Thutmose III was complicated not only by his own insufficiency of royal blood, but by the fact that Hatshepsut's daughter Neferure (and holder of the titles "Gods Wife" and virgin High Priestess of Amun) was also no longer living. He could not "marry" into the throne of Egypt as did all other male heirs. The nubile princess who could claim the strongest relation to Ahhotep I and Nefertari was found to be Merit-re, the daughter of Huy, the Superior of the Royal Harem. Thutmose III was married to Merit-ra, and in an official ceremony confirmed as Pharaoh and "adopted" as the son of Amun (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 70, 141; and Ahmed Osman, House of the Messiah, 110-111).

Answer for yourself: Could this be reference found in Psalm 2:7 as mentioned above?

Ps 2:7 7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. (KJV)

The word "begotten", "yalad" in Hebrew, carries with it the meaning of "to declare one's birth or pedigree". Having not married the daughter of a Pharaoh and not possessing a full-blood lineage it was necessary for Thutmose III to be "adopted" and in so doing inheriting the necessary pedigree from Amun as his "adopted son".

Like King David Thutmose III is remembered for his great military conquests which helped persuade others to accept his as their Pharaoh (leader). It is recorded that the God/Amun and Father of Thutmose III's spoke of him, "I grant thee by decree the earth in its length and breadth. The tribes of the East and those of the West ... that thy conquests may embrace all lands ... I ordain that all aggressors arising against thee shall fail..." (Maspero, The Struggle of the Nations, 267-268; Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 141).

Answer for yourself: Should we not expect to see a similar pronouncement over King David in the Tanakh? We should and we do find one.

Answer for yourself: Does this not remind you of what is also said of King David in Psalm 2?

Ps 2:1-12 1 Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? 2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against his anointed, saying, 3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. 4 He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision. 5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. 6 Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. 7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. 8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. 9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. 10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. 11 Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling. 12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him. (KJV)

As you can see Psalm 2 is in essence the very same pronouncement made by God over Thutmose III. Again this is further proof that these two men are identical. The evidence keeps mounting and the laws of statistics are teaching us that we have moved beyond just a coincidence in these comparisons.

Hatshepsut's daughter Neferure was the real heiress and heir but she suddenly died when 16 years old and from this point on Thutmose III gained increasing importance. The chance for Tuthmose III to rule Egypt on his own came in the middle of the 22 year of his co-regency with Hatshepsut when Hatshepsut, the wife of Thutmose II dies.

Answer for yourself: Should we not expect that Thutmose III would respond in such a manner to engender the people toward himself and gain their support through military conquest? We should and we do find that he does just that which reminds us of the exploits of King David. It seemed his first task he undertook was to deface many of the monuments erected to his aunt-stepmother: her reliefs were hacked out, her inscriptions erased, her cartouches obliterated, her obelisks walled up. Tuthmose III was not the legal descendant of the earlier Ahmosside dynasty. So now, technically speaking, as he was not the son of of the Egyptian Queen, nor had he married the heiress to inherit the throne, he had going for him that he had been chosen and adopted to to rule by the State god Amun. This is reminiscent again of Samuel, the prophet of God, and his choice of David to rule in place of Saul who was later to die and leave the throne vacant for David to fill. From now until the end of the Amarna rule in Egypt - the rule of Akhenaten, Semenkhkare, Tutankhamun, and Aye - it was the dynasty founded by Tuthmose III that sat on the throne of Egypt.

The long frustrated Thutmose III was eager to prove himself, and upon becoming Pharaoh his first act was to march out with the military. In anticipation, a formidable confederation of Canaanite and Syrian kings had already consolidated their own armies and were waiting in their camps when Thutmose III arrived in Canaan with his own. Using a risky strategic maneuver, Thutmose III divided the opposing confederation and conquered them at the original epic battle of the Valley of Armageddon (Har-Megiddon) (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 115; and Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 121).

- Tuthmose III splits his army and defeats the divided forces of Qadesh near Megiddo. The kings flee and seek refuge behind the gates of their fortress. After seven months of siege, Tuthmose III rejoins his army from a fortress to the east and leads it in the capture of Megiddo.
- David splits his army and defeats the allies of the Amonites in open field. The Amonites flee and seek refuge behind the gates of their city. After the Israelites lay siege to Rabbah (II Samuel 11:1) David rejoins his army from Jerusalem and leads it in the capture of Rabbah.

The battles of Tuthmose III were recorded on the inside walls surrounding the granite sanctuary at Karnak. This was the Egyptian bible of sorts. These events were recorded at Karnak because Tuthmose's army marched under the banner of the god, Amun, and Amun's temples and estates would largely be the beneficiary of the spoils of Tuthmose's wars. From inscriptions left on walls of the temples we find that Tuthmose started to have troubles from Prince Kadesh of Palestine (Jerusalem) and Syria. He of course due to his vast military training had to deal with all those things. Thutmose immediately set out with his army and crossing the Sinai desert he marched to the city of Gaza, which had remained loyal to Egypt. The events of the campaign are well documented because they are engraved onto the walls of the temple of Karnak. While the nearby fortress of Megiddo was under a seven month long siege, Thutmose III led a contingent of men to Kadesh (the present day site of Jerusalem), and as the Bible describes, he "took the stronghold of Zion."(Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 105). It is recorded that Tuthmose III took up residence in Jerusalem during the prolonged siege of Megiddo (Osman, House of the Messiah, 114, quoting from Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 236).

Answer for yourself: Does this remotely sound like the account of King David in the Old Testament? Well lets see.

The second Book of Samuel describes the taking of Jerusalem as a military operation carried out by the tribal David:

2 Sam 5:7 7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion: the same is the city of David. (KJV)

The account in II Samuel goes on to indicate that the city was taken by David's men penetrating the fortress through a water shaft (gutter):

2 Sam 5:8 8 And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house. (KJV)

However, the evidence makes it clear that the operation was actually a peaceful one, carried out by Tuthmose III, the historical King David, five centuries earlier.

Kadesh (Jerusalem) was the first of over one hundred cities listed as having been conquered by Thutmose III in his Asiatic campaign as recorded on the walls of stone in the temple of Amun at Karnak (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.131-132.)

Answer for yourself: Is it just a coincidence that the same battles that we find in the Old Testament are recorded exactly on the wall of the Temple of Karnak but attributed to Tuthmose III? Jerusalem (Kadesh) immediately precedes the city of Megiddo on the list of conquered cites by Tuthmose III. The more famous city of Kadesh in Syria, and the center of the Syrian-Canaanite opposition of that time, is known to have fallen to Thutmose III in a later military campaign.

The name Jerusalem does not show up on any of the lists of cities conquered during any Egyptian 18th Dynasty military campaign in Asia, however, it was unquestionably part of the Egyptian empire of that time. A diplomatic letter sent to a later Egyptian Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty was addressed from "mat Urusalim," i.e., "the land of Jerusalem." Another letter from the governor of Jerusalem during the 18th Dynasty refers to Jerusalem as a city "in which the king [i.e., the Pharaoh] has set his name" (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 270).

I Kings 11:36 36 And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light always before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen me to put my name there. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this to be believed as just another coincidence?

According to Manetho's 3rd Century B.C. History of Egypt as quoted by Josephus, Jerusalem was being ruled at this time by the Hyksos who had been expelled from Egypt by Ahmose I. It is not surprising that they readily resubmitted themselves to Thutmose III since we saw the link to these Tuthmose Pharaoh's and Joseph!

The name of Jerusalem which literally means "to establish peace or submission" certainly symbolized the role that it played in establishing and maintaining Egyptian control over Palestine during the 18th Dynasty (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 133). Both names are found in Chapter 11 of Nehemiah where the Hebrew reads as "Yurushalayim ha Qudesh," meaning, "Jerusalem the Holy City" (Osman, House of the Messiah, 132). The capture of Jerusalem/Kadesh by Thutmose III also resolves the formerly unknown source of the name Zion.

Answer for yourself: Can you guess how?

Zion consists of the components:

- On (Hebrew for the holy city of On/Heliopolis in Egypt) and
- The Hebrew word zi (meaning arid place...or desert city).

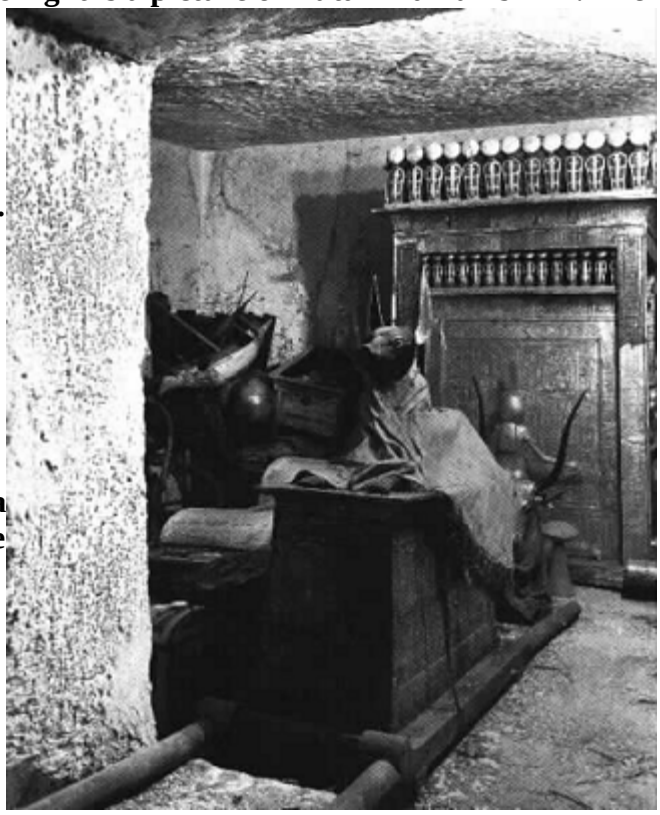
Literally translated, Zion appropriately becomes "Holy City of the Desert."(Ibid., p. 129)

Answer for yourself: Did you think of Egypt when you read "the holy city of the Desert"? Did you ever have the wildest notion that the word Zion referred to one of the major religious centers in Egypt? Of greater influence than Memphis in Egyptian religious life was the older city, Heliopolis, in which was developed the solar cult that eventually dominated the land. Never politically pre-eminent in historic times, Heliopolis was yet the spiritual heart of Egypt. It gave its gods to the Memphite kings and drew Memphite gods into its circle; it inspired the dogma of Thebes; it paved the way for Akhenaten's crusade to establish the visible disk of the sun as sole god. Until its destruction, Heliopolis was a holy place, repository for the wisdom of the past.

Now we turn to another important historical references between Tuthmose III and the city we know by the name of Jerusalem today. We have already seen the link between Tuthmose III and Jerusalem derives from the time when he based himself there while his army was besieging Megiddo. His annals refer to his having stayed "at a fortress east of this town". Although the name of the fortress is not mentioned at any point in the Egyptian text, all the indications are that Jerusalem, which lies to the south-east of Megiddo, is the location meant here. Leaving the besieged city and travelling east, the only route was the Way of the Sea, joined near the River Jordan by the road leading south to Jerusalem. It seems that we have an incomplete account of the fortress where the king stayed because the scribe concerned remained with the army, recording details of the military campaign at Megiddo, rather than accompanying Tuthmose III.



The biblical reference to "the king and his men" indicates that it was the ruler and his bodyguard, not his entire army, that was involved. As for the "gutter" by which they obtained entry to the fortress, this is thought to have been a shaft dug to ensure supplies of water from a spring known as the Gihon - the Christian Virgin Fountain - that lay in the valley some 325 metres below Jerusalem.

Now we look at some startling information concerning the Ark of the Covenant. On reading Grant R. Jeffrey's book Appointment with Destiny I came across a curious reference to the dimensions of the stone chest in the King's Chamber in the Great Pyramid in Egypt. This stone chest found in the Great Pyramid King's chamber has the exact same measurement as the Ark of the Covenant. This Chest was the only object within the King's Chamber, as the Ark was the single sacred object within the Holy of Holies, in the Temple. Further, the cubit dimensions of the inner chamber of the Temple, the Holy of Holies, are precisely identical in size to the King's Chamber in the Pyramid and the same volume as the molten sea of water on the Temple Mount as prepared by King Solomon. Since the Pyramid was built and sealed long before the days of Moses, when he built the Ark and the Holy of Holies, and had remained sealed for over twenty-five centuries until the ninth century after Christ, there is no natural explanation for the phenomenon of both structures having identical volume measurements. It is interesting to note however that the Egyptians had portable shrines in the shape of boats that were very similar to the Ark of the Covenant used by the Israelites. These arks became extremely popular by the New Kingdom when Moses would have been in Egypt. One of the discoveries in Tutankhamun's tomb (a Thutmose Pharaoh) was an Ark for the afterlife. The New Kingdom saw a greater attention to the aspects of both the hidden and revealed in temple worship. The most holy was kept sacred by keeping it hidden, while the adoration of the masses was acquired through the use of the revealed. To accommodate these two conflicting ideals the Egyptians kept their most holy inner sanctuary hidden, while placing within it a sacred bark (Ark). The picture on the right is a picture of Tutankhamun's Ark. The portable boat shrines (Arks) were made of wood, but ornately gilded and decorated and equipped with a closed cabin (sometimes called a seH-neTr, 'Tent shrine of the god') in which the image of the deity sat. Long carrying-poles on each side or set laterally and up to five in number bore the shrine along on the shoulders of priests" (Kemp, Barry J. Ancient Egypt, p. 185). Notice if you will the poles which aided in the carrying of the Ark as we would expect and have imaged for us in Israel's Ark of the Covenant. In Egypt the Apet Festival focused around the "Ark of Worship", with the Arks being borne aloft by groups of priests and adored by hysterical crowds. The similarity between these Arks and the Old Testament Ark of the Covenant is remarkable. What is surprising, is when Howard Carter opened Tutankhamen's tomb in 1922, he found a number of caskets, which appear to be a form of prototype of the Ark of the Covenant.

Now most are familiar with the story that shortly after David's arrival in Jerusalem, that he and the Israelites brought in the Ark of the Covenant into Jerusalem:

2 Sam 6:17 17 And they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the LORD. (KJV)

The consequence of bringing the Ark to Jerusalem is said to have made the city the holy centre for the Israelite tribes. However, there is a further element of confusion here because we are dealing not only with two Davids but with two Arks - the Ark of the Covenant, in which Moses placed the Ten Commandments, and the Ark in which Tuthmose III carried his god, Amun-Ra, into battle before him at Megiddo, as described in his annals at Karnak:

- Year 23, first month of the third season, day 19- awakening in [life] in the tent of life, prosperity and health, at the town of Aruna. Proceeding northward by my majesty, carrying my father Amun-Ra, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands [that he might open the ways] before me." (Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 236).

We saw above the Egypt carried representations of their Gods in their "Arks" or "barques" and often carried them into battle as we find recorded about King David as well.

The idea of a holy Ark was introduced to the Israelites by Moses (Akhenaten) from Egyptian practices of worship. In his festivals and on other occasions, the Egyptian deity used to be carried by the priests in an Ark, usually in the form of a boat when the king went to live in the fortress. When the Pharaoh, Tuthmose III, went to live in the fortress of Jerusalem at the start of the protracted siege of Megiddo, the only possible location for the god Amun-Ra in his Ark was where the king was in residence which we saw was Jerusalem. In fact, we know that there were some rituals in Egyptian religion that only the king and high priests could perform before the deity (Osman, Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt).

The peaceful nature of events is also indicated by the fact that Araunah, the Jebusite king, was still in control of Mount Moriah, the high holy ground to the north of the city. We have an account of how David bought the threshing-floor of Mount Moriah "for fifty shekels of silver" in order to build an altar to the Lord. In the course of these negotiations Araunah said to David:

2 Sam 24:22-23 22 And Araunah said unto David, Let my lord the king take and offer up what seemeth good unto him: behold, here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments and other instruments of the oxen for wood. 23 All these things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king. And Araunah said unto the king, The LORD thy God accept thee. (KJV)

The choice of a threshing-floor on Mount Moriah may seem a curious one for the site of an altar, but it is "clear that this site was held sacred even prior to David for an elevated, exposed spot used as a threshing-floor at the approaches to a city often served as the local cultic spot. The sanctity of Jerusalem, atop the Temple Mount, is inferred already in the Book of Genesis (Mount Moriah). . . " (Stern, Encyclopedia of Archaeological excavations In The Holy Land, vol. 3, p. 590). This earlier biblical reference describes how Abraham is said to have received holy blessing on this same piece of ground:

Gen 14:18-20 18 And Melchizedek king of Salem (Jerusalem) brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. 19 And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth: 20 And blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all. (KJV)

Therefore, from the time of Abraham this high ground to the north of Jerusalem had been regarded as holy ground, not just for the inhabitants of the city but for other peoples in Canaan as well and this includes Egypt.

However, the reality of the situation is that the threshing-floor was not bought by the tribal David to build an altar for the Lord, but by Tuthmose III as the site for a shrine to his State god, Amun-Ra. This is again made clear in the Book of Psalms as we have already seen where David (Tuthmose III), like Egyptian kings, is spoken of as being the "Son of God"....a title reserved for a Pharaoh (the Son of Ra).

Ps 2:6-8 6 Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. 7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. 8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. (KJV)

The new name of Zion, as we have seen, makes its first appearance in the Bible as soon as we learn of King David's (Tuthmose III's) entry into Jerusalem and assumes more importance from this time onward.

The name Zion, whose meaning is not known for certain until defined from an Egyptian viewpoint (Desert City...Heliopolis) as we have seen did not originate in the Hebrew Bible as thought and has not been found in any historical source outside of Egypt where it finds its origin. What confuses the matter further is that the name is not always used to indicate the same location. In some cases, as the one cited above, it seems to signify the fortress of Jerusalem itself. Yet, at the same time, we have the suggestion that the fortress was named after the king himself:

2 Sam 5:9 9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it the city of David (Tuthmose III). And David built round about from Millo and inward. (KJV)

In other cases, Zion refers only to the sacred area that was used to build the Temple:

Joel 3:17 17 So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more. (KJV)

Here, while Zion refers clearly to the holy area of the Temple Mount, Jerusalem is clearly separate, although related to it. We have also the reference:

Ps 20:1-2 1 The LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee; 2 Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion; (KJV)

It is clear in this case that by Zion only the sanctuary is meant.

Further complications have arisen from the fact that Mount Zion was later believed not to have been in the area of the Temple, high to the north of ancient Jerusalem, but on the western mount. Here, in the first century A.D., a small church was built on the southern end of the hill, which became identified as the Coenaculum (the room of the Last Supper of Jesus according to tradition). This was followed many centuries later - in 1936 - by a Christian monastery known today as the Church of Mary. Nevertheless, modern archaeology has confirmed that this western mount did not form part of ancient Jerusalem and was not occupied at the time of the tribal chief David.

All the indications are, in fact, that by Zion the ancient holy ground of Jerusalem was meant, the artificially flattened ground on Mount Moriah where Solomon (Amenhotep III) built his Temple and which today includes two of the holiest shrines of Islam - the Dome of the Rock, built by Muhammad's second Calif. Omar, and aI-Aqsa Mosque. The Temple area is surrounded by the colossal Herodian enclosure wall, preserved in the east, south and west: a larger section of the western wall (the Wailing Wall), which survives today, is regarded as the most venerated site in Jewish tradition. In ancient times, before David entered the fortress, this area was regarded as holy ground, not only by the Jebusites but by Abraham. In fact, Mount Moriah is identified as the area where the Temple was first built:

2 Chr 3:1 1 Then Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the LORD appeared unto David (Tuthmose III) his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite. (KJV)

It is the same location where, in the account of Abraham's intention to slay Sarah's son, Isaac, until he was forbidden to do so by the Lord, we have the obscure reference:

Gen 22:14 14 And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, In the mount of the LORD it shall be seen. (KJV)

As we saw before, Abraham also received the blessing from the king, Melchizedek, on the same holy ground.

However, it was when King David (Thutmose III) brought his Ark and placed it in the same area that this ancient holy ground was transformed into a holy centre believed to be the abode of the Lord:

Ps 132:13-14 13 For the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. 14 This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it. (KJV)

Once Tuthmose III had taken the image of Amun-Ra in his Ark to Jerusalem, the logical resting place for it, at a time when religious bigotry did not exist, it was placed on the existing holy high ground of Mount Moriah where, one would expect, Tuthmose III worshipped during his seven-month stay.

After Tuthmose III left Jerusalem at the end of his seven-month stay, the holy ground where he had worshipped became Egyptianized because of him. This can be seen easily from the name it acquired, Zion. Although found for the first time in the Bible, it is not an original Hebrew word but consists of two elements, one Hebrew, the other Egyptian as we saw above.

"On", contained in the word Zion, as we saw above, is the biblical name of the ancient Egyptian holy city known from Greek as Heliopolis, which existed a short distance to the north of modern Cairo. In the Old Testament account of the life of Joseph the Patriarch, who brought the Israelites to Egypt, we are told that Pharaoh, having appointed Joseph to a high position, gave him an Egyptian wife:

Gen 41:45 45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name Zaphnath-pa'aneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Potipherah priest of On (Heliopolis). And Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt. (KJV)

Although Heliopolis was the original Egyptian holy city, the emphasis changed during the Eighteenth Dynasty when Thebes in Upper Egypt became the new capital city of the Empire as well as the holy city of the State god Amun-Ra. From this time it became the custom to refer to Thebes as "the southern On" and Heliopolis as "the northern On", with the word "On" being used in the sense of "holy city" (the On (holy place) of the desert.

Thus the very word "Zion", used to designate the holy ground to the north of Jerusalem from the time King David (Thutmose III) entered the city, in itself reveals its Egyptian origin. From that time, Mount Moriah, until then holy to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, became holy for all the Asiatic kingdoms of the Empire. By introducing the earlier story of Abraham being blessed by El Elyon, which is one of the names of the Israelite God, on the same Mount Moriah, the biblical narrator wanted to stress that the area was related to the God of Israel even before King David (Thutmose III) used it for his own worship.

After his seven-month stay, Tuthmose III returned to Megiddo for his successful assault on the city, then made his way to Thebes.

We have no means of knowing whether he visited Jerusalem again during one of his many campaigns in western Asia. Nevertheless, his descendants, the children of Sarah, never really forgot their great ancestor and, after leaving Egypt and eventually settling in the Promised Land of Canaan, they made his holy ground the most venerated and holy part of their new home.

The sacredness attributed to Jerusalem by the Egyptians initially derived, as we have seen, from the transport of the Barque of Amun (a holy shrine carried on poles in much the same manner as the Israelite Ark of the Covenant) to the city of Jerusalem by Thutmose III (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 125). The Egyptian Ark or shrine was normally kept within the Holy of Holies in the Temple of Amun at Karnak, however Thutmose III (just like King David) had carried the Egyptian Ark with him into battle (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 125, quoting from Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 236).

1 Sam 4:5-8 5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again. 6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp. 7 And the Philistines were afraid, for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Woe unto us! for there hath not been such a thing heretofore. 8 Woe unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods? (KJV)

The Ark of Amun remained with Tuthmose III when he took up residence in Jerusalem during the prolonged siege of Megiddo (Ibid. p. 114).

Answer for yourself: Does this remind you of King David carrying the Ark of the Covenant into battle with him?

1 Sam 4:3-5 3 And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, Wherefore hath the LORD smitten us to day before the Philistines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies. 4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth between the cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God. 5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again (KJV).

After the fall of the Syrian city of Kadesh (in the Biblical region of Zobah and Hamath) during the sixth military campaign (he conducted a total of 17 in all), Thutmose III was able to cross the Euphrates and erect a second stele beside that of Thutmose I.

Answer for yourself: What is the significance of this conquest of Thutmose III?

Now watch closely what the Old Testament says about King David in the following verse. In essence, Thutmose III (King David):

2 Sam 8:3 3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. (KJV)

Here we find that Tuthmose III (King David) both smote the king of Zobah and crossed the Euphrates as well.

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence? The evidence is yet mounting that King David is Thutmose III.

This is the border that was originally established his grandfather Tuthmose I (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.88). It was at this time that Thutmose III (David) "established garrisons in Syria" (Edom) as the Bible describes but attributes again to a King named David:

2 Sam 8:13-14 13 And David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians in the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men. 14 And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants. And the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went. (KJV)

We are almost done but now for some Jewish testimony concerning Kind David being Tuthmose III.

Kings Saul and David reigned in the 10th century B.C.E. according to the biblical chronology but Josephus dates David to a far earlier period.

"He was buried by his son (questionable) Solomon, in Jerusalem, with great magnificence, and with all the other funeral pomp which kings used to be buried with; moreover, he had great and immense wealth buried with him, the vastness of which may be easily conjectured at by what I shall now say; for a thousand and three hundred years afterward [in the time of] Hyrcanus the high priest, when he was besieged by Antiochus..." - Josephus Flavius, Antiquities of the Jews.

The siege of the second Temple in Jerusalem by Antiochus can accurately be dated to 167 B.C.E.

Answer for yourself: What happens if we look another thousand and three hundred years before 167 B.C.E as Josephus says? Well this date puts David's funeral at 1467 B.C.E., or almost 450 years before the generally accepted date (circa 1020 B.C.E.)

Answer for yourself: Does this date coincide with the time of Thutmose III? Yes it does! What another coincidence!

This, according to conventional chronology, would be during the reign of the greatest Egyptian warrior-pharaoh Tuthmose III [1490-1436 B.C.E.], who extended the Egyptian empire to its furthest limits and in so doing "recovered it all"!

1 Sam 30:19 19 And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: David recovered all. (KJV)

In closing Ahmed Osman, in The House of the Messiah, makes some key statements which I now quote:

- "The David who established an empire that stretched from the Nile to the Euphrates can only have lived in the fifteenth century B.C...The Israelite infiltration of Canaan, the Promised land, was a fragmentary process that did not gather pace until after Egypt lost control over Palestine in the second half of the twelfth century B.C"
- "The David whose main campaigns were against the Philistines cannot have lived before the twelfth century B.C. because that was when the mass invasion of the coastal plain of Canaan by the Philistines took place."
- "The King of Qadesh, a strong fortified city on the River Orontes in northern Syria, led a Syrio-Canaanite confederacy in a general rebellion against Egypt. In response, Thutmose III marched into western Asia to regain the territories between the Nile and Euphrates that had been conquered forty years earlier by his grandfather, Thutmose I. In the next twenty years he led a total of seventeen campaigns in western Asia, at the end of which he had earned himself the reputation as the mightiest of all the kings of the ancient world. The account of these various wars, copied from the daily records of the scribe who accompanied the army on its campaigns, is to be found in the Annals, a 223-line document that covers the inside of the walls enclosing the corridor surrounding the granite holy of holies Thutmose III built at Karnak"

Answer for yourself: Are these many evidences just coincidence?

So there you have it. It would appear to a "thinking believer" that the preponderance of the evidence is beyond chance and coincidence and the Biblical King David is not a Jew but in reality a part Hebrew descendent who is recognized and attested to my many infallible proofs to be a Pharaoh named Tuthmose III. No wonder we find so many parallels between Biblical Judaism and Egyptian religion which both oppose the later replacement religion of Rome called Christianity.

SOL INVICTUS...THE RELIGION OF ROME...THE LEGACY OF GENTILE CHRISTIANITY

The official recognition of sun worship in the Roman Empire began during the time of Aurelian when he instituted the cult of "Sol invictus". The cult of Sol Invictus and that of Mithra are virtually the same. In the year 307 A.D. Emperor Diocletian, a sun worshipper, was involved in the dedication of a temple to Mithra and was responsible for the burning of scripture which made it possible for later emperors (like Constantine) to formulate their own version of "Christianity." After the rein of Diocletian, Emperor Constantine, while claiming to be a Christian maintained the title "Pontifus Maximus" the high priest of paganism. Constantine's coins were were inscribed: "SOL INVICTO COMITI" (COMMITTED TO THE INVINCIBLE SUN). During his reign pagan sun worship was blended with the worship of the Creator, and officially entitled "Christianity." Cybele the Phrygian goddess, known to her followers as "the mother of god", was closely related to the worship of Mithra. As Mithraism was a man's religion, the worship of Cybele was practiced by the women. The priests of Mithra were known as "Fathers" and the Priestesses of Cybele as "Mothers." After baptism into the Mysteries of Mithra, the initiate was marked on the forehead. The sign of the cross formed by the elliptic and the celestial equator was one of the signs of Mithra. Sunday (Deis Solis), the day of the sun, was considered by Mithraist a sacred day of rest. December 25th was celebrated as the birth of the sun, given birth by the "Queen of Heaven" - "Mother of god." The Mithraists celebrated a mithraic love feast. This feast consisted of loaves of bread decorated with crosses with wine over which the priest pronounced a mystic formula. Mithra was considered mediator between god and man. Mithraists also believed in eternal life in heaven and in the torture of the wicked after death. Many of these beliefs and rituals were exclusive to Mithraism and up until the fourth century were not a part of the Christian faith. Only those in accordance with the commandments of God could possibly be in honor of Christ. In the 4th century, through confusion and manipulation, rituals of "sun worship" were pronounced, by the followers of Satan to be "Christian" in nature. There is no Biblical support for the inclusion of Mithraic ritual, which is the worship of Satan, in the worship of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the Creator of heaven and earth.It is a Satanic scheme to disguise the transgression of God's laws under the title of "Christianity". This same system, characterized by the shrouding of truth in secrecy and the manipulation of the truth in order to achieve its ends, has been working for two millennia to combine paganism with Christianity. The mystery of iniquity is at work and it only takes a little leaven to leaven the whole lump.

Litha is the solar festival that marks the longest day of the year, with the sun rising and setting at its most northerly points. The summer quarter of the year runs from Beltane to Lughnassadh, so Litha stands at the midpoint of summer.

FURTHER DETAILS

The Summer Solstice is the longest day of the year and brings us to the zenith of the Sun god's power. He is celebrated and honored in order to ensure a large harvest. He is thanked for the Life-Giving Light that He brings.

This is also the time of the Great Battle of the Oak King and His twin, the Holly King. It is during this Battle that the Holly King, representing the darker, colder half of the year, slays the Oak King, who represents the lighter, warmer half of the year, in order to keep the wheel of the year spinning. The cycle of Life, Death and Rebirth is constantly flowing, always changing...never static. Such tradition honors the Green Man in all His masculinity. He is at the height of His reign and roams through the fields playing harmless pranks and games. Many celebrate this time with games and competition. It is a time for growing strong. The harvest is coming soon and the Winter months will be harsh. Many usually re-enact the Battle of the Oak and Holly Kings, more as a form of competition than a religious aspect. Honoring the Green Man is the main focus on this Sabbat.

Litha celebrates the height of the sun's power and the abundance of summer. Nature is alive, and fields and fruits are growing towards harvest, but the blessing is mixed, for once light reaches its apogee it can only decline. Litha is a fairly modern term for the summer solstice, and it may be derived from an Anglo-Saxon word for 'moon' that referred to the sixth and seventh months of the year. The Druidic name for the festival, Alban Heruin or 'Light of the Shore', is very appropriate for this turning point of the year, lying at the midpoint between "Light of the Earth" and "Light of the Water" (the Druidic terms for the equinoctial celebrations).

In the past, midsummer fires were lit for purification, protection and in the hope that the sun could be kept powerful for long enough to ensure a good harvest. People would leap over these fires in the belief that the crops would grow as high as they could jump. Drumming, dancing and singing were common, making this festival a noisy and social time. The full moon in June is known as the Mead or Honey Moon, and mead is a traditional drink for Litha, just as June is a popular time for weddings and hence honeymoons.

Litha honors the apex of Light, sometimes symbolized in the crowning of the Oak King, God of the waxing year. At his crowning, the Oak King falls to his darker aspect, the Holly King, God of the waning year (days grow shorter after Litha). In terms of the God and Goddess cycle, the God is made King through his marriage to the Queen at Litha.

Just as the winter solstice festival was appropriated by the Christian church to celebrate Christ's birth, so the popular summer solstice festival was taken to mark the birth of one of the church's most important saints: the cousin and baptizer of Jesus, John the Baptist. Other saints' days correspond to the supposed dates of their deaths, but John's is unusual in marking his birth. Saint John's Wort is a flower of traditional importance to midsummer celebrations.

Now let us understand in the Summer Solstice as being when the North Pole is pointed most toward the sun, the longest day and shortest night. The Summer Solstice, Midsummer, is linked with fertility and sexuality. June is the most popular wedding month.

6,000 years ago, people began to form into groups or communities. Food, clothing, and shelter were essential. Man learned that certain foods grew during certain times of the year - the solar year. So keeping tract of time became necessary in order to know when to plant and when to harvest. The time and season of the migration of animals became equally important. When the work was done and things went well, people celebrated (early holidays). Many of the ways (traditions) we celebrate during holidays which can be traced back to early civilization.

Not many solar holidays were celebrated at this time. (1) People were busy working the fields (2) People knew that for the next six months, daylight would be less and less each day (3) As stated before, this was a time for fertility and sexuality. Work and mating occupied most of the people's time.

THE WINTER SOLSTICE (AROUND 21ST DECEMBER)...YULE

Jer 10:2 2 Thus saith the LORD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. (KJV)

ALTERNATE NAMES

Midwinter, Celtic 'Rebirth of the Sun'

DRUIDIC NAME

Alban Arthuan (Light of Arthur)

CHRISTIAN EQUIVALENT

Saint Thomas' Day, Christmas Day (25th December)

PLACE IN THE NATURAL CYCLE

Yule is the solar festival that marks the shortest day of the year, with the sun rising and setting at its most southerly points. The winter quarter of the year runs from Samhain to Imbolic, so Yule stands at the midpoint of winter.

FURTHER DETAILS

Yule may mean 'Yoke of the Year', derived from the Anglo-Saxon Geola, though some suggest a derivation from the Norse Jul, meaning 'wheel'. Although it marks the sun's weakest point in the year, Yule is also the point at which the sun is reborn, as days begin to grow longer again. This link with the rebirth of the sun means that Yule was chosen as the birthday of the main deity in many religions. Dionysus, Mithras, Helios, Horus and Jesus (despite the Bible's indication of Jesus' birth around the autumn of the year) were all reputedly born on 25th December, the date on which the Winter Solstice used to fall before calendar changes. The Druidic name for Yule, 'Light of Arthur', identifies the legendary British King Arthur with the sun god.

Saturnalia, the Romans' seven-day festival in honor of Saturn, took place from 17-23 December each year and was a time of great merriment and gift-giving. The Roman name of the Yule festival was Sol Invictus - the Undefeated Sun, and this was designated as the birthday of Christ in 336 by Pope Julius I in order to appropriate the most important of the pagan festivals. The 'Twelve Days of Christmas' are the days after Christmas Day until the Epiphany (the day designated for the manifestation of Christ to the Magi) on 6th January.

The Winter Solstice, Yule, marks the shortest day of the year and thus, the longest night. This is the darkest part of the year and therefore a time when the Sun god symbolically "dies". Yet He is reborn again to begin His reign all over. From this point on, the days get longer and eventually warmer as His strength grows and matures around Midsummer. The goddess sleeps at this time after giving birth to the Sun god. The Death of the Holly King and the Birth of the Oak King is celebrated at this time. In pagan tradition, they see the Horned god as the ruler over this half of the year. As a protector of the wildlife and their Earth Mother while she sleeps during the cold Winter months. He is at His strongest at this point. They set up Yule trees, symbolic of the Tree of Life, and light candles to remind themselves that warmer days will return and from this day forth, the nights will be getting shorter and the days longer.

As stated above the Winter Solstice sees the crowning of the Holly King, god of the waning year, and his fall to his lighter aspect, the Oak King, god of the waxing year, who is reborn on this day (days grow longer after Yule). This aspect of the festival is seen in the Christmas carol 'The Holly and The Ivy', whose refrain concerns 'the rising of the sun'.

Decorating with evergreens over the Yule period is an ancient custom, most commonly seen today in Christmas trees and wreaths. Such plants were considered magical and protective in being evidently alive at this seemingly dead part of the year, and so are symbolic of the survival and rebirth of the sun at Yule. An evergreen Yule wreath symbolizes the survival of sun through the successions of soltices and equinoxes of the year.

THE RE-BIRTH OF THE SUN...THE WINTER SOLSTICE

Let us add just a little more to our understanding of the Winter Solstice and it's connection to the rebirth of the Sun. Winter Solstice is also known as Yule, Christmas, and Saturnalia, occurs in mid December. It is celebrate the birth of the new Solar year and the beginning of Winter. The Goddess manifests as the Great Mother and the God as the Sun Child. The God also appears as Santa Claus and Old Man Winter. Colors are Red, Green, and White. This is a festival of inner renewal.

Today, many people in Western-based cultures refer to this holiday as "Christmas." Yet a look into its origins of Christmas reveals its Pagan roots. Emperor Aurelian established December 25 as the birthday of the "Invincible Sun" in the third century as part of the Roman Winter Solstice celebrations. Shortly thereafter, in 273, the Christian church selected this day to represent the birthday of Jesus, and by 336, this Roman solar feast day was Christianized. January 6, celebrated as Epiphany in Christendom and linked with the visit of the Magi, was originally an Egyptian date for the Winter Solstice.

Most of the customs, lore, symbols, and rituals associated with "Christmas" actually are linked to Winter Solstice celebrations of ancient Pagan cultures. While Christian mythology is interwoven with contemporary observances of this holiday time, its Pagan nature is still strong and apparent.

Winter Solstice has been celebrated in cultures the world over for thousands of years. This start of the solar year is a celebration of Light and the rebirth of the Sun. In old Europe, it was known as Yule, from the Norse, Jul, meaning wheel.

Today, many people in Western-based cultures refer to this holiday as "Christmas." Yet a look into its origins of Christmas reveals its Pagan roots.

The primary, motivating factor that inspired early man to worship god, was his fear and dread of the potential fierceness of his environment. His (primitive man) major impetus for worshipping and sacrificing to the Sun God was to assure that the Sun God would continue protecting mankind from the ravages of the dreaded winter.

So for primitive man, the inception of winter, Dec. 22, was the worst day of every year for him. This day, Dec. 22 was the start of winter and marked the beginning of the worst stage of his yearly struggle for survival. This day, Dec. 22, is referred to by astronomers as the Winter Solstice. This word, Solstice, according to Webster's Dictionary means "to stand still, pause, a turning point." Primitive man even believed the Sun had died as he could detect no movement of the Sun in the sky for 3 days and and these 3 days were days having the shortest daylight of the year. This day, Dec. 22, the start of winter, was the harbinger of his potential perdition.

On Dec. 22 of each year, the Sun reached its Winter Solstice, the lowest point of the trajectory (angle of rays) of the entire year. After Dec. 22 (the turning point), the Sun again rises northward, which is a sign that summer shall come again!

Even though Dec. 22 marks the beginning of winter and the weather turns progressively worst from that point (Dec. 22) until the spring (March 21), all is not lost. Because the fact that the angle of the Sun's rays projecting on the earth, was moving progressively northward told early man that the warmth and comfort of the summer Sun would eventually prevail. But there was a period of doubt, for early primitive civilization. Primitive man did not understand our universe and solar system as we do today. We, today, know exactly what causes the four seasons of the year. But early man did not. He did not possess knowledge of our Solar System, the axis of the earth, its rotation and revolving around the Sun. He did not understand that these forces operated by a Natural, Providential Law, that would stay its course, no matter what. Early man only understood the result, not the cause. Because of this he would "reason" such events as best he could and these resulting "myths" would be handed down among mankind until Science would advance to replace such foolishness. The problem is that such foolishness would be later personified into acts of each nation's heroes and later ascribed to Jesus by the Sun-worshipping Romans who had control over the New Testament.

Now you can better understand that each year, early society awaited the approach of Dec. 22, with foreboding. Dec. 22, the day of the Winter Solstice (definition is to stand still) was a day of reckoning for them. Because it seemed to them, as they observed and tracked the North to South movement of the Sun, that on this day DEC 22, the sun entered its grave. Many pagan gods and godmen were said to have died on this day only to rise on the 3rd day...being Dec. 25th. The North to South progression of the Sun can be likened to a swinging pendulum. You know that when a pendulum reaches its solstice (the point where it swings back - its turning point), that for a slight imperceptible moment, it actually stands still. But in terms of our vast solar system, the point of solstice is not imperceptible. It lasts for days, three days to be exact. For three days, after the sun reaches its solstice, it appears to stand still. This period of pause, between the Suns descent and ASCENT, wrought paralyzing dread and fear into the hearts and minds of the early pre-Christians. Over time, they established rituals and traditions concerning this period (DEC 22 to DEC 25). They passed the word through oral tradition, and eventually, after their societies established writing, wrote it down, concerning their Sun God: the sun shall lay in a grave (point of solstice) for 3 days. But after 3 days the sun shall rise, be resurrected, (according to Webster's Dictionary, the word resurrect is linked to the word resurge, which means "To Rise Again", to revive), and ascend toward heaven, (progressively ascend northward to the position of the summer Sun). And when the sun completes its ascent upward toward the point of its summer solstice, it will comfort us and bless us with warm weather and long days and will save us (be a savior) from the ravages of winter. So, this, that I have explained to you here, is the ORIGINAL, authentic, true CONCEPT of the resurrection.As the revelation of God would grow among Mankind, men could see how the God of the Universe has spoken such to them in the Cosmos.

When the pre-Christians spoke and wrote of the resurrection of the Sun; they meant exactly that. It did not refer to a person, but to the SOLAR SUN. That would come later. We see the the culminating of it in the teachings of the New Testament as applied to the Jesus of history as he is transformed into the Christ of Faith.

Now understand I believe in the resurrection of the dead as well as Jesus (most likely but for other reasons than the contradicting texts). What you, the reader must be sharp enough to see, is that many "untruths" have been mixed with "truths" in the life of Jesus as portrayed in the New Testament and "cast out the leaven."

But, when the Gentile Church broke from their Jewish Roots the Gentile priesthood began to associated with the inherited traditions about Jesus their older "religious traditions" of the Sun-gods. Long ago their Gentile ancestors and priests had changed the Sun to a personification of the Sun that become "the Son" of the Sun. The priesthood told the pagans that the SON (Christ as a personification of the SUN) was born on DEC 25, just like their SUN. They told them that the Son had been dead in a grave for three days and then was resurrected (revived) and ascended to heaven (upward) just like their Sun. This is totally a matter of faith for you, the reader.

WHAT CAN WE LEARN...AND WOULD GOD WANT US TO?

Emperor Aurelian established December 25 as the birthday of the "Invincible Sun" in the third century as part of the Roman Winter Solstice celebrations. Shortly thereafter, in 273, the Christian church selected this day to represent the birthday of Jesus, and by 336, this Roman solar feast day was Christianized. January 6, celebrated as Epiphany in Christendom and linked with the visit of the Magi, was originally an Egyptian date for the Winter Solstice. If you have ever studied the Jewish Roots of Christianity you can easily see that Yeshua was conceived at Hanukkah (the Festival of Lights...light to the world) and was born at the High Holy Days (9 months later). This is why Bet Emet exists in hopes we can sanctify ourselves before our LORD and one day meet Him with truth and lives accordingly!

Most of the customs, lore, symbols, and rituals associated with "Christmas" actually are linked to Winter Solstice celebrations of ancient Pagan cultures. While Christian mythology is interwoven with contemporary observances of this holiday time, its Pagan nature is still strong and apparent. Pagans today can readily re-Paganize Christmas time and the secular New Year by giving a Pagan spiritual focus to existing holiday customs and by creating new traditions that draw on ancient ways.

OSTARA....THE VERNAL/SPRING EQUINOX (AROUND 19TH/21ST MARCH)...EASTER

Jer 10:2 2 Thus saith the L-RD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. (KJV)

ALTERNATE NAMES

Eostre's Day, Celtic 'Bird Festival'

DRUIDIC NAME

Alban Eilir or Alban Eiler (Light of the Earth)

CHRISTIAN EQUIVALENT

Lady Day or the Annunciation (25th March), Easter (moveable date)

PLACE IN THE NATURAL CYCLE

Ostara is the solar festival that marks the transition from the dark to the light half of the year: day and night are of equal length. On this day, the sun rises due east and sets due west. The spring quarter of the year runs from Imbolic to Beltane, so Ostara marks the mid-point of spring. By Ostara, life is returning to the land in noticeable ways, and thus nature demonstrates the festival's associations with revival (resurrection of the sun) and the ascendancy of light.

FURTHER DETAILS

The Spring or Vernal Equinox, is when the equator is in the direct path of the sun, day and night are of equal length, North and South Poles receive equal light, thus the name equinox. It is a time of rebirth, an awakening of the earth, a time to plant, new beginnings.

In many cultures New Years Day was traditionally in late March. Most of the Roman republic and Medieval Europe celebrated New Years in March. It was not until 1582 and the institution of the Gregorian calendar that January 1st became the date to begin a New Year in the Western world.

Festivals and rites, a time to celebrate the renewal of life, generally preceded by a period of fasting. The Babylonians celebrated Akitu at the spring equinox. Ostara, German Goddess of Fertility, and Eostre, Saxon Goddess of Fertility, both represent the awakening of the earth. Christians celebrate Easter, the resurrection of Christ.

The Jewish people, being on a lunar calendar, prior to Equinox celebrate Purim, a festival mainly for children. It is a time when even the strictest Orthodox sects allow some foolishness and merriment to reign. The Celtic tradition has the April Fool, a holdover from the 'Great Fool', Dalua, the Green Man of the spring festival. According to Aleister Crowley "The Green Man is a personification of the mysterious influence that produces the phenomena of spring . . .The world is always looking for a saviour . . ." Parsifal is such a figure in the opera by Wagner, but the tale is much older, from ancient Pagan Druid and Nordic mythology.

Festivals occurring around the Spring Equinox are the Festival of Trees, Alban Eilir, Passover, Rites of Eostre, Easter, Ostara, Rites of Spring, Holikadehan, Lent, Buddha's birthday, St. Patrick's Day, and April Fools Day .

Ostara is a celebration of conception, regeneration and the triumph of light over darkness. In terms of the Goddess cycle, it is the time when the Maiden of Imbolic conceives the child that will be born at Yule.. The Christian Church celebrates both aspects of Ostara as the day of the Annunciation (when Mary conceives Christ) and the day of the Resurrection (when Christ returns triumphant from the darkness of death). The latter, Easter, is celebrated in the Western Christian Church on the first Sunday after the Paschal ('Passover') moon (usually the full moon that occurs on or next after the vernal equinox, taken as March 21).

Ostara is a Germanic goddess of spring and fertility, and the name of her Anglo-Saxon equivalent, Eostre, was used to derive the term Easter by the Venerable Bede in the 8th century. Eostre is a lunar goddess, and her symbols include the egg and the rabbit, both of which are obvious fertility symbols. In addition, the egg represents the Cosmic Egg of Creation and the rabbit is symbolic of the moon (it used to be thought that an image of a hare could be seen in the full moon). Eostre's festival was held on the first full moon on or next after the vernal equinox, so this fertility goddess lends her festival, her symbols and her name to the Christian celebration of the Resurrection.

The Spring Equinox brings a time of balance. The Sun God has overtaken the darkness and day and night are of equal lengths. The Goddess, the Earth Mother, supposedly awakens from Her long slumber to replenish the Earth. One is to interpret this as new Life rising from the cold ground. The Horned God has grown weak from the Winter and at this time dies in order to return to the healing Earth. From His "death", He is reborn as the Green Man. He has shed his antlers and fur for green leaves and vines. He is young still, but as the days grow longer he gains strength. He is a God of fertility, to aid our Goddess in the growing of our fields and livestock. Many Pagan customs from this Sabbat continue to this day. For instance, the Easter Egg is a common Pagan custom. Eggs have always been a symbol of fertility and thus used as a symbol for this holiday. They were traditionally painted red or scarlet to symbolize the Suns rays in hopes that the rays of the Sun would warm the Egg and from it would spring Life. Easter is celebrated around this time because it has always been, in older traditional religions, the time of the willing sacrifice and rebirth of the God. Therefore it was only logical to place the sacrifice and rebirth of Jesus around this time.

Just as Ostara is a time to sow the seed that will be harvested later in the year, it is also a time to act on new ideas and begin new ventures that will grow as the year proceeds. It is the point when, conceptually at least, the Sun enters the sign of Aries and the astrological cycle begins again. Ostara is a time for renewal.

Many, perhaps most, Pagan religions in the Mediterranean area had a major seasonal day of religious celebration at or following the Spring Equinox. Cybele, the Phrygian fertility goddess, had a fictional consort who was believed to have been born via a virgin birth. He was Attis, who was believed to have died and been resurrected each year during the period MAR-22 to MAR-25. About 200 B.C. mystery cults began to appear in Rome just as they had earlier in Greece. Most notable was the Cybele cult centered on Vatican hill ...Associated with the Cybele cult was that of her lover, Attis ([the older Tammuz, Osiris, Dionysus, or Orpheus under a new name). He was a god of ever-reviving vegetation. Born of a virgin, he died and was reborn annually. The festival began as a day of blood on Black Friday and culminated after three days in a day of rejoicing over the resurrection.

Wherever Christian worship of Jesus and Pagan worship of Attis were active in the same geographical area in ancient times, Christians used to celebrate the death and resurrection of Jesus on the same date; and pagans and Christians used to quarrel bitterly about which of their gods was the true prototype and which the imitation.

Many religious historians believe that the death and resurrection legends were first associated with Attis, many centuries before the birth of Jesus. They were simply grafted onto stories of Jesus' life in order to make Christian theology more acceptable to Pagans. Ancient Christians had an alternate explanation; they claimed that Satan had created counterfeit deities in advance of the coming of Christ in order to confuse humanity.

Wiccans and other Neopagans continue to celebrate the Spring Equinox as one of their 8 yearly Sabbats (holy days of celebration). Near the Mediterranean, this is a time of sprouting of the summer's crop; farther north, it is the time for seeding. Their rituals at the Spring Equinox are related primarily to the fertility of the crops and to the balance of the day and night times. Where Wiccans can safely celebrate the Sabbat out of doors without threat of religious persecution, they often incorporate a bonfire into their rituals, jumping over the dying embers to assure fertility of people and crops.

Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread were observed by the ancient Israelites early in each new year. The Jewish people followed the Persian/Babylonian calendar and started each year with the Spring Equinox circa MAR-21. The name Passover was derived from the actions of the angel of death as described in the book of Exodus. The angel 'passed over' the homes of the Jews which were marked with the blood obtained from a ritual animal sacrifice. The same angel exterminated the first born son of every family whose doorway was not so marked - perhaps the greatest act of genocide mentioned in the Bible following the killing of infants, children, men and women in Sodom.

TRADITIONS, SUPERSTITIONS, RITUALS

The gathering of different colored eggs from a variety of birds. These eggs were then used as amulets for fertility, prosperity, and protection. Ostara were the hare and the egg. Both represented fertility. From these, we have inherited the customs and symbols of the Easter egg and Easter rabbit. Dyed eggs also formed part of the rituals of the Babylonian mystery religions. Eggs were sacred to many ancient civilizations and formed an integral part of religious ceremonies in Egypt and the Orient. Dyed eggs were hung in Egyptian temples, and the egg was regarded as the emblem of regenerative life proceeding from the mouth of the great Egyptian god.

Easter Sunrise Service: This custom can be traced back to the ancient Pagan custom of welcoming the sun God at the vernal equinox - when daytime is about to exceed the length of the nighttime. It was a time to celebrate the return of life and reproduction to animal and plant life as well.

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Much of the life Jesus Christ, as recorded in the New Testament, are nothing more than allegorical representations of the Sun God. Long before Jesus the Ancients formulated their Mythology (Religion), after the Image of Astronomical Phenomena. They saw this as the best way to connect with the Creator God, that is by patterning their religious rituals in accordance with the most visible and observable aspect of God's creation, the Cosmos. Many of the stories and accounts in the life of Jesus in the New Testament are actually various dramas (metaphorical representations) of Solar Mythology. We are presently focusing on the Solar-Lunar aspects of ancient mythology and modern religion. We shall at this point commence a dissection of the New Testament gospels. As done previously, I wish to evaluate the most salient and popular episodes within these scriptures and show their parallel to the lives of the other mythical saviors that we have already discussed. And we will illustrate that much within the Gospels are analogous to Solar Mythology. Let me say this is done only to separate the lies and falsehoods from the truth about Jesus so those who follow him and his example can do so in truth.

First, we have the miraculous conception of a virgin.

Mat 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

Mat 1:19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

Mat 1:20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

Mat 1:21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

Mat 1:22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

Mat 1:23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

THE ASTRONOMICAL ANALOGY

The astronomical explanation of the first three points is as follows, The Miraculous Conception, as I explained in a previous article, refers to the Conjugation (Conception) that annually takes place at the vernal equinox. God, the Father, the Sun personified, at this time (the vernal equinox) is joined (the crossing of the celestial equator and the ecliptic of the sun) to commence the Gestation of the Son (Sun) of God (Father Sun), that will be born 280 days later on December 25th.

The ancients felt that an offspring of a god, a son of god, should have a purer maternal origin than mortals, and this was evidence of his supernatural or divine origin. A man, even if he were thought of as a god, had to be born of a woman, and this could not be concealed, but paternal parentage is never so obvious, being known only to the mother, if anyone.

The purity of his maternal parentage required these Gentile Saviors to be born of a pure woman—a maiden. Hence, the Gentile saviours often were born of virgins and this "concept" continued even for the Gentile redactors of the New Testament. Besides normal conception ordinary birth was also too ignominious for a god. It had to be spotless, or immaculate. Jesus Christ in an apocryphal gospel, like Chrishna was born through his mother's side, rather than the impure route. Though not in the canonical works, some of the Christian fathers endorsed this story. I have even read Catholic dogma where it testifies that Jesus was born not through Mary's vagina, the normal birth canal, but through her navel!

Not only saviours but famous men, like Plato, Pythagoras, Alexander, Augustus and others, were thought to have been born miraculously. Plato was born of Paretonia, begotten of Apollo, not Ariston, his father, according to one authority.

The doctrine of immaculate conception is ancient but the manner of the holy conception was different in different countries. Zoroaster was immaculately conceived by a ray from the Divine Reason or Word and this was adopted by medieval artists.

But the idea of being overshadowed by the Holy Ghost seems to have been most current. God, the father of a god was believed to overshadow the mother of a god, to impregnate her. In 550 BC, Pythais, the mother of Pythagoras, conceived by a spectre or ghost of the god Apollo, the Sun-god.

Answer for yourself: Does the ghost of the sun god differ in principle from the Christian Holy Ghost?.

Juno of Rome grew pregnant at the touch of a flower to give birth to Mars. No impregnation could have been purer. So the most immaculate conception of all was that of the god of War! If it sounds absurd, how is it more senseless than conception by a ghost? Botany has shown that, at least, a flower can fertilize other flowers but no science has yet investigated the virility of ghosts.

The Greek Juno, Hera, was immaculately impregnated by the wind to give birth to Vulcan. Here is a close parallel indeed for the word habitually translated as spirit or ghost in the scriptures and continued into the Greek of the New Testament really means breath or wind! So literally the virgin Mary was impregnated by the wind just like Hera. The author of the Perennial Calendar tells us the miraculous conception of Juno Jugulis, the blessed virgin queen of heaven, fell on the second of February, the day of the early Christian festival of the date of the conception of the ever Blessed Virgin Mary.

A Chinese sect worshiped a saviour known as Xaca, who was conceived of his mother, Maia, by a white elephant, which she saw in her sleep, and for greater purity, she brought him forth from one of her sides. In Chinese popular religion, the virgin mother Shing-Mon gave birth to the God Yu from a conception by a water lily. The procreative refinement evinced here is equal to that of Juno. In another story Yu was conceived of a star!

Tamerlane's mother conceived having had sexual intercourse with the god of Day. The mother of Ghengis Khan, being too modest to claim that she was the mother of the son of God, said only that he was the son of the sun.

Osiris of Egypt and even Julius Caesar were immaculately conceived—the latter being the son of the beautiful virgin Cronis Celestine, and begotten by the Father of all Gods, Jupiter. His heir and nephew, Augustus Caesar, was curiously his half brother, as another son of Jove, by whose divine lust he was immaculately conceived in the temple of Apollo.

Both Buddha and Chrishna, of India, were immaculately conceived. The mother of Chrishna was overshadowed by the supreme God, Brahma, and the Holy Ghost was Naraan. Chrishna's mother had given birth seven times previously but remained a virgin. Philostratus, a disciple of Apollonius of Cappadocia, who was contemporary with Jesus Christ , tells that Damis, the mother of Apollonius, gave birth to this god and rival saviour of Jesus Christ, by being overshadowed by the god, Proteus.

Several of the virgin mothers of gods and great men go ten months between conception and delivery.

Plainly the tradition of the miraculous conceptions of gods, sons of gods, saviours and messiahs was prevalent in the world from ancient times on, beginning long before the mother of Jesus was overshadowed by the ghostly representative of the Most High. The belief in immaculate conception extended to every nation in the world. Grote, referring to Greece, declares that the furtive pregnancy of young women, often by a god, is one of the most frequently recurring incidents in the legendary narratives of the country.

Both the prevalence and antiquity of the idea of immaculate conception among the heathen is conceded by earlier Christian writers in their arguments from precedents of the divinity of Christ. St. Augustine, Origen and Lactanius tried to persuade us of the immaculate virginity of the mother of Jesus Christ by the example of similar pagan events. The doctrine of immaculate conception is, then, conceded as long anterior to Christ and therefore not unique in his case.

PROBLEMS WITH THIS DOCTRINE

- The gospels show that Christ himself did not claim to have a miraculous birth. He did not once allude to it, though as the principal evidence of his divinity, as Christians claim, he would have done so.
- His paternal genealogy, as made out by Matthew and Luke, completely confounds his virgin birth. They both trace his lineage through Joseph, which they could only do if Joseph was his father.
- His own disciple, Philip, declared him to be the son of Joseph, and several texts show that it was the original belief.
- The story of the virgin birth rests on the slender foundations of an angel and a dream. Mary got it by an angel, and Joseph by a dream, and thereby we have the whole of the story of the divinity of Jesus Christ.
- However, we have neither Joseph's nor Mary's report of these things, but only Matthew and Luke's. We do not know that either of them ever saw or spoke with Joseph or Mary on the subject.
- If Christ were a miraculously born god, would his mother would have reproved him for misconduct when she found him in the temple, as she, if no one else, must have known his nature?
- If Mary conceived miraculously, why was it kept so long from Joseph? Did the concubine of God intend to deceive her lawful husband? An angel had to be sent from heaven to let him into the secret.
- Why did not God inform Joseph by inspiration instead of using the round about way of sending an angel to do it?
- Mary was found with child of the Holy Ghost*, but as we are told nothing more about the circumstances, does it not leave us suspicious?
- Since it all seems to have been based on dreams, was carried on through dreams, and has no better foundation than dreams, why should we give it better credit than similar stories found in heathen mythology? Or is it that Gentile Christianity is just a dreamy religion?
- In an educated and scientific age, should we accept reports of the birth of a God based on no better a foundation than dreams, angels and the legends of oriental mythology? In particular, can any scientist entertain the idea of infinite beings, themselves mere conjecture, actually impregnating human females?

- Ancient Eastern belief was that sexual intercourse was sinful, procreation was impure and human children were born thus contaminated. Human beings were imperfect and any god sent into the world as a saviour had to avoid such contamination. The solution was that incarnate gods entered the world through human virgins to avoid the impurity and the slander that the saviour might have arisen in more normal ways if the mother were not a virgin. Can any unbiased deny that this is the source of the origin of the story of Christ's virgin birth?
- If Christ had to come into the world avoiding the impurity of human conception and birth, why did he not descend directly from heaven in person? If he can descend on the clouds at his—still awaited—second advent, why could he not do the same at his first advent, thereby pre-empting reasons for doubt and saving far more of fallen humanity?
- Could anyone, free of religious guilt and indoctrination, presented with these stories as the truth today, willingly and joyfully accept them as proof that someone was a god? Or would they consider them to be fraudulent inventions, intended to gull the credulous?
- If you have never taken the time as a Christian to study the origins of your faith I highly suggest it. If you would only familiarize yourself with the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. one can quickly see how under the influence of Constantine, a Sun-worshipper, that in the conversion of the Empire to the Christian faith then its leader, Jesus, had to be moulded into the image of prior Sun-gods. Such was Constantine's wish and whatever the emperor desired was done or else. Check it out!

Answer for yourself: Does this event as depicted in the New Testament now seem "Divine and unique" to you any longer?

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST AS RECORDED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

In antiquity, filled with legend, lore, and superstition, the report of a virtuous woman giving birth to a child with the usual form, and possessing the usual characteristics of a human being, but without a male partner in the conception, might in an age of miracles and ignorance of natural law, be believed with implicit credulity. But in an age of intelligence, when the keys of science have provided modern man the answers for such lengeds and myths. Modern investigations into religous histories of pagan nations have laid bare the fact that most ancient religious countries abound in reports of these "virgin births." That being the case then the only recourse for a Christian who is a "thinking believer" is to obtain a profound and general skepticism after he has done personal study into into such legends.

We continue our search for the truth and origin of the "virgin birth" stories that not only were applied to Jesus in the New Testament, but which also can be traced to the beginning of time for other "god-men" and the various religions of the heathen nations. What is truth? How do we know we have? How do we know we don't have it? Well, the last question is easy: You study!

My research has again linked such "virgin birth" stories to the Sun. Nothing is new here as you shall quickly see. In this respect these immaculately conceived "virgin born" gods are personified from the Sun.

THE EVIDENCE

Mankind will not emulate extraordinary leaders but instead fall to their knees, adore and worship them. Rather than follow a difficult example it is easier to deify the exemplar thus providing an excuse for not emulating him. It has been said: "How can mere men do what gods can do?" This inclination to worship Jesus as a god rather than follow him as a man stems from the earliest days of Christianity. Within 60 years of the crucifixion Jesus's adoring followers had created the myth of the conception of Jesus by the Holy Ghost making him at least half a god from the start. He thus became an impossible role model for merely mortal men. Yet even the half of him that was human passed on by his mother was too much for the adorers. They they wanted a fully fledged god. After centuries as a tolerated heresy, in 1854 the doctrine of "The Immaculate Conception of the Mother of God" was adopted by the Roman Church rendering Jesus's mother a perfect being from her own birth, free of original sin, incapable of sin throughout her life - a sinless mate for God Almighty to conceive a divine son. Jesus as a fine example of loving manhood had been usurped by the adorers and worshippers.

But lets look at the text. No mention is made of the Virgin Birth in the epistles and in fact Paul could not be more explicit in recording that Jesus was "of the seed of David according to the flesh" as if he were refuting the suggestion. For Paul Jesus was the Son of God through the "Spirit of Holiness" which did not require a supernatural conception. Nor does the earliest gospel mention the virgin birth. The mystical Book of the Revelation of John the Divine does not mention it, though it would be perfect for inclusion in such an allegorical piece. None of the Jewish patriarchs were born of virgins and, though older women beyond the menopause had their wombs "opened" to conceive Isaac, Jacob and Samuel, no divine impregnation was suggested.

The virgin birth appears in Luke and Matthew, years after the event, to prove Jesus's divinity. The birth stories in the two gospels come from different sources and differ widely but both contradict their central thesis that Jesus's mother was a virgin by giving a genealogy to show that Joseph was descended from David, an irrelevancy if Joseph had not impregnated his wife. The original idea was obviously to trace Jesus's lineage through Joseph to David to fulfill messianic prophecy. Then the idea of making Jesus more divine through a virgin birth arose and was tacked on spoiling the object of the genealogy. The editors of both gospels see a problem and try to avoid it: in Luke by inserting "as people thought" to show Jesus was not really Joseph's son and in Matthew by slyly separating Joseph from his son by inserting after "...Joseph" "the husband of Mary, of whom was begotten" Jesus. If the intention was to imply that Mary was begetting Jesus then the person inserting the story was either ignorant or depended on the ignorance of his readers for only men could beget according to Jewish convention. Neither Luke nor Matthew refer to the birth story again and indeed it contradicts the main story. Presumably his family or at least his mother would have been aware of all that feting by kings and shepherds, and glory in the heavens, and the reason for it all. Yet later they are continually puzzled and disappointed by Jesus's behaviour. And why bother trying to establish a divine conception when both refer to Joseph in the main narrative as the father of Jesus.

The Ebionites, the first Jewish followers of Jesus accepted Joseph as the natural father. An attempt was made by the early Christians to justify the virgin birth story by referring to Isaiah 7:14 where is written, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son". The word employed in the Greek version of the Old Testament was parthenos. But a reference to the original Hebrew yields the word almah. Both parthenos and almah did not necessarily mean a virgin as we understand it, a woman who had never had intercourse. In Greek it could mean youth, the state of unmarriage, or even a person who is first married. In Hebrew it could mean beside the usual meaning, an immature girl who could not conceive because she had not yet started to menstruate. The idea of a virgin as a premenstrual girl allows her to have children and still be a virgin. If she were to conceive from her very first ovulation, she would not have menstruated but would be a mother and still a virgin. If she conceived at the first ovulation after the birth, she could be a virgin mother of two children of different ages. Since Jewish girls often married before menstruation - in Joel 1:8 an almah's husband is mentioned - virgin mothers were not unusual. Now Mary was described as "betrothed" to Joseph implying that she was a minor under the age of twelve and a half. After that age she could become his wife. Thus the "virgin" Mary could have given birth. If she did, the truth was misunderstood in the gentile world of the Roman Empire, and indeed beyond, where it was de rigeur not only for gods but also great men to be born of virgins. Ra, Hatshepsut, Amenophis III, Cyrus the Great, Julius Caesar, Perseus, Plato, Apollonius of Tyana, Fohi, Lao Kium, Zoroaster and Attis all came of virgin births according to their followers.

Herodotus explained that such conceptions occurred by way of a ray of light and according to Plutarch's book on Isis and Osiris it entered through the ear. Tertullian confirms it was a ray of light. Thus medieval pictures of Mary at the moment of conception show a ray of light entering her ear. Furthermore it is common for gods and those akin to gods to have mothers called Mary or a cognate name. Adonis was born of Myrrha, Hermes of Maia, Cyrus of Mariana or Mandane, Joshua of Miriam, Buddha of Maya and Khrishna of Maritala.

Many are the cases noted in history of young maidens claiming a paternity for their male offspring by a God.

Mr. Kenrick tells us the likeness of this virgin mother, with the divine child in her arms, may now be seen represented in sculpture on some of the ancient, ruined temples of that ruined empire. And Mr. Higgins (Anacalypsis) makes the broad declaration that "the worship of this virgin mother, with her God-begotten child, prevailed everywhere." This author also quotes Mr. Riquord as saying, this son of God "was exhibited in effigy, lying in a manger, in the same manner the infant Jesus was afterward laid in the cave at Bethlehem." Mr. Higgins further testifies that the worship of this virgin God-mother (that is, the God and the mother) is of very ancient date and universal prevalence in all the eastern countries, as is proved by sculptured figures bearing the marks of great age. By the way, the reprint of Anacalypsis is available on the Internet...I recommend it very highly if you want to get to the truth about many of the doctrines of Christendom.

Mr. Higgins remarks that the mother was still held to be a virgin, even after she had given birth to other children besides the deity-begotten bantling, which furnishes another striking parallel to the history of Mary, the mother of Jesus, as she was still called a virgin after she had given birth to Jesus and his brothers James and John. And it is an incident worth noticing here, that, in the case of Mayence, virgin-mother of the God-sired Hesus of the Druids, the ancient traditions of the country, more than two thousand years old, represent her body as being enveloped in light, and a crown of twelve stars upon her head, corresponding exactly to the apocalyptic figure described by St. John, in the twelfth chapter of his Revelation. She is also represented with her foot on the head of a serpent, according to Davie's Universal Etymology.

In corroboration of this statement one only needs to examine the evidence existing today of such legends; such evidence from the religious records of India, Egypt, Persia, Greece, Rome, Mexico, Tibet, etc.

Maia, mother of Sakia and Yasoda of Chrishna; Celestine, mother of the crucified Zunis; Chimalman, mother of Quexalcote; Semele, mother of the Egyptian Bacchus, and Minerva, mother of the Grecian Bacchus; Prudence, mother of Hercules; Alcmene, mother of Alcides; Shing- Mon, mother of Yu, and Mayence, mother of Hesus, were all as confidently believed to be pure, holy and chaste virgins, while giving birth to these Gods, sons of God, Saviors and sin-atoning Mediators, as was Mary, mother of Jesus, and long before her time.

Ceres, the virgin mother of Osiris, claimed that he was begotten by the "father of all Gods."

In Greece it became so common that the reigning king issued an edict, decreeing the death of all young women who should offer such an insult to deity as to lay to him the charge of begetting their children. The virgin Alcmene furnishes a case of a young woman claiming God as the father of her offspring, when she brought forth the divine Redeemer Alcides, 1280 years B.C.

Auguste Nichols tells us, in his Philosophical Essays on Christianity, that Io is called, in Eschylus, "the Chaste Virgin," and her son "the Son of God" If you would like to see other example you need look no further than Guigne's History of the Huns.

Gonzales informs us he found on an ancient temple in India the Latin inscription 'Partura, virginis,' "the virgin about to bring forth." And similar inscriptions have been found on pagan temples in the country of the ancient Gauls (Riquord's Theology of the Ancient Gauls, Chapter X.).

"He who hath ears to hear, let him hear," and treasure up these facts. According to Chinese history there were two beings -- Tien and Chang-Ti -- worshiped in that country as Gods more than twenty- five hundred years ago, born of virgins "who knew no man." The mother of the mighty and the almighty God Hercules, we are told, "knew only Jove."

If history and tradition, then, are to be credited, God had many "well-beloved sons," born of pious and holy virgins, besides Jesus Christ. And some of them are represented as being his only begotten," and others his "first begotten," sons. And all these cases appear to be equally as well authenticated as the story of Jesus Christ. All stand upon a level, the same kind and the same amount of evidence being offered in each case.

THE BLACK VIRGIN

Curiously, several of the above-named Saviors are represented as being black, Jesus Christ included with this number. There is as much evidence that the Christian Savior was a black man, or at least a dark man, as there is of his being the son of the Virgin Mary, or that he once lived and moved upon the earth. And that evidence is the testimony of his disciples, who had nearly as good an opportunity of knowing what his complexion was as the evangelists, who omit to say anything about it. In the pictures and portraits of Christ by the early Christians, he is uniformly represented as being black. And to make this the more certain, the red tinge is given to the lips; and the only text in the Christian bible quoted by orthodox Christians, as describing his complexion, represents it as being black. Solomon's declaration, "I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem" (Sol. i. 5), is often cited as referring to Christ. According to the bible itself, then, Jesus Christ was a black man.

But a little background into the "black virgin." Hundreds of icons of Mary have intentionally black faces and hands. In France they are called "Vierge Noires" or Black Virgins; in other countries they are called Black Madonnas. Some call her "the other Mary"; Jung said she is Isis; others consider her to be the iconic remains of prehistoric Earth Mother worship. She is linked with Cybele, Diana, Isis & Venus; cross-culturally she is associated with Kali, Inanna & Lilith. Historically she has ties to the Crusades and the Moorish occupation of Spain, to the Conquistadors, who brought her to the New World, and to the Merovingians and Knights Templars, who saw her as Mary Magdalene. As Sara-la-Kali she is revered by the Gypsies at Saintes Maries de la Mer. For modern psychologists she is said to express the archetype of the Dark Feminine. Whoever the enigmatic Black Virgin may be, she holds a powerful attraction for her millions of devotees around the world. Her sacred sites stand on highly charged earth energy centers, enhanced by megalithic ley-lines and sacred architecture. From ancient times to present, people have undertaken pilgrimages to her shrines as a way to explore her mysteries and to enable her to do her miraculous work of healing, transformation and inspiration. France has more than 300 Black Virgin sites, with over 150 Black Virgins still in existence.

Answer for yourself: It is believed by many that Jesus will return to this planet as Messiah. Let us suppose that, at some future time, he makes his second advent to the earth, as some Christians anticipate he will do, and that he comes in the character of a "black" Messiah, how would he be received negro-hating Christians or the sons of the Aryan nations?

Answer for yourself: Would they worship a negro God?

THE LINK TO ASTROLOGY

And the tradition of divine Saviors being born of undefiled and undeflowered virgins has an astronomical chapter we must not omit to notice. The virgin, with her God-begotten child, was pictured imaginarily in the heavens from time immemorial. They are represented on the Hindu zodiac, at least three thousand years old, and on the ancient Egyptian planispheres. And if you will examine Burritt's Geography of the Heavens, you will find the infant God-son (the sun) is represented as being born into a new year on the 25th of December (the very date assigned for Christ's birth), and may be seen rising over the eastern horizon, out of Mary, Maria, or Mare (the Latin for sea), with the infant God in her arms, being heralded and preceded by a bright star, which rises immediately preceding the virgin and her child, thus suggesting the text, "We have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him." (Matt. 2:8).

If you have not you need to refresh yourself with the 280 cycle from the vernal equinox to Dec. 25 which the ancients believed was the gestation of the Sun-god impregnation of "mother earth." The ancients believed this "child god" was to be born of a Virgin. This, of course represents the constellation of Virgo. Virgo had command of teh Fall equinox at the time this passage was edited by the Gentile priesthood. And Virgo, as such, represented the fall of the fetus in the third trimester, before it's birth. A human fetus enter's it's third trimester after 186-187 days. The Fall equinox, Sept. 22 (when the fetus falls toward the vagina, birth) is 186 days from the Conception at the vernal equinox (March. 21). Again, we see the link between the human body and the Cosmos and the ancients interpreted this as man being made in the image of the Cosmos which delcared to them God.

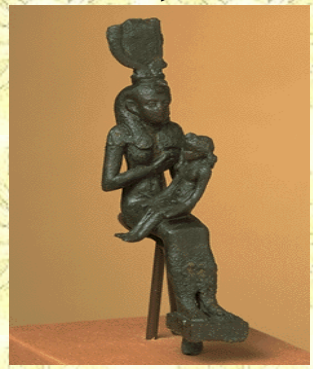
Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence and is the writers of the New Testament relating "truth" when they write of the birth of Jesus? Where is the Holy Spirit in any of this?

Such facts led the learned Alphonso to exclaim:

"The adventures of Jesus Christ are all depicted among the stars"



And such facts fasten the conviction on our mind that the stories of Gods cohabiting with young maids or virgins, and begetting other Gods, is of astrological origin -- the story of Jesus Christ included. A critical research shows that astronomy and religion were interblended, interwoven, and confounded together at a very early period of time, so indissolubly, that it now becomes impossible to separate them (at least without a considerable amount of study and finanes to procure the necessary documents for inspection).

INDIAN AND EGYPTIAN MYTHOLOGY

This Virgin, of whom the Sun, the true "Savior of Mankind," is born, is neither the bright and beautiful Dawn, or the dark Earth, or Night. Hence we have, as we have already seen if your have read the prior articles, the "Virgin," or "Virgo," as one of the signs of the Zodiac. The sign of the "Celestial Virgin" rises above the horizon at the moment in which we fix the birth of the Lord Jesus Christ (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 314, and Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 147). We have in the first decade the Sign of the Virgin, following the most ancient tradition of the Persians, the Chaldeans, the Egyptians, Hermes and Aesculapius, a young woman called in the Persian language, "Selinidos de Darzama; in the Arabic, Aderenedesa-that is to say, a chaste, pure, immaculate virgin, suckling an infant, which some nations call Jesus (Savior), but which we in Greek call "Christ" (Abulmazer). As a Christian you need to understand that this is the origin of the Mary and Jesus statues you see in many Catholic Churches. From this would come a whole host of "false doctrines" believed by millions today.

The "Dawn" was personified by the ancients as a "virgin mother, who bore the Sun" (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 156). In Sanskrit "Ida" is the "Earth," the wife of Dyaus (the Sky), and so we have before us the mythical phrase, "the Sun at its birth rest on the earth." In other words, "the Sun at birth is nursed in the lap of the mother." The moment we understand the "nature" of a myth, all impossibilities, contradictions, and immoralities disappear. If a mythical personage be nothing more than a name of the Sun, his birth may be derived from ever so many different mothers. He may be the son of the Sky or the Dawn or of the Sea or of the Night (Renouf's Hibbert Lectures, p. 108).

This Celestial Virgin was feigned to be a mother. This Celestial Virgin is represented in the Indian Zodiac of Sr. William Jones, with ears of corn in one hand, and the lotus in the other. In Kircher's Zodiac of Hermes, she has corn in both hands. In other planispheres of the Egyptian priests she carries ears of corn in one hand, and the infant Savior Horus in the other. In Roman Catholic countries, she is generally represented with the child in one hand, and the lotus or lily in the other. In Vol. II. of Montfaucon's work, she is represented as a female nursing a child, with ears of corn in her hand, and the legend IAO. She is seated on clouds, a star is at her head. The reading of the Greek letters, from right to left, show this to be very ancient.

In the Vedic hymns Aditi, the "Dawn," is called the "Mother of the Gods." She is said to have given birth to the Sun (Max Muller, Origin of Religions, p. 261). "As the Sun and all the solar deities rise from the east," says Prof. M. Muller, "we can understand how Aditi (Dawn) came to be called the "Mother of the Bright Gods" (Ibid. p. 230). The poets of the Veda indulged in theogonic speculations and they knew of Indra as the greatest of gods, they knew of Agni as the god of gods, they knew of Varuna as the ruler of all; but they were by no means startled at the idea that their Indra had a mother, or that Varuna was nursed in the lap of Aditi. All this was true to nature; for their god was the Sun, and the mother who born and nursed him was the Dawn. Without scarcely an exception, all the names by which the "Virgin goddess" of the Akropolis was known point to this mythology of the Dawn (Cox, Aryan Myths, vol. i. p 228).

We find in the Vishnu Purana, that Devaki (the virgin mother of the Hindu Savior Chrishna, whose history corresponds in most every particular with that of Christ Jesus who would come over 800 years later) is called Aditi, which, in the Rig-Veda, is the name for the Dawn. Thus we see the legend is complete. Devaki is Aditi, Aditi is the Dawn, and the Dawn is the Virgin Mother. "The Savior of mankind," who is born of her is the Sun, the Sun is Chrishna, and Chrishna is Christ.

In the Mahabharata, Chrishna is also represented as the "Son of Aditi" (Cox, Aryan Myths, vol. iii, pp. 105, and 130, vol. ii). In other words, Chrishna is the son of the "Virgin Mother" as is the Christ.

Indra, the Sun, who was worshipped in some parts of India as the Crucified God, is also represented in the Vedic hymns as the Son of the Dawn. He is said to have been born of Dahana, who is Daphne, a personification of the Dawn (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 118).

The humanity of this SOLAR GOD-MAN, this demiurge, is strongly insisted on in the Rig-Vida. He is the son of God, but also the son of Aditi. He is Purusha, the man, the male. Agni is frequently called the "Son of man." It is expressly explained that the titles Agni, Indra, Mitra, etc., all refer to one Sun-god under "many names." And when we find the name of a mortal, Yama, who once lived upon earth, included among these names, the humanity of the demiurge becomes still more accentuated, and we get at the root idea.

Horus, the Egyptian Savior, was the son of the virgin Isis. Now, this Isis, in Egyptian mythology, is the same as the virgin Devaki in Hindu mythology. She is the Dawn (Renouf, Hibbert Lectures, p. 111 and 161). Isis, as we have already seen, is represented suckling the infant Horus, and, in the words of Prof. Renouf, we may say, "in whose lap can the Sun be nursed more fitly than in that of the Dawn" (Ibid., p. 161, 179).

Among the goddesses of Egypt, the highest was Neith, who reigned inseparable with Amun in the upper sphere. She was called "Mother of the gods," "Mother of the sun." She was the femine origin of all things, as Amun was the male origin. She held the same rank at Sais as Amun did at Thebes. Her temples there are said to have exceeded in colossal grandeur anything every seen before. On one of these was the celebrated inscription thus deciphered by Champollion:

I am all that has been, all that is, all that will be. No mortal has ever raised the veil that conceals me. My offspring is the Sun

She was mother of the Sun-god Ra, and is commonly supposed to represent Heaven; but some expressions which are hardly applicable to heaven, render it more probable that she is one of the many names of the (Ibid., p. 179).

GREEK MYTHOLOGY

If we turn from Indian and Egyptian, to Grecian mythology, we shall also find that their Sun-gods and solar heroes are born of the same virgin mother. Theseus was said to have been born of Aithra, "the pure air," and Cedipus of Iokaste, "the violet light of morning." Perseus was born of the virgin Danae, and was called the "Son of the bright morning" (Tales of Ancient Greece, pp. xxxi). In Io, the mother of the "sacred bull, the mother also of Hercules, we see the violet-tinted morning from which the sun is born; all these gods and heroes being, like Christ Jesus, personifications of the Sun (Cox, Aryan Myths, vol. i. p. 229). The bull symbolized the productive force in nature, and hence it was associated with the Sun-gods. This animal was venerated by nearly all the peoples of antiquity (Wake, Phallism in Anct. Religs. p. 45).

"The Savior of Mankind" was also represented as being born of the "dusky mother," which accounts for many Pagan, and so-called Christian, goddesses being represented black. This is the "dark night," who for many weary hours travails with the birth of her child. The Sun, which scatters the darkness, is also the child of the darkness, and so the phrase naturally went "that he was born of her." Of the two legends related in the poems afterwards combined in the "Hymn to Apollo," the former relates the birth of Apollo, the Sun, from Leto, the Darkness, which is called his mother. The idea was entertained by the ancients that these god-begotten heroes were engendered without any carnal intercourse, and that they were they sons of Jupiter. This idea is later expanded and relates that such "virgin births" comes from the idea that the Holy Spirit was operating in some fashion on the virgin mother Earth (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. 156).

The dark earth was also represented as being the mother of the god Sun, who apparently came out of, or was born of her, in the East, as Minos (the sun) was represented to have been born of Ida (the earth) (Cox, Aryan Myths, p. 87).

In Hindu mythology, the Earth, under the name of Prithivi, receives a certain share of honors as one of the primitive goddesses of the Veda, being thought of as the "kind mother." Moreover, various deities were regarded as the progeny resulting from the fancied union of the Earth with Dyaus (Heaven).

Our Aryan forefathers looked up to the heavens and they gave it the name of Dyaus, from a root word which means "to shine." And when, out of the forces and forms of nature, they afterwards fashioned other gods, this name Dyaus became Dyaus pitar, the Heaven-father, or Lord of All; and in far later times, when the wester Aryans had found their home in Europe, the Dyaus pitar of the central Asian land became the Zeupater of the Greeks, and the Jupiter of the Romans, and the first part of his name gave us the word Deity.

According to Egyptian mythology, Isis was also the Earth (Williams, Hinduism, p. 24). Again, from the union of Seb and Nut sprung the mild Osiris, Seb in the Earth, Nut in Heaven, and Osiris is the Sun (Renouf's Hibbert Lectures, p.110-111).

Tacitus, the Roman historian, speaking of the Germans in A.D. 98, says:

There is nothing in these several tribes that merits attention, except that they all agree in worshipping the goddess Earth, or as they call her, Herth, whom they consider as the common mother of all (Manners of the Germans, p. xi).

These virgin mothers and virgin goddesses of antiquity, were also, at times, personifications of the Moon, or of Nature (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, pp. 81, 90, and 166). The moon was called by the ancients, "The Queen," "The Highest Princess," "The Queen of Heaven," "The Princess and Queen of Heaven," etc. She was Ishtar, Ashera, Diana, Artemis, Isis, Juno, Lucina, Astarte,etc. (Goldzhier, pp. 158; Knight, pp. 99-100).

Answer for yourself: Who is "God the Father," who overshadows the maiden?

The overshadowing of the maiden by "God the Father," whether he be called Zeus, Jupiter, or Jehovah, is simply the Heaven, the Sky, the "All-Father," looking down upon with love, and overshadowing the maiden, the broad flushing light of Dawn, or the Earth. From this union the Sun is born without any carnal intercourse. (virgin birth). The mother is not yet a virgin. This is illustrated in Hindu mythology by the union of Pritrivi, "Mother Earth," with Dyaus, "Heaven." Various deities were regarded as their progeny. The "God the Father" of all nations of antiquity was nothing more than a personification of the Sky or the Heavens. In one of the Chinese sacred books, the Shu-king, Heaven and Earth are called "Father and Mother of all things" (Taylor, Primitive Culture, pp. 294-296). The "God the Father" of the Indians is Dyaus, that is, the Sky (Williams, Hinduism, p. 24). Ormuzd, the god of the ancient Persians, was a personification of the sky. In Greek iconography Zeus is the Heaven. The Christian God supreme is still Dyaus Pitar, the "Heavenly Father."

NOW PAY ATTENTION: THE SUN BECOME THE SON!!!!!!!!!!

In the Vedic hymns the Sun, the Lord and Savior, the Redeemer and Preserver of mankind, is frequently called the "Son of the Sky" (Muller, Origin of Religions, pp. 261, 290).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the Sun is now become the "Son"? Get ready for incarnational theology for here it comes.

According to Egyptian mythology, Seb (the Earth) is overshadowed by Nut (Heaven), the result of this union being the beneficent Lord and Savior, Osiris (Renouf, Hebbert Lectures, pp. 110-111). The same thing is to be found in ancient Grecian mythology. Zeus or Jupiter is the Sky, and Danae, Leto, Iokaste, Io and others, are the Dawn, or the violet light of morning (Cox, Tales of Ancient Greece, pp. xxxi, and 82; and Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 229).

The sky appeared to men to perform the functions of a Father, as the Earth those of a Mother. The sky was the father, for it cast seed into the bosom of the earth (rain), which in receiving them became fruitful, and brought forth, and was the mother...Plutarch

The Phoenician theogony is founded on the same principles. Heaven and Earth (called Ouranos and Ghe) are at the head of a genealogy of aeons, whose adventures are conceived in the mythological style of these physical allegorists (Squire, Serpent Symbol, p. 66).

In the Samothracian mysteries, which seem to have been the most anciently established ceremonies of the kind in Europe, the Heaven and the Earth were worshipped as a male and female divinity, and as the parents of all things (Squire, Serpent Symbol, p. 64).

The Supreme God (the Al-fader), of the ancient Scandinavians was Odin, a personification of the Heavens. The principal goddess among them was Frigga, a personification of the Earth. It was the opinion among these people that this Supreme Being or Celestial God had united with the Earth (Frigga) to produce "Baldur the Good" (the Sun), who corresponds to the Apollo of the Greeks and Romans, and the Osiris of the Egyptians (Mallet, Northern Antiquitiess, pp. 90, 94, 98. 406, 510, 511).

Xiuletl, in the Mexican language, signifies Blue, and hence was a name which the Mexicans gave to Heaven, from which Xiuleti-cutli is derived, an epithet signifying "the God of Heaven," which they bestowed upon Tezcatlipoca, who was the "Lord of All," the "Supreme God." He it was who overshadowed the Virgin of Tule, Chimelman, who began the Savior Quetzalcoatle (the Sun).

Now I could go on but you get the point. As you have seen, the overshadowing of the Earth by the Sky produced the Sun. It would be a short step from personification to glorification to deification. And as you also saw, as far back as the Vedic hymns the Sun, the Lord and Savior, the Redeemer and Preserver of mankind, is frequently called the "Son of the Sky" (Muller, Origin of Religions, pp. 261, 290). It is this concept later accepted by Nicea that made Jesus "of the same essence as the Father;" therefore the Son is equal with the Father. This is how idolatry and Sun Worship crept into the faith of the early church and remains there today!

But back to the point, the whole concept of the immaculate virgin births of pagan godmen is found in the overshadowing of the Earth by the Sun thus producing the offspring of the Sun and Earth; namely the Son.

Answer for yourself: Now don't you think that these beliefs among the Gentiles of the world played a large part in the fashioning of many doctrines "about Jesus?' Could it be possible such doctrines were "read into the life of Jesus" by non-Jews who had ingrained anit-Semitism? Is is possible that they made "Jesus equal with God" and recorded such "beliefs" in documents that you have come to believe today are "inerrant" and "infallible"

(New Testament)?

Answer for yourself: Is the evidence not overwhelming? Where is a Jewish Rabbi to be found in any of this whose purpose was to bring men to God by preaching repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God?

Answer for yourself: As a Christian, could you have inherited and believed lies instead of the truths about the "historical Jesus" which fly in the face of such pagan traditions?

MABON...AUTUMNAL EQUINOX (AROUND 21st SEPTEMBER)

Jer 10:2 2 Thus saith the L-RD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. (KJV)

ALTERNATE NAMES

Celtic 'Festival of the Vine'

DRUIDIC NAME

Alban Elfed or Alban Elued (Light of the Water)

CHRISTIAN EQUIVALENT

Saint Matthew's Day

PLACE IN THE NATURAL CYCLE

Mabon is the solar festival that marks the transition from the light to the dark half of the year: day and night are of equal length. On this day, the sun rises due east and sets due west. The autumn quarter of the year runs from Lughnassadh to Samhain, so Mabon marks the mid-point of autumn. By Mabon, the land is showing clear signs of the journey towards winter - leaves are beginning to turn and birds are gathering for migration.

FURTHER DETAILS

The Autumn Equinox not only brings the world again to a time of balance, but also to the second harvest. This is a time of preparation for the cold months ahead. Many take their cue from the balance of day and night and resolve to equalize within themselves anything that they believe to be "tipping the scales". It is important for them to strive toward a balance of mind, body and spirit during this time in order to be prepared for the sometimes depressing, colder months ahead. The nights grow longer and colder now (a picture of death). The Sun god is overtaken by the darkness which will reign supreme from until Yule (again a picture of death....as we see in Osiris's death). The lengthening nights cause the goddess to grow tired and weak and she prepares to sleep through the long Winter. To help His children survive the coming season, the Green Man returns to the Earth, sheds His leaves and vines and is reborn as the Horned god with the antlers and fur of the animals He must protect. Thus begins the reign of the Horned god, Father and Protector of those trying to survive the long, cold nights.

Mabon is the time of the second harvest, when fruits are ready for collection. In Celtic mythology, Mabon was the Young God, abducted and imprisoned, only to return at a later date. This is thus an appropriate title for the day on which darkness gains the upper hand over light until the following equinox, Ostara. Mabon is the point at which, conceptually at least, the Sun enters the sign of Libra, the Scales or Balance - the most appropriate sign for this day of perfect balance between darkness and light.

Jer 10:2 2 Thus saith the L-RD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. (KJV)

THE VEGETATION GODS

Christ and the religion he is said to have founded are composite products, made up, to a great extent, of the attributes, the doctrines, and the customs of the gods and the religions which preceded them and existed around them. The Christian believes that Christ is coexistent with his father, Jehovah -- that he has existed from the foundations of the world. This is in a measure true. The years that have elapsed since his alleged incarnation are few compared with the years of his gestation in the intellectual womb of humanity.

To understand the origin and nature of Christ and Christianity it is necessary to know something of the religious systems and doctrines from which they were evolved.

Since the Dawn of Time, Man has always relied on Mother Nature for survival. So it may come as no surprise that Man developed "religion" as a way to explain all that was happening around them. The World was full of Magick and Enchantment! The Mysteries of Life were all around! Mankind was unable to explain all that was going on, thus they believed a "higher power" was in control of the events Mother Nature produced. To better understand this "higher power", Mankind started personalizing this power by giving it Male and Female aspects. These aspects were then given names and characteristics to coincide with the events that they were witnessing. They began seeking guidance and hope from these Deities by worshipping those that best fit their needs. Over time the Gods of Old began to take on two major distinctions. The fact that Mankind needed plants and animals to survive lead to the development of the Earth Goddess (representing plants and water) and the Horned God (representing the horned livestock they needed for food and clothing). These two major Deities soon became the focus of many religions because of the necessities that they represented.

It is these two Deities that most Pagans recognize in their prayers and ritual. We will now look at individual examples to elaborate upon this point. Plutarch says that the sky or heavens was thought to function as a father and the earth as a mother. So, too, according to Virgil, all things, human, animal, and vegetable, were the result of intercourse between Jupiter (the god of the heavens) and Juno (the earth-goddess).

One of the oldest forms of worship is that of trees. The oak was dedicated to Jupiter, the laurel to Apollo, the bo-tree to Gotama. In ancient Britain, the Druids worshipped their supreme god Aesus in the form of an oak-tree. In India, it was customary for every woman to be married to a tree. Generally speaking, in the various mythologies, those trees and plants which produced fruit or seeds were considered to be female and all others male.

There is plenty of evidence in the Bible that tree-worship was rampant among the Israelites, as well as among other races. The earliest reference is in connection with the temptation of Adam and Eve. This worship of trees, however, was something far different from the personification of every individual tree which is a feature of primitive animism. The tree of life in the Garden of Eden was symbolical of the male and female reproductive elements, the tree itself representing the male and the fruit the female principle. Eating the forbidden fruit was a figurative method of describing the sex act.

Those who were not worshipping the phallic Yahweh, were prostrating themselves before another equally phallic deity: the god Chemosh, or the god Milcom, or the goddess Ashtoreth (I kings. 11:33). King Manasseh and King Amon worshipped the sky, the sun, and the stars, they raised altars to Baal; in short, they were phallic worshippers of the first order. Solomon exceeded the lot of them in his devotion to phallicism.

The delineation of the deity in the form of a tree was followed by the worship of his image in the shape of a statue, or symbolically as a pillar.

It was natural that figs, being the fruit of the tree of life, should have close phallic associations. The leaves of the tree were used for making aprons to cover male and female nudity, a practice which still persists in relation to the statues exhibited in many of our museums. The shape of the fig resembling somewhat that of the female womb, came to be blessed with the same attributes, and to symbolize the womb of the "Mother goddess". Thus phallic statues, in all lands where the fig-tree flourished, were carved from the wood, and the tree itself was dedicated to Bacchus. Plutarch tells us that the phalli carried through the streets in connection with the festivals of Priapus, were made from the wood of the tree, and that a basket of figs featured prominently in the procession.

How important a part the pine cone played in the worship of Bacchus has been described by Inman (Ancient Faiths, Vol. ii, p. 491) and portrayed by Maffei in 1725 (cf. p. 125). In nearly every mythology, including that of Christianity, the association of worship of the virgin with the water-lily is significant (the lotus as a symbol of androgynity). The apple tree was universally worshipped, its fruit being considered an emblem of generation as well as an aphrodisiac.

Just as many primitive tribes believed that the human race owed its origin to certain animals, other tribes thought their ancestors were trees or plants, especially where there was observable some real or fancied point of resemblance between the shape or characteristics of the tree or plant and man or woman. Thus the oak tree, says Wall (Sex and Sex Worship, p. 129), was considered by the ancient Teutons to be of the male sex, "because the acorn looks like a glans penis with its prepuce (acorn in its cupule)."

For very similar reasons, the pomegranate was symbolical of the female womb in a state of pregnancy, and the immense number of seeds which it contains made it a suitable emblem for a prolific mother goddess. We find the pomegranate featured in the ornamentation of the temples in many lands. It is said to have been displayed prominently in the temple of Solomon. The ancient pagan goddesses, Astarte, ishtar, and Ashtoreth, were frequently adorned with the fruit, as in modern times was the Virgin Mary.

The phallic associations of the mandrake were due partly to the striking resemblance of its root to the scrotum of man, and partly because of its reputed aphrodisiacal qualities, to which we find tribute given in the Bible.µ Similar roots, in Japan (Ninjin) and in China (Ginseng), are held in high repute, and the prices which they realize are dependent upon the extent to which they "resemble the human form. In some instances this resemblance is remarkable" (Edmund Buckley, Phallicism in Japan, University of Chicago Press, 1895, p. 17).

The lotus, or Egyptian water-lily, was worshipped by the Tartars, the Japanese, and the Chinese, as a symbol of the reproductive power in nature. Floating on the water like a boat, to the Hindus it is the emblem of the world, the whole plant indicating the earth and the two principles of fecundation. The germ is both Méru, and the Lingam: the petals and filaments are the mountains which encircle Méru, and are also a type of the Yoni; the leaves of the calyx are the four vast regions to the cardinal points of Méru; and the leaves of the plants are the dwipas or isles round the land of Jambu (Lieut. Francis Wilford, Asiatic Researches, 1799, Vol. III, p. 364). Plants analogous to the lotus were used in other countries to symbolize the female part in creation, or as emblems of fecundity. Cinteotl, the Mexican fertility goddess, is sometimes represented bearing in her hand a water plant similar to the lotus.

A feature of this plant is the large number of seeds contained in the fruit. This characteristic suggests a phallic significance, while its self. fertilizing power makes it peculiarly suitable for symbolizing the androgynous creative god. The deities of various nations are represented seated upon a lotus plant.

I could go on but by now you get the point. The deified hermaphroditic First Principle in creation was visualized as the emanation of an ethereal spirit which pervaded the whole universe, impregnating with its own essence everything with which it came into contact. A recipient of the emanated or diffused spirit therefore became of the same substance and could be worshipped as the deity. Thus the multiplication of gods and goddesses and of their representatives. "Even those who worship other gods," says the incarnate deity in an ancient Indian poem, "worship me although they know it not." The conception went further than this, however. The creative spirit was continually flowing from and reverting back to its source in various modes and degrees of progression and regression, something in the way that water flows to and from the ocean. As a result of this cosmogony, mankind, animals, trees, and vegetables even, were all supposed to be impregnated with the nature and characteristics of the deity (R. Payne Knight, op. cit.).

Coupled with what you have learned about the interrelationship with the Sun and it's influence upon nature along with mankind's personification of these observations of the various forces in Heaven and Earth the picture become more clear as to how Christianity was a synthesis of these three areas of primitive pagan beliefs.

Through the personification by primitive man of these forces of Heaven and Nature he associated concepts held to be Divine to vegetation in nature as you saw above.

GODS WHO DIE

ATTIS AND THE GREAT MOTHER GODDESS, CYBELE

Cybele was worshipped for over 500 years. She was the Great Mother of All Things: the Mater Deum Magna - Great Mother of the Gods, and of men, animals and plants. She was a mother of nature and a Mountain Mother - her shrines were often on mountains and in caves. She was identified with several other mother goddesses including Demeter and Gaia. She was, in her loving and comforting aspect, the equivalent of Isis, Hera, Juno and the Christians' Mary. But she also had a destructive aspect in which she signified the unknown, the unconscious and mysterious, the magical and intuitive qualities women in particular are considered to have. She is then Astarte, Luna, Hecate, Kali. Cybele was represented by a black meteorite set in the face of a silver statue. Worship of Cybele arose in the prehistoric Phrygian Empire of Asia Minor. The main centre of the cult came to be Pessinus in Galatia. In 204 BC the Sibylline Oracle prophesied that enemies of Rome would be defeated if the Great Mother were taken from Pessinus to Rome. The cult and her symbol, the small black meteorite, were duly moved to Rome and established in 191 BC on the Palatine Hill in the heart of the city. Later the cult incorporated that of Attis who probably never had any following independent of her. The High Priest or Archigallus of Cybele was identified with Attis.

Her priests, the Galli, were eunuchs with hair perfumed and dressed with oils. Priests, priestesses, acolytes and initiates celebrated her rites with fast music and wild dancing until in a frenzy the participants exhausted and finally mutilated themselves by castration becoming candidates for the priesthood. Even the phlegmatic Romans were shocked at first by these rites and at first Roman citizens were banned from participating in them. The ban was not lifted until the beginning of the Empire but then Attis and Cybele worship became one of the three main religions along with those of Isis and Mithras. It made its last appearance under the pagan revival of Eugenius in AD 394.

These, to our mind, horrific rites came from the myth of Attis. Attis was a handsome Phrygian shepherd, the "Good Shepherd", the son of Cybele. Cybele loved her son intensely but Attis fell in love with a nymph and jealousy overcame the mother. In a rage she cast a spell of madness on Attis and he castrated himself at the foot of a pine tree. As his life blood dripped to the earth violets sprang up. Cybele, full of remorse took the body to a cave and wept. She first buried Attis at Pessinus but then used her power to restore him to life and they were reunited. She founded the cult with Attis the priest and made the pine tree sacred.

Just as Jesus acknowledged Yahweh as his senior, Cybele, the mother, is the senior of Attis. Like Yahweh, whose anger at mankind's disobedience could only be assuaged through the death of his son, Cybele's jealous anger could only be assuaged through the death of her son. Cybele's most solemn ritual was the Taurobolium, a sacrifice of a bull, like Mithra's. The blood flowed through the slats of the sacrificial platform. The initiate standing below thereby became "born again". People who could not afford a bull made do with a sheep and were described as "washed in the blood of the lamb".

The festival of Cybele and Attis was at the vernal equinox in the spring (remember the nature and spring festivals connected with the vernal equinox and the rebirth of the earth at spring due to the sun's resurrection from the death of the darkness of winter?). During the reign of Claudius shortly after the crucifixion this was from 15 to 27 March. The calendar was:

15 March - The "reed bearers" enter and a six year old bull is sacrificed.

22 March - A pine (type of a cross) is felled representing the death of the god. The acolytes and initiates proceed to the Temple of Cybele with the sacred pine bearing the effigy of the god in its branches. The tree is laid to rest at the Temple of Cybele.

24 March - The "day of blood". The effigy of Attis is buried in a tomb and a day of mourning, fasting, sexual abstinence and flagellation commemorating the Mother's sorrow follows. The High Priest playing the part of Attis draws blood from his arm and offers it as a substitute for a human sacrifice. Attis, symbolically, becomes the substitute for human sacrifice. That night the tomb is found brightly illuminated but empty, the god having risen on the third day. Initiates undertake the Mysteries and are baptized in bull's blood at the Taurobolium to wash away their sins whereupon they are "born again". They then become ecstatic and frenzied and sometimes castrate themselves in imitation of the god.

25 March - Hilaria: the resurrection of Attis and the onset of spring is celebrated with a sacramental meal and a day of joy and feasting. Those who castrated themselves become Galli - cocks - dress in women's clothes and wear perfumed oils.

26 March - A quiet day of rest and recovery;

27 March - The conclusion of the festival with a procession in which the statue of the goddess, meteorite embedded in her brow, is majestically carried to her temple and a series of religious dramas and entertainments follows.

Clay statues of the gods were made in ancient times just as tawdry statues of saints are sold today at Catholic shrines. Attis was depicted in his death throes drenched in blood, then serene after his resurrection, androgynous, released from his worldly sins and surrounded by solar rays. Or he was shown as a child, naked and dancing for joy. Cybele was depicted much like the virgin Mary with a baby or babies. An ancient figure of a Madonna and child in a church at Enna in Sicily was actually Cybele in her role of corn goddess (Demeter) and her daughter Persephone. The church was on a site formerly dedicated to the goddess. Pope Pius IX had the statues moved to a museum. The Black Madonnas of Italy are also on sites dedicated to Demeter, and the virgin of Chartres Cathedral was taken from a pagan alter.

Attis, the "Good Shepherd", was extremely popular in the Empire around the time of Christ. His death and resurrection were celebrated at the time of year we would call Easter. The "reed bearers" of Attis compare directly with the palm bearers of the entry into Jerusalem and the procession of the tree compares directly with the procession along the Via Dolorosa today when believing Christians enact the carrying of the cross, symbolically a tree. The effigy of the god Attis on the tree meant that ritually the god was hanged from a tree, like Jesus. The High Priest draws blood to symbolize the shedding of blood by the god for the good of men, just as Jesus is believed to have shed his blood for the salvation of believers. The brightly illuminated empty tomb directly parallels the Christian legend, the god having risen on the third day. The resurrection was celebrated with a sacramental meal and initiates baptized with blood to wash away their sins were born again.

The site of a sanctuary to Attis on the Vatican Hill is where now stands the Church of St Peter! In countries where Attis was revered 25 March was adopted as the date of Jesus's passion and crucifixion rather than the moveable feast that was later adopted as Easter. Hilaria, 25 March is precisely nine months before the official birthday of Jesus on 25 December. It is therefore the day on which Jesus was considered to have been miraculously conceived of God. The Church celebrates it as Lady Day. One of the titles of Cybele was Domina - the Lady! It is difficult for any rational man to regard all of this as coincidence.

THE CELESTIAL VIRGIN OF SUN WORSHIP.....BECOMES THE VIRGIN MARY OF CHRISTIANITY

This Celestial Virgin was feigned to be a mother. She is represented in the Indian Zodiac of Sr. William Jones, with ears of corn in one hand, and the lotus in the other. In Kircher's Zodiac of Hermes, she has corn in both hands. In other planispheres of the Egyptian priests she, carries ears of corn in one hand, and the infant Savior Horus in the other (Isis and Horus). In Roman Catholic countries, she is generally represented with the child in one hand, and the lotus or lily in the other. In Vol. II. of Montfaucon's work, she is represented as a female nursing a child, with ears of corn in her hand, and the legend IAO. We find "these" stories captured in stone as nation after nation has this same Sun Myth revealed in their architecture. She is seated on clouds, a star is at her head. The reading of the Greek letters, from right to left, show this to be very ancient.

The Virgin of Guadalupe is one of the most revered figures in Mexican Catholicism. Her story in Mexico begins with her miraculous appearance to Juan Diego (Cuauhtlatohuac), a young Aztec man, on December 9, 1531. He was on his way to receive Christian instruction from the Fransciscans at Tlatelolco when he heard heavenly music and a sweet voice calling his name. He saw the Virgin, on this rocky Tepeyac Hilll above Mexico City. It was her wish that the Bishop build her shrine on that spot. This same place was also the site of the shrine to the Aztec goddess of Earth and Corn.

Without a doubt you can see how in Christianity the same concept has been carried over from Sun Worship into the Catholic Christian Church. Again, we have proof positive of the paganization of Christianity where current doctrines are nothing more than the "recopying" of Sun Worship. This applies as well to the teaching of the Christian Church as to the immaculate conception.

JESUS' BIRTH FORETOLD BY A STAR...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

The evidence is extensive. One has only to look.

"The pathway of sacred history and literature reveals that all the systems of worship which have existed in the past have had a dip in "the halo of the heavenly orbs" so states Kersey Graves (Sixteen Crucified Saviors). This means that the heathen pagan nations and their religions are heavenly influenced by the cosmos and the personifications of it over the history of mankind.

He is so true. Over the years my research has found numerous examples of stars playing significant roles in "marking" and "announcing" the births of several of the false "Crucified Sun-god Saviors" of the nations enmeshed in Sun Worship, besides figuring in some cases by marking important events in their subsequent history. Mr. Higgins, the author of an incredible book entitled Anacalypsis, remarks that:

"Among the ancients there seems to have been a very general idea that the arrival of Gods and great personages who were expected to come, would be announced by a star."

The stars have a clear role at the births of several of the saviours and to mark important events in their subsequent history. The ancients thought the arrival of gods and great people would be announced by a star. A star figured either before or at the birth of Abraham, Caesar, Pythagoras, Yu, Krishna, and Christ. The astrological practice of calculating destinies by the stars had long been popular in the East at the time of Christ's birth.

We have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him (Mt 2:1).

Note, it was his star not just a star or even the star, suggesting an astrological meaning.

Zoroaster, about 1000 BC, prophetically announced to the wise men of that country that a saviour would be born, attended by a star at noonday. Similarly when Nared had examined the stars, having heard of Chrishna's fame, he declared him to be from God—the Son of God. The Roman Calcidius speaks of it as a wonderful star, presaging the descent of a God amongst men. A star foretold of the birth of the Roman Julius Caesar. The Chinese God Yu was not only heralded by a star, but conceived and brought to mortal birth by a star.

Numbers 24:17 is the famous passage: There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Seth. This is a text often quoted by Christian writers as having a prophetic reference to the Christian Messiah. The same text goes on to say, It shall destroy the children of Seth, a prophecy which is plainly false, if it is meant like the rest, to apply to Jesus Christ.

The star of Jacob or Judah, both being the same, is shown on astronomical maps as prominent in the constellation Virgo, the Virgin, called by the Hebrews, Ephraim. When this "star" was positioned in the "belly" of the constellation Virgo...the virgin was immaculately made pregnant by the Sky God and she would bring forth the Son of God. It was known in the Syrian, Arabian and Persian Systems of astronomy as Messaeil, suggestive of Messiah, and was considered the ruling genius of the constellation It seems to have been the star, Spica. The star of Jacob was evidently a figure from astrology in which the virgin is shown rising with an infant Messiah (Messaeil) in her arms. Messaeil is, when analyzed, Messaeh-el (Messiah-God), and is found in the constellation Virgo, which commences rising at midnight, on the 25th of December, with this star in the east in her arms—the star which piloted the wise men. According to Albertus Magnus, in his Book on the Universe, the sign of the celestial virgin rises above the horizon, at the moment we find fixed for the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sir William Drummond adds in OEdipus Judaicus: The anointed of El, the male infant, who rises in the arms of Virgo, was called Jesus by the Hebrews... and was hailed as the anointed king or Messiah.

Early people thought a star was alive, because it appeared to move, and acted as though controlled by a living spirit. In Job 38:9 the morning stars join in a chorus and sing together. An astrological interpretation of the star of Bethlehem makes more sense than the notion of a star leaving the firmament and travelling untold light-years to stand over the young child Jesus, as he lay amongst the oxen and asses in a stable (Mt 2:7). To those who like to see God grossly violating his own laws of nature, they might as well believe, since it would have been much easier, even for God, that the star was a large electric light bulb suspended on a wire from heaven. All nations once believed that the planetary bodies or their inhabitants controlled the affairs of men, and even their births. Such astrology still holds sway over many gullible people today.

We find a counterpart to the story of Matthew's travelling star in Virgil (60 BC) who has a star guiding AEneas westward from Troy. Pliny in his Natural History records that the people of Rome fancied they saw a man they took for a god in a star or comet. The apocryphal book of Seth relates that a star descended from heaven and lighted on a mountain, in the midst of which a divine child was seen bearing a cross. To Jews, pagans and Christian the stars might as well have been flies on a ceiling. They could have had no idea that they were immensely bigger than the earth and even the nearest was untold millions of miles away.

And the cases of Abraham, Caesar, Pythagoras, Yu, Chrishna, and Christ, may be cited in proof of this declaration. We find such phenomena in all of them plus many more. A star figured either before or at the birth of each, according to their respective histories and "legends." The "star" in question is the bright "morning star" which originally heralded the birth of the god Sol, the Sun-god, the beneficent Savior.

What is very interesting is that a knowledgeable glance at a geography of the heavens will show the "chaste, pure, immaculate Virgin, suckling an infant," preceded by a Star, which rises immediately proceeding the Virgin and her child. This can truly be called "his Star," which informed the "Wise Men," the "Magi," who were the Astrologers and Sun-worshippers of their day. Let us not also forget the "shepherds who watched their flocks by night," who by noticing this "announcing star," knew that the Savior of Mankind was about to be born. Such a story makes a Christian think of "Jesus," but the sad fact is that although such stores are recorded in a Christian's "infallible and inerrant New Testament," they can be found told about the pagan's god-men since time immemorial. And it is a historical fact that should be noted here that the practice of calculating nativities by the stars was in vogue in the era and country of Christ's birth, and had been for a long period previously in various countries: "We have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him." (Matt. 2:1)

Now mark, here, it was not the star, nor a star, but "his star;" thus disclosing its unmistakable astrological features.

In the history of the Hindu Savior Chrishna, we are told that "as soon as Nared, who, having heard of his fame, had examined the stars, he declared him to be from God; i.e., the Son of God.

Mr. Faber (Origin of Idolatry, vol. ii. p. 77) reports Zoroaster (600 B.C.) as prophetically announcing to "the wise men" of that country that a Savior would be born, "attended by a star at noonday."

The Roman Calcidius speaks of it a wonderful star, presaging the descent of a God amongst men." (Maurice, Indian Skeptics Refuted, p. 62.)

SO WHY IS THIS IMPORTANT?

The prevalence of such "star" stories announcing the births of pagan Savior-gods laid the foundation for the wise men of Jesus' birth. Such a "star "apprised the wise men of Christ's descent from above. But such "an announcing star" was previously said to have foretold the birth of the Roman Julius Caesar. The Chinese God Yu was not only heralded by a star, but conceived and brought to mortal birth by a star.

It is stated in Numbers 24:17, that there is a star..."The star out of Jacob" which is to come out of Jacob." This is a text often quoted by Christian writers as having a prophetic reference to the Christian Messiah.

Answer for yourself: Have you read the passage for yourself, of have you let your Pastor use scissors on it before he quoted it to you?

You need to look at the context to determine if it applied to Jesus or not. But the same text declares further, "It shall destroy the children of Seth," a prediction which no rational interpretation can make apply to Jesus Christ.

Upon study one finds that such nonsense originates with astrology. What should be of importance to you is that such "copying of lies and fables" is written in a document touted by millions to be "God-breathed." Hardly!

We find this "star of Jacob" or" Judah" (the same) represented on astronomical maps as a prominent star in the constellation Virgo (the Virgin), fancifully termed by the Hebrew "Ephraim" no less . Remember that the prophecy given to Ephraim means he was to become "a multitude of Gentiles" (captivity and assimilation of Norther Tribes) and it is from these mass of non-Jews who lost their Biblical heritage that they also incorporated Sun-Myths due to the pagan influence upon them.

Gen 48:19 19 And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it: he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations. (KJV)

The Hebrew word for "nations":

1471 gowy rarely (shortened) goy- as a noun, masculine: nation, people a) nation, people 1) usually of non-Hebrew people 2) used of descendants of Abraham (remember Abraham was a non-Jew) 3) Goyim? = "nations"

Answer for yourself: Has that happened to you as well?

Answer for yourself: Do you think that there is any remote chance since reading of the "Virgin" and the sign of "Virgo" that a "star" in the constellation Virgo would be in the slightest way connected to the birth story of "Virgo" or the "Virgin?"

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence that the star in the constellation Virgo would be connected with birth of the Virgin?

Even a blind man could see this; excuse the pun. It was known in the Syrian, Arabian and Persian Systems of astronomy as Messaeil (suggestive of Messiah), and was considered the ruling genius of the constellation.

The "star of Jacob," then, was simply a figure borrowed from the ancient pagan systems of astronomy, in which they fancifully represent a virgin rising with an infant Messiah (Messaeil) in her arms. Messaeil is, when analyzed, is nothing more than the bright "morning star" which originally heralded the birth of the god Sol, the Sun-god, Messaeh-el (Messiah-God), and is found in the constellation Virgo, which commences rising at midnight, on the 25th of December, with this "star in the east" in her arms -- the star which piloted "the wise men."

As you can see it was standard and established practice among all ancient people to use the changing positions of the stars as a means of predicting (prophesying) the change of the seasons. The positions of the starts in the night sky changed by approximately one degree every twenty-four hours. This is caused by the difference in the stellar year (366 1/4) days) and the solar year (365 1/4 days). The ancients measured the shift of the seasons by tracking the stars and the time they (stars and constellations) crossed the meridian at night. The position of the circumpolar stars (in the night sky, at a particular time) was also a standard method of tracking the seasons.

Therefore the Biblical statement that the birth of the Sun (Son) was predicted by the appearance of a star, was actually quite commonplace. It was the standard method of the Era.

The constellation of Orion has for millennia been recognized as a group of stars which herald the coming of winter, on Dec. 22, and the birth of the Sun (Son) God, three days later. It is the most glorious constellation in the sky! The legend of the three wise men has, for ages, been connected with the three stars in the Belt of Orion, Mintaka (the belt), Alnilam (string of pearls), and Alnitak (the girdle). These three stars (three wise men) sit proximate to the celestial equator and are easily recognizable, by all.

IF YOU ARE A CHRISTIAN....THIS SHOULD REALLY BOTHER YOU!

The whole thing, then, is evidently an astronomical legend. What gets me is that the New Testament is purported to be a Divine Revelation; a unique Revelation from God. Evidently it is not! Any thinking believer can see that there is severe problems with such a belief.

What is even worse is when one contemplates what other "errors" are presented as "truth" in the New Testament which goes without one's detection.

When we die I guess we all find out, right? I prefer to know now! Do you?

Albert the Great, in his Book on the Universe, tells us, "The sign of the celestial virgin rises above the horizon, at the moment we find fixed for the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ." Sir William Drummond, (CEdipus Judaicus, p. 27), states:

"The anointed of El, the male infant, who rises in the arms of Virgo, was called Jesus/Yeshua by the Hebrews, ... and was hailed as the anointed king or Messiah"

This is further proof of the astrological origin of the story.

Dr. Hales, (Chronology) calls Christ "the star of our salvation, the true Apollo, the sun of righteousness" -- all of which are astronomical terms.

This is not as strange as it may look when we factor in the fact that the early inhabitants of the earth regarded a star as a thing of life, because it appeared to move, and therefore was believed by them to to move and act though the animation of a living spirit. And this idea we observe lurking amongst the borrowed orientalisms of the Jewish Old Testament.

The representation of the morning stars joining in a chorus and singing together (Job 38:9), is an instance of this kind. And then we find a much stronger and more conclusive case in the New Testament, where Matthew represents a star as breaking loose from its orbit, and traveling some millions of miles, in order to stand over the young child Jesus, as he lay amongst the oxen and asses in a stable (Matt. 2:7). It is as if the "star had a mind of its own and was alive;" thus explaining its defiance of the laws of science.

"All nations," says Mr. Higgins, (Anacalypsis), "once believed that the planetary bodies or their inhabitants controlled the affairs of men, and even their births." Hence the states, "My stars," "He is ill-starred," etc., in use then, and still in use at the present day. The good or ill luck of a person was attributed to the good or evil stars which it was believed ruled at the hour of his birth. Astrology today is a big business. Nothing new under the sun. (forgive the pun).

We find a counterpart to the story of Matthew's traveling star in Virgil's writings, who declares (60 B.C.) that a star guided AEneas in a journey westward from Troy. In the days of Pliny (Pliny, Natural History, Book II.), the people of Rome fancied they saw a God in a star or comet in the form of a man. The Apocryphal Book of Seth relates that a star descended from heaven and lighted on a mountain, in the midst of which a divine child was seen bearing a cross. Now when you understand that "crosses" are a big part of Sun-Worship then such a comment is not surprising.

LET US NOT MAKE JESUS "STUPID"...BUT THE WRITER OF MATTHEW DOES

The writers of the Gospel of Matthew paints Christ in a bad light when they portray him with profound ignorance of astronomy, when he speaks of "the stars falling from heaven to the earth." (Matt. 24:29) For if there could be any falling in the case, the falling would be in the other direction and the earth would fall to the stars, as larger bodies always attract smaller ones.

As shown above, the stupendous orbs of night were represented by Jew, Pagan and Christian as breaking away from their orbits, and running hither and thither. Today we benefited by the vast progress of science which teaches that the stars are stupendous orbs, some of them a thousand times larger than the planet on which we live, and that they could not depart one rod from their accustomed orbits without breaking up the whole planetary system, and destroying the universe. God gave us illusions to himself in the stars and planets, but not prophecy. Early man knew the planets were all circular, they all moved in circular orbits, and even today we understand that our universe is moving in a circular orbit as well. Geometry teaches us that there is no more "perfect creation" than a "perfect circle." Thus, in this God reveals to us Himself; perfection. The "cosmic designer" give order to the universe and it, properly understood it pictures the "perfect God." This was understood by early man as we find in the Assyrian Triad which has as its center the "perfect circle," representing to them God is the center of all things.

Now read the Gospel of Matthew again with understanding. Observe the absurdity in Matthew's story, which teaches that the wise men followed the star in the east, when they, coming from the east, were, as a matter of course, traveling westward, which would place the star to their backs. That must be a pilot or guide which follows after, instead of going before. Omitting further citations from history, we will only observe further that the ancient Hindus, Egyptians, Chaldeans, Syrians, Mexicans, etc., took great account of stars, and employed them on all important occasions, especially on long journeys and at the births of Gods and great personages -- a circumstance which aids in explaining the star chapter in the gospel history of Christ.

IN CLOSING

Another absurdity in Matthew's story, is that the wise men followed the star in the east, when they were coming from the east. Unless they circumnavigated the world or walked backwards so that they pretended they were travelling East because that was the way they faced, they must have been travelling westward, which would place the star to their backs.

But as we close this article, although a lot of data is presented, understand that the New Testament, touted to be a "Divine and unique revelation" is anything but that. Star stores are not important, but if other things can be found within it just as suspect as this "star story" then we at Bet Emet hope your love for God will drive you to know the truth about a Jewish Jesus and his real message before you die and meet God face to face. Shalom.

BORN IN A CAVE/MANGER...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

In this respect also, the history of Jesus Christ corresponds with that of other Sun-gods and Saviors, for they are nearly all represented as being born in a cave or dungeon. This is the dark abode from which the wandering Sun starts in the morning (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol.i. p. 153). "As the Dawn springs fully armed from the forehead of the cloven Sky, so the eye first discerns the blue of heaven, as the first faint arch of light is seen in the East. This arch is the cave in which the infant is nourished until he reaches his full strength; in other words, until the day is fully come."

As the hour of his birth drew near, the mother became more beautiful, her form more brilliant, while the dungeon was filled with a heavenly light as when Zeus came to Danae in a golden shower (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 133).

At length the child is born, and a holt of serene light encircles his cradle, just as the Sun appears at early dawn in the East, in all its splendor. His presence reveals itself there, in the dark cave, by his first rays, which brightens the countenances of his mother and others who are present at his birth.

It is recorded in the Protevangelion, Apoc. ch. 14, that when Christ Jesus was born, all of a sudden there was a great light in the cave, so that their eyes could not bear it.

Answer for yourself: Coincidence? You will have to decide.

TEMPTED BY THE DEVIL...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

The earliest gospel disposes of the forty days in the wilderness, the wild animals, the temptation by the Devil and the ministrations by angels in one verse. Let us not forget what we have already learned about the Darkness be equated with Evil and the word play: D-evil or the Devil. Now understanding this let us continue and see what we shall see.

The gospel writer of the Gospel of John does not mention any of this. Yet Luke and Matthew give details of the fasting and the temptation with Jesus offered the world from the top of a mountain. By coincidence:

- Elijah fasted on Horeb in the wilderness for forty days;
- Moses did the same on Sinai.
- Zoroaster was tempted by the Devil in the wilderness;
- Buddha was also;
- Jupiter was led by Pan (the Devil) to the top of a mountain called the Pillar of Heaven whence he could see the countries of the world;

Forty is one of those mystical numbers that pop up in old religions: there were forty days of sacrifice in the Persian Salutation to Mithras; forty days of mourning in the mysteries of the goddess Persephone; the deluge lasted forty days, etc. The story is introduced to establish Jesus as a great leader, superior even to Moses. Furthermore the offer of the kingship of the world by the devil was intended by Gentile Christians as a rebuttal of the idea that Jesus was a Messiah in the Jewish mould who would become a world ruler - that is what the Devil offered him and he refused it.

The temptation by, and victory over the evil one, the D-Evil, or whether Mara or Satan, is nothing more than primitive man's personification of the Sun and the victory of the Sun over the clouds of storm and darkness. In ancient mythology, all heroes of light were opposed by the "Old Serpent," the Devil, symbolized by Serpents, Dragos, Sphinxes and other monsters. The Serpent was, among the ancient Eastern nations, the symbol of Evil, of Winter, of Darkness and of Death. The Serpents was never understood to be "literal" in these Eastern nations.

The Serpent also symbolized "the dark cloud," which by harboring the rays of the Sun, preventing its shining, and therefore, is apparently attempting to destroy it!

Now, when one personifies the Sun, we have the picture of "evil" (Serpent) trying to destroy the Savior.

The Serpent is one of the chief mystic personifications of the Rig-Veda, under the names of Ahi, Suchna, and others. The Serpents of various nations represented the Clouds, the enemy of the Sun, keeping back the fructifying rays. Indra struggles victoriously against him, and spreads life on the earth, with the shading warmth of the Father of Life, the Creator, the Sun.

Buddha, the Lord and Savior, was described as a superhuman organ of light, to whom a superhuman organ of darkness Mara, the Evil Serpent, was opposed. He, like Christ Jesus, resisted the temptations of this evil one, and is represented sitting on a serpent, as if its conqueror (Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 39).

Chrishna also overcame the evil one, and is represented "bruising the head of the serpent," and standing upon it (Asiaatic Researchers, and vol. ii of Higgins Anacalypsis).

In Egyptian Mythology, one of the names of he god-Sun was Ra. He had an adversary who was called Apap, represented in the form of a serpent (Renouf, Hibbert Lectures, p. 109).

Horus, the Egyptian incarnate god, the Mediator, Redeemer and Savior, is represented in Egyptian art as overcoming the Evil Serpent, and standing triumphantly upon him (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 158; Monumental Christianity, p. 402).

Osiris, Ormuzd, Mithras, Apollo, Bacchus, Hercules, Indra, CEdipus, Quetzalcoatle, and many others Sun-gods, overcame the Evil One, and are represented in the above described manner (Cox, Tales of Ancient Greece, p. xxvii; Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii, p. 129; Baring-Gould's Curious Myths, p. 256; Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. x; Kingsborough, Mexican Antiquities, vol. vi. p. 176).

Growing up in obscurity, the day comes when he makes himself known, tries himself in his first battlers with his gloomy foes, and shines without a rival. He is rife for his destines mission, but is met by the demon of storm, who runs to dispute with him in the duel of the the storm. In this struggle again darkness the beneficent hero remains the conqueror, the gloomy army of Mara, or Satan, broken and rent, is scattered; the Apearas, daughters of the demon, the last light vapors which float in the heaven, try in vain to clasp and retain the vanquisher; he disengages himself from their embraces, repulses them; they writhe, lose form, and vanish.

Free from every obstacle, and from every adversary, he sets in motion across space his disk with a thousand rays, having avenged the attempts of his eternal foe. He appears then in all his glory, and in his sovereign splendor; the god has attained the summit of his course, it is the moment of triumph (Doane, Bible Myths, p. 482-483).

NOW WHAT WAS THE ASTRONOMICAL ORIGIN FOR SUCH STORIES?

To understand this we must regress to what we learned from a prior article.

These "destruction myths" (the life of the Sun/Son was sought by the Darkness which was threatened by the coming Light) find their origin, like most Christian doctrine, in the stars. The new Son (Son) is born in the winter as we have seen. The astrological sign of Capricorn represents the lord of Hades. This is the Cardinal sign of Winter (opposition, Satan, Saturn). Winter takes control (at the Winter Solstice on Dec. 22), and within three days of mounting his throne, he is challenged by the Sun (Son) of the Father (Sun) that he, or some other ruffians captured (at the autumnal equinox) and has finally slain at the winter solstice. So now the king (Winter, Darkness) is worried and knows that he must murder the Sun (Son) before he gains the strength of his Father (Sun). The guardians of the Sun (Son) know that he can not withstand the power of the Winter (Satan, Herod), so they shield him (Son) and hide him till his time of glory approaches (he reaches maturity) (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 34).

The Sun (Son) will be mature enough to withstand the powers of Satan after he reaches the age of thirty. This Thirty does not mean years, it means degrees of arc. The Sun is born right after the King of Darkness takes his throne, in the sign of Capricorn. This king (Herod) is determined to kill all opposition to his power within the nether world. But Capricorn (Herod) will die after thirty years (degrees), because each zodiacal sign is limited to thirty degrees of arc. Therefore after the death of Herod (Capricorn), the Sun (Son) comes out from hiding to begin his mission, he is thirty years (degrees) old. But even though the chief rival (Herod/Capricorn) of the Sun(Son) has died, the Sun is yet within the domain of Satan, under the equinoxes. He, the Sun, must face more struggles and temptations as he climbs and fights his way to his glory, at the vernal equinox (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 35).

Now, let us pick up the story.

The guardians were successful in protecting the infant (Sun, Son) but still he has not reached his glory (the vernal equinox) i.e. the resurrection of Spring. The Sun (Son) at this point (the thirtieth degree of Capricorn) has matured (survived to 30 years (degrees) from his birth) but he (Sun, Son) is still within the realm of winter (Satan). Winter (Satan) knows that he cannot kill the Sun (Son) at this point of maturity, therefore he (Satan) seeks to torment the Sun (Son), tempt him, cajole him to prevent the Sun (Son) from escaping his (Satan's/Darkness') domain. The torment, or temptation is described as lasting for forty days. The ancients, in this case, used the term days as a metaphor for degrees. The sign of Capricorn (the birth place of the Sun (Son) lies at minus 16 degrees south declination i.e. sixteen degrees below the celestial equator. The sign of Aries (the vernal equinox, the birth place of spring, where Christ enters his glory and the Sun rises above the equator signaling the coming of Spring and life) lies at plus twenty-four degrees north declination. Add this twenty-four degrees to the sixteen degrees (position of Capricorn below the celestial equator) and you get forty degrees (the ancients told the story as 40 days to the masses). This is the distance, relevant to the position of the two Cardinal signs, Capricorn and Aries, that the Sun (Son) must climb, struggle, suffer, be tempted, before he (The Sun) escapes the clutches of Satan (Winter). This term forty represents the struggle of the Sun (Son) in the wilderness of Darkness, climbing and overcoming torments toward salvation and life of Spring. With Israel, it was forty years in the wilderness, and with Noah, it was forty days of torrential rains, but regardless, the symbology is the same; the plight of the young Sun in the valley of Amenta, the Nether World, fighting his way to cross the forsaken territory (wilderness) between the zodiacal sign of the winter solstice (Capricorn) and the Spring equinox (Aries) (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 36-37).

The bottom line for you, if you are a Christian, is that there are many "myths" which have been added to the life of Jesus in the New Testament by Gentiles who, because they forsook Biblical Judaism and the Jew's enlightenment, remained in Darkness and they spread this darkness of ignorance, superstition, and falsehoods where ever they went. Now you go to their churches where you inherit such fables as truth.

I hope you have the reason and sense enough to at least see the evidence for yourself and ask yourself if these "harmless" fables are the extent of such error as found in the New Testament. I assure you it is not. Most who read our articles have never investigated such materials for themselves and they simply do not know about such things. It is our hope at Bet Emet that what you see in these articles will cause you to seriously investigate other teachings in the New Testament as well which I assure you affect your relationship with God which you have been taught in error and again at this time in your life are not aware. We stand ready to help those who truly want the truth about God and His revelation before they die.

Answer for yourself: As you step back and examine the evidence, is it not overwhelming that what we interpret literally today is nothing more than a allegory to primitive man? The true religion and faith of Jesus awaits you if you are interested and really hungry for God. Shalom.

JESUS HAD TWELVE APOSTLES...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

It really matters not to me if Jesus had 12 or 10 to 100 disciples or apostles. Not wanting to spend too much time on this I will present just the facts and let them speak to you themselves. Let us not forget what we have already seen however. You be the judge.

Throughout the whole of the legends we have seen, Christ Jesus is the toiling Sun (being made equal with God) laboring for the benefit of others, not his own, and doing hard service for a mean and cruel generation. Watch his sun-like career of brilliant conquest, checked with intervals of storm, and declining to a death clouded with sorrow and derision. He is in constant company with twelve apostles, the twelve signs of the zodiac. The number twelve appears in many Sun-Myths.

It refers to the twelve hours of the day or night, or the twelve moons of the lunar year (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 165; Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175). Osiris, the Egyptian Savior, had twelve apostles (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175).

In all religions of antiquity the number twelve, which applies to the twelve signs of the zodiac, are reproduced in all kinds and sorts of forms. For instance, such are the twelve great gods; the twelve apostles or Osiris; the twelve apostles of Jesus; the twelve sons of Jacob; the twelve tribes; the twelve altars of James; the twelve labors of Mars; the twelve brothers of Arvaux; the twelve gods Consents; the twelve governors in the Manichean System; the adectyas of the East Indies; the twelve asses of the Scandinavians; the city of the twelve gates in the Apocalypse; the twelve wards of the city; the twelve sacred cushions, on which the Creator sits in the cosmogony of the Japanese; the twelve precious stones of the rational, or the ornament worn by the high priest of the Jews, etc. (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, pp. 39-40).

Answer for yourself: Now is there any doubt that the account of Jesus' having 12 Apostles might be again a further development from the influence of Gentile Sun-Myths?

DEATH ON A CROSS.....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

First we need to understand that Jesus was crucified on a stake or a pole that had no cross beam. Archeological evidence from that period finds no such "crosses" but instead stone "coffins" often are opened, unearthed by archeologists, to find bodies still nailed to the poles as was the common way of Roman crucifixion of that period. There simply was no cross beams, but if your remember many of these Sun-gods when crucified had arms extended to the whole of the world. A good example is Isis as seen in these images. Thus the need for a like representation of Jesus and his death; thus the like need for a cross bar on such a pole. It simply never happened that way.

When the Sun reached his extreme Southern limit in the sky, then his career was ended and it was assumed by primitive man that the Sun had been overcome by his enemies. The Sun was dead. If you remember in our study on the Winter Solstice that the Sun, for 3 days a year, remains motionless in the sky. It does not move lower on the horizon in its track across the sky nor does it begin its upward journey either. The Sun remains "dead" for 3 days. Again if you remember this was the origin of the "descent into hell" stories as the Sun was submitted to the the "Dark-Evil" or the "D-Evil" (Devil). The powers of darkness, and of winter, which had sought in vain to wound him, have at length won the victory: The bright Sun of summer is finally slain, crucified in the heavens, and pierced by the arrow, spear or thorn of winter. If need be refresh yourself with our articles on the "Son or Sun of God" as you see for yourself how the Sun was submitted to the "cross" of the equinoxes and later personified into the "Son" who was submitted to the same "cross of the equinoxes."

The intersection of the 4 equinoxes is represented as a "cross" by primitive man. As the Sun was placed on this cross it was easily seen and understood by primitive man that the Sun is divided up into 4 parts, or should I say that the Sun divides the year into 4 parts (spring, summer, autumn, winter). Pictured this way the Sun as on the cross was understood to be "crucified." When you then remember how the Sun became the Son then you have the Son on the Cross.

The crucifixion of the Sun-gods is simply the power of Darkness triumphing over the "Lord of Light," and Winter overpowering the Summer. It was at the winter solstice that the ancients wept for Tammuz, the fair Adonis, and other Sun-gods, who were put to death by the boar, slain by the thorn of winter (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 13).

Other versions of the same myth tell us of Eurydike stung to death by the hidden serpent, or Sifrit smitten by Hagene (the Thorn), of Isfendiyar slain by the thorn or arrow of Rustem, or Achilleus vulnerable only in the heel, of Brynhild enfolded within the dragon's coils, of Meleagros dying as the torch of doom is burnt out, of Baldur, the brave and pure, smitten by the fatal mistletoe, and of Chrishna and others being crucified.

In Egyptian mythology, Set, the destroyer, triumphs in the West. He is the personification of Darkness and Winter, and the Sun-god whom he puts to death, is Horus the Savior (Renouf, Hibbert Lectures, pp. 112-115).

Throughout this tale, the Sun-god was but fulfilling his doom as seen in the heavens. This natural laws of the universe were interpreted by primitive man and later personified as we have seen into mythos of his culture. Everyone on the planet saw the same things and this explains the uncanny similarities of the Sun-Myths around the globe from thousands of years ago. The suffering of a violent death was a necessary part of the mythos; and, when his hour had come, he must meet his doom, as surely as the Sun, once risen, must go across the sky, and then sink down into his bread beneath the earth or sea. It was a fate from which there was no escaping.

THE DEVELOPING MYTHS OF THE NATIONS

Chrishna, the crucified Savior of the Hindus, is a personification of the Sun crucified in the heavens. One of the names of the Sun in the Vedic hymns is "Vishnu" and it is very important to know that in the Rig-Veda the god Vishnu is often named a a manifestation of Solar Energy, or rather as a form of the Sun (Indian Wisdom, p. 322).

Chrishna is Vishnu is human form. Chrishna says: "I am Vishnu, Brahma, Indra, and the source as well as the destruction of things, the creator and the annihilator of the whole aggregate of existences (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 131).

In the hymns of the Rig-Veda the Sun is spoken of as "stretching out his arms," in the heavens, "to bless the world, and to rescue it from the terror of darkness." This reminds me of many of the examples of Isis with the Sun-disk on her head as she "stretches out her arms."

Indra, the crucified Savior worshipped in Nepal and Tibet, is identical with Chrishna, the Sun. Indra, who was represented as a crucified god, is also the Sun. No sooner is he born than he speaks to his mother. Like Apollo and all other Sun-gods he has "golden locks (reminiscent of the Sun rays of golden light," and like them he is possessed of an inscrutable wisdom. He is also born of a virgin...the Dawn. Chrishna and Indra are one (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. pp. 88, 341; vol. ii. p. 131).

The principal Phenician deity, El, which says Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, "was the very name the heathens gave to their god Sol, their Lord or Ruler of the Hosts of Heaven," was called "The Preserver (Savior) of the World," for the benefit of which he offered a mystical sacrifice (Wake, Phallism, p. 55). Notice again the connection between the Sun's (Sol's) sacrifice on behalf of mankind!

The crucified Iao (Divine Love personified) is the crucified Adonis, the Sun. The Lord and Savior was called Iao (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 113).

Osiris, the Egyptian Savior, was crucified in the heavens. To the Egyptian the cross was a symbol of immortality, an emblem of the Sun, and the god himself was crucified to the tree, which denoted his fructifying power (Ibid. pp. 115, 125).

Horus was also crucified in the heavens. He was represented, like Chrishna and Christ Jesus, with outstretched arms in the vault of heaven (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 157).

The story of the crucifixion of Prometheus was allegorical, for Prometheus was only a title of the Sun, expressing providence or foresight, wherefore being crucified in the extremities of the earth, signified originally no more than the restriction of the power of the Sun during the winter months (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. 88).

Ixion, who was bound to the wheel (Sun wheel), was none other than the god Sol, crucified in the heavens. The Sun, as climbing the heights of heaven, was sometime interpreted by men as the Sun being "arrogant" since for himself he made exorbitant claims. He was punished by being bound to a "fiery cross." Stories were invented of the Sun revolving daily on a four-spoked cross (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 27). Whatever be the origin of the name, Ixion is the "Sun of noonday," crucified in the heavens, whose four-spoked wheel is seen whirling in the highest heaven. So was Ixion bound on the fiery wheel, and the sons of men see the flaming spokes day by day as it whirls in the big heaven. The "wheel" upon which Ixion and criminals were said to have been executed was a cross, the name of the thing was dissembled among Christians; it was a St. Andrew's cross, of which two spokes confined the arms, and two the legs.

THE ALLEGORICAL REPRESENTATION OF THE GENERATIVE AND DESTRUCTIVE ATTRIBUTES OF THE SUN-GODS

Hercules is torn limb from limb; and in this catastrophe we see the "blood-red sunset" which closes the career of Hercules (Cox, Tales of Ancient Greece, p. xxxii). The Sun-god Hercules cannot rise to life of the blessed gods until he has been slain. The morning cannot come until Eos who closed the previous day has faded away and died in the black abyss of night.

Achilleus and Meleagros represent alike the "short-lived Sun," whose course is one of toil for others, ending in an early death, after a series of wonderful victories alternating with periods of darkness and gloom (Ibid., p. xxxiii). In the tales of the Trojan war, it is related of Archilleus that he expires at the Skaian, or western gates of the eveningg. He is slain by Paris, who here appears as the Pani, or dark power, who blots out the light of the Sun from the heaven

We have the story of Adonis, born of a virgin, and known in the countries where he was worshipped as "The Savior of Mankind," killed by the wild boar, afterwards "rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven." This Adonis, Adonai in Hebrew or "My Lord," is simply the Sun. He is crucified in the heavens put to death by the wild boar (personified Winter). "Babylon called Typhon or Winter 'the boar;' they said he killed Adonis or the fertile Sun" (Muller, Science of Religion, p. 186).

The Crucified Dove worshipped by the ancients, was none other than the crucified Sun. Adonis was called the "Dove." At the ceremonies in honor of his resurrection from the dead, the devotees said, "Hail to the Dove! the Restorer of Light" (Calemt, Fragments, vol. ii. pp. 21-22). This Crucified Dove" is described by Pindar, the great lyric poet of Greece, born about 522 B.C.E.

"We read in Pindar of the venerable bird Iynx bound to the wheel, and of the pretended punishment of Ixion. But this rotation was really no punishment, being, but as Pindar relates, voluntary (compare to Jesus' death), and prepared by himself and for himself; or if it was, it was appointed in derision of his false pretensions, whereby he gave himself out as the crucified spirit of the world." "The four spokes represent St. Andrew's cross, adapted to the four limbs extended, and furnish perhaps the oldest illusion to the crucifixion. The same cross of St. Andrew was the Taw (T), which Ezekiel commands them to mark upon the foreheads of the faithful, as appears from all Israelitish coins whereon that letter is engraved. The same idea was familiar to Lucian, who calls T the letter of crucifixion. Certainly, the veneration of the cross is very ancient. Iynx, the bird of Mautic inspiration, bound to the four-legged wheel, given the notion of Divine Love crucified. The wheel denotes the world, of which she is the spirit, and the cross the sacrifice made for that world" (Pindar, Nimrod: vol. i. p. 278; Higgins, Anacalypsis, p. 503).

This "Divine Love," of whom Nimrod speaks, was "The First-begotten Son" of the Platonists. The crucifixion of "Divine Love" is often found among the Greeks. Ionah or Juno, according to the Iliad, was bound with fetters, and suspended in space, between heaven and earth. Ixion, Prometheus, Apollo of Miletus were all crucified. At Miletus was the crucified Apollo who overcomes the Serpent of evil and the evil principle in the world.

Semi-Ramis was both a queen of unrivaled celebrity, and also a goddess, worshipped under the form of a Dove. Her name signifies the "Supreme Dove." She is said to have been slain by the last survivor of her sons, while others say, she flew away as a dove. In both Grecian and Hindu histories this mystical queen Semiramis is said to have fought a battle on the banks of the Indus, with a king called Staurobates, in which she was defeated, and from which she flew away in the form of a Dove.

Of this Nimrod says:

"The name Staurobates, the king by whom Semiramis was finally overpowered, alluded to the cross on which she perished," and that, "the crucifixion was made into a glorious mystery by her infatuated adorers"

Make no mistake about it. This Oriental story has had unbelievable impact and influence in almost every nation of the world. These words apply to Christ Jesus , as well as Semiramis, according to Christian Father Ignatius.

Here we have the crucified Dove, the Sun, for it is well known that the ancients personified the Sun female as well as male.

We also have the fable of the Crucified Rose, illustrated in the jewel of the Rosicrucians. The jewel of the Rosicrucians is formed of a transparent red stone, with cross on one side and a red rose on the other thus forming a crucified rose. This idea stems from the fable of Adonis who was the Sun whom we have seen often crucified whereupon he was then changed into a red rose by Venus (The Rosicrucians, p. 260).

The emblem of the Templars is a red rose on a cross. This is usually surrounded with a glory, and placed on a calvary. This is the Naurutz, Natsir, or Rose of Isuren, of Tamul, or Sharon, or the Water Rose, the Lily Padma, Pena, Lotus, crucified in the heavens for the salvation of man (Ibid.).

Answer for yourself: Is it just coincidence that Jesus Christ was called the Rose, the Rose of Sharon?

Jesus was believed by his followers to be the incarnation of Divine Wisdom. He was the son of Mair or Maria. He was the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley, which bloweth in the month of his mother Maia. Thus, when the angel Gabriel gives the salutations to the Virgin, he presents her with the lotus or lily; as may be seen in hundreds of old pictures in Italy. We see therefore that Adonis, "the Lord," "the Virgin-born," "the Crucified," "the Resurrected Dove," "the Restorer of Light," is one and the same with the "Rose of Sharon," the crucified Christ Jesus.

Plato (429 B.C.E.) in his Pimaeus, philosophizing about the Son of God says:

"The next power to the Supreme God was decussated or figured in the shape of a cross on the universe."

This brings to recollection the doctrine of certain so-called Christian heretics, who maintained that Christ Jesus was crucified in the heavens.

The Chrestos was the Logos, the Sun was the manifestation of the Logos or Wisdom to men; or, as it was held by some, it was his peculiar habitation. The Sun being crucified at the time of the winter solstice was represented by the young man playing the Bull (emblem of the Sun) in the Mithraic ceremonies. The Chrest was the Logos, or Divine Wisdom, or a portion of divine wisdom incarnate; in this sense he is really the Sun or the solar power incarnate, and to him everything applicable to the Sun will apply.

Lund, in his Monumental Christianity, provides a great picture of the Christian Savior crucified in the heavens. The pattern of the illustrations can be traced to Chrishna who is also represented crucified in "space." This is exactly displayed in the form of a Romish crucifix, but not fixed to a piece of wood, though the legs and feet are put together in the usual way. There is a glory over the top of it, coming from above, not shining from the figure, as is generally seen in a Roman crucifix. It has a pointed Parthian coronet instead of a crown of thorns. All the avatars, or incarnations of Vishnu, are painted with Ethiopian or Parthian coronets. For these reasons the Christian author will not own that it is a representation of the "True Son of Justice," for he was not crucified in space; but whether it was intended to represent Chrishna, Wittoba, or Jesus, it tells a secret: it shows that someone was represented crucified in the heavens, and undoubtedly has something to do with "The next power to the Supreme God," who, according to Plato, "was decussated or figured in the shape of a cross on the universe." The Sun-gods Apollo, Indra, Wittoba, or Chrishna, and Christ Jesus, are represented as having their feet pierced with nails (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 28).

Answer for yourself: Who was the crucified god whom the ancient Romans worshipped, and whom they, according to Justin Martyr, represented as a man on a cross?

Answer for yourself: Can we doubt, after what we have seen, that he was this same crucified Sol, whose birthday they annually celebrated on 25th of December?

In the poetical tales of the ancient Scandinavians, the same legend is found. Frey, the Deity of the Sun, was fabled to have been killed, at the time of the winter solstice, by the same boar who put the god Adonis to death, therefore a boar was annually offered to him at the great feast of Yule (Knight, Anct. Art and Myth, pp. 87-88). "Baldur the Good," son of the supreme god Odin, and the virgin-goddess Frigga, was also put to death by the sharp thorn of winter.

The ancient Mexicans crucified Savior, Quetzalcoatle, another personification of the Sun, was sometimes represented as crucified in space, in the heavens, in a circle of nineteen figures, the number of the metonic cycle. A serpent (emblem of evil, darkness, and winter) is depriving him of the organ of generation (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 32).

It is a well known fact that Christ Jesus, and many of the heathen saviors, healers, and preserving gods, were represented in the form of a Serpent. This is owing to the fact that, in one of its attributes, the Serpent was an emblem of the Sun (think of Moses and the serpent on the cross...the Sun crucified). It may, at first, appear strange that the Serpent should be an emblem of evil, and yet also an emblem of the beneficent divinity; but, as Prof. Renouf remarks, in his Hibbert Lectures, "The moment we understand the nature of a myth, all impossibilities, contradictions, and immoralities disappear."

The serpent is an emblem of evil when represented with his deadly sting; he is the emblem of eternity when represented casting off his skin; and an emblem of the Sun when represented with his tail in his mouth, thus forming a circle. This idea is quite consistent with the ideas entertained by the Phenicians as to the Serpent, which they supposed to have the quality of putting off its old age, and assuming a second youth (Sanchoniation: quoted by Wake: Phallism, p. 43). This idea even existed in the Americas. The great century of the Aztecs was encircled by a serpent grasping its own tail, and the great calendar stone is entwined by serpents bearing human heads in their distended jaws. The annual passage of the Sun, through the signs of the zodiac, being in an oblique path, resembles, or at least the ancients thought so, the tortuous movements of the Serpent, and the facility possessed by this reptile of casting off his skin and producing out of itself a new covering every year, bore some analogy to the termination of the old year and the commencement of the new year. Accordingly, all the ancient spheres: Persians, Indian, Egyptian, Barbaric, Mexican, etc., were surrounded by the figure of a serpent holding its tail in its mouth (Squire: Serpent Symbol, p. 249).

Thus there came to be, not only good, but also bad, serpents, both of which are referred to in the narrative of the Hebrew exodus, but still more clearly in the struggle between good and the bad serpents of Persian mythology, which symbolized Ormuzd, or Mithra, and the evil spirit Ahriman (Wake, Phallism, p. 42).

As the Dove and the Rose, emblems of the Sun, were represented on the cross, so was the Serpent (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 128). The famous "Brazen Serpent," said to have been "set up: by Moses in the wilderness, is called in the Targum (the Aramaic versions of the Old Testament) the Savior! It was probably a serpentine crucifix, as is called a "cross" by Justin Martyr. The crucified serpent denoted the dormant Phallos, or the Sun after it had lost is power. It is the Sun in winter, crucified on a tree, which denoted its fructifying power. Being the most intimately connected with the reproduction of life on earth, the Linga became the symbol under which the Sun, invoked with a thousand names, has been worshipped throughout the world as the restorer of the powers of nature after the long sleep or death of Winter. In the brazen Serpent of the Pentateuch, the two emblems of the Cross and the Serpent, the quiescent and energizing Phallos, are united (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. pp. 113-118). As Mr. Wake remarks, "There can be no doubt that both the Pillar (Phallus) and the Serpent were associated with many of the Sun-gods of antiquity (Wake, Phallism, p. 60).

This is seen often when the serpent is represented with rays of glory surrounding its head.

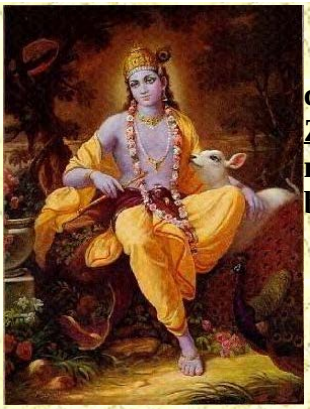
The Ophrites, who venerated the serpent as an emblem of Christ Jesus, are said to have maintained that the serpent of Genesis, who brought wisdom into the world, was Christ Jesus. The brazen serpent was called the Word by the Chaldee paraphrast. The Word, or Logos, was Divine Wisdom, which was crucified; thus we have the cross, or Phallus, with the serpent upon it. Besides considering the serpent as the emblem of Christ Jesus, or of the Logos, the Ophites are said to have revered it as the cause of all the arts of civilized life. Several females have been believed to have been selected and impregnated by the Holy Ghost, and is was, in some cases, the form of a serpent which was the form the Holy Ghost chose to impregnate them. This was the incarnation of the Logos.

The serpent was held in great veneration by the ancients, who, considered it as the symbol of the beneficent Deity, and an emblem of eternity. As such it has been variously expressed on ancient sculptures and medals in various parts of the globe.

Although generally, it did not always, symbolize the god Sun, or the power of which the Sun is an emblem; but, invested with various meanings, it entered widely into the primitive mythologies. As Mr.. Squire observes:

"It typified wisdom, power, duration, the good and evil principles, life, reproduction; in short, in Egypt, Syria, Greece, India, China, Scandinavia, America, everywhere on the globe, it has been a prominent emblem" (Squire, Serpent Symbols, p. 155).

The serpent was the symbol of Vishnu, the preserving god, the Savior, the Sun (Wake, Phallism in Acnt. Religs., p. 72). It was an emblem of the Sun-god Buddha, the Angel-Messiah (Ibid. p. 73; Squire, Serpent Symbol, p. 195). The Egyptian Sun-god Osiris, the Savior, is associated with the snake (Faber, Orig. Pagan Idol., in Squire, p. 158). The Persian Mithra, the Mediator, Redeemer, and Savior, was symbolized by the serpent (Ibid.). The Phenicians represented their beneficent Sun-god, Agathodemon, by a serpent (Kendrick, Egypt, vol. i. p. 375). The serpent was, among the Greeks and Romans, the emblem of a beneficent genius. Antipator of Sidon, calls the god of Ammon, the "Renowned Serpent" (Ibid.). The Grecian Hercules, the Sun-god, was symbolized as a serpent; and so was AEsculapius and Apollo. The Hebrews, at one time in their antiquity, worshipped the Sun-god Sol, and represented him in he form of a serpent. This the the "seraph" spoken of above as set up by Moses (Num. 21:3) and worshipped by the children of Israel. Seraph is the singular of seraphim, meaning Semilice (splendor, fire, light); emblematic of the fiery disk of the Sun, and which, under the name of Nehush-tan, "Serpent-dragon," was broken up by the reforming Hezekiah.



The principal god of the Aztecs was Tonac-actcoatl, which means the Serpent Sun (Squire, p. 161).

The Mexican virgin-born Lord and Savior, Quetzalcoatle, was represented in the form of a serpent. In fact, his names signifies "Feathered Serpent." Quetzaloatle was a personification of the Sun (Ibid. p. 185).

So we see it is relatively easy to connect the Serpent and the Sun, as corresponding symbols of the reproductive or creative powers.

The mysteries of Osiris, Isis, and Horus, in Egypt; Attis and Cybele, in Phrygia; Ceres and Proserpine, at Eleusis; of Venus and Adonis, in Phenicia; of Bona Dea and Priapus, in Rome, and all susceptible of one explanation. They all set forth and illustrated, by solemn and impressive rites, and mystical symbols, the grad phenomenon of nature, especially as connected with the creation of things and the perpetuation of life. In all, it is worthy of remark, the Serpent was more or less conspicuously introduced, and always as symbolical of the invigorating or active energy of nature, the Sun.

In early Christian art Christ Jesus was represented as a crucified lamb. The crucified lamb is "the Lamb of God taking away the sins of the world, and slain from the foundation of the world" (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, p. 185). In other words, the crucified lamb typifies the crucified Sun, for the lamb was another symbol of the Sun and one of the signs of the Zodiac. This concept had been applied since the beginning to the crucified Sun-heroes of myth as seen in the example of Chrisha being connected with the constellation Aires and being called the "Lamb of God."

We find, then, that the stories of the crucifixion of the different so-called Saviors of mankind all melt into one, and that they are allegorical, for "Savior" was only a title of the "Sun," and his being put to death on the cross, signifies no more than the restruction of the power of the Sun in the winter quarter.

With Justin Martyr, then, we can say:

"There exists not a people, whether Greek or barbarian, or any other race of men, by whatsoever appellation or manners they may be distinguished, however ignorant of arts or agriculture, whether they dwell under the tents, or wander about in crowed wagons, among whom prayers are not offered up in the name of a CRUCIFIED SAVIOR to the Father and creator of all things" (Justin Martyr, Dialog. With Typho, quoted in Gibbons' Rome, vol. i. p. 582).

JESUS CHRIST'S DESCENT INTO HELL AS RECORDED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT....TRUTH... OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

The doctrine of Christ Jesus' descent into hell is emphatically part of the Christian belief, although not alluded to by Christian divines excepting when unavoidable. In the first place, it is taught in the Creed of the Christian Church.

The Nicene Creed was created at the Synod at Nicea in 325 A.D. and set forth this Creed: We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, maker of all things visible and invisible; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the only-begotten of his Father, of the substance of the Father, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father. By whom all things were made, both which be in heaven and in earth. Who for us men and for our salvation came down [from heaven] and was incarnate and was made man. He suffered and the third day he rose again, and ascended into heaven. And he shall come again to judge both the quick and the dead. And [we believe] in the Holy Ghost. And whosoever shall say that there was a time when the Son of God was not, or that before he was begotten he was not, or that he was made of things that were not, or that he is of a different substance or essence [from the Father] or that he is a creature, or subject to change or conversion--all that so say, the Catholic and Apostolic Church anathematizes them (From The Seven Ecumenical Councils, ed. H. Percival, in the Library of Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers, 2nd series (New York: Charles Scribners, 1990), Vol XIV, 3).

Notice if you will the "third day" portion; this is a clear reference to the New Testament doctrine of Jesus' descent into hell prior to the resurrection.

The gospels pretend to be matter of fact stories of some events in the life of the Christian God. The various "Creeds" reflect such a story. They tell what people saw or heard. They claim they saw Jesus rise to heaven, but it is difficult to know how they could have known he descended to hell, unless they simply had the risen Jesus confessing it in one of his mysterious post mortem appearances. Anyway, it was not expressly written into the gospels. Nevertheless, it became and remains a firm belief among Christians that Jesus did descend to Hell. A Christian writer explains that the early Christians were united on the doctrine of Christ's underground mission. It was too well settled to admit of dispute

The Apostles' Creed teaches the doctrine explicitly and it was once thought of as equal in authority to the gospels, being supposedly written by the apostles themselves.

The New Testament attests to this as well: Peter (1 Peter 3:18) is thought to be referring to the descent into Hell when he writes: being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. Prison must mean Hell.

In Acts 2:31 we find that his soul was not left in hell. The writer plainly considered Jesus's soul had been there. The most positive declaration that Christ did descend into hell could not make it more certainly a scriptural Christian doctrine.

WHERE DID SUCH A BELIEF ARISE?

Answer for yourself: Where then did such a belief arise?

You need to know that the most important event in the lives of Pagan Saviours, after their crucifixion, is that of their descent into the infernal regions. In the Hindu bible, written more than three thousand years ago, the Saviour Krishna:

…went down to hell to preach to the inmates of that dark and dreary prison, with the view of reforming them, and getting them back to heaven, and was willing himself to suffer to abridge the period of their torment.

Elsewhere we find that Krishna even descended into hell to teach souls in bondage. We have references to prison and to bondage. Hell is a prison and souls are in bondage. Souls are therefore in prison just as Peter says. The writers of the Gospel of Luke and the first epistle of Peter seem greatly indebted to the Hindu bible in these passages.

Another God who descended into hell was Quexalcoatl of Mexico (300 BC). The story will be found in the Codex Borgianus, wherein is related the account of his death, and burial after crucifixion, his descent into hell, and subsequent resurrection. After Adonis descended into hell, he rose again to life and immortality. Prometheus of Caucasus (600 BC) also suffered and descended into hell, rising again from the dead, and ascending to heaven. Horus first reigned a thousand years, then died, and was buried for three days, at the end of which time he triumphed over Typhon, the evil principle, and rose again to life evermore. And Osiris of Egypt also descended into hell and after a period of three days rose again. Homer and Virgil speak of Hercules, Ulysses and AEneas descending into Hades. The Gods became incarnate, and descended into hell to teach humility and set an example of suffering. The story of their descent into hell was doubtless invented to occupy them during their three days in the tomb.

THE EARLY CHURCH FATHERS TEACH THE SAME DOCTRINE ABOUT THE CHRIST

The doctrine was also taught by the Fathers of the Church. St. Chrysostom (born 347 A.D.) asks:

"Who but an infidel would deny that Christ was in hell?"* (quoted by Bonwick; Egyptian Belief, p. 46).

And St. Clement of Alexandria, who flourished at the beginning of the third century, is equally clear and emphatic as to Jesus' descent into hell. He says:

"The Lord preached the gospel to those in Hades, as well as to all in earth, In order that all might believe and be saved, wherever they were. If, then, the Lord descended to Hades for no other end but to preach the gospel, as He did descend, it was either to preach the gospel to all, or to the Hebrews only. It accordingly to all, then all who believe shall be saved, although they may be of the Gentiles, on making their profession there"

Origen, who flourished during the latter part of the second, and beginning of the third centuries, also emphatically declares that Christ Jesus descended into hell (Origen, Contra Celsus, bk.ii. c. 48).

Ancient Christian works of art represent his descent into hell (Jameson, Hist. Of Our Lord in Art, vol. ii. pp. 364-365).

The apocryphal gospels teach the doctrine of Christ Jesus' descent into hell, the object of which was to preach to those in bondage there, and to liberate the Saints who had died before his advent on earth.

On account of the sin committed by Adam in the Garden of Eden, all mankind were doomed, all had gone to hell excepting those who had been translated to heaven—even those persons who were "after God's own heart," and who had belonged to his "chosen people." The coming of Christ Jesus into the world, however, made a change in the affairs of man. The saints were then liberated from their prison, and all those who believe in the efficacy of his name, shall escape hereafter the tortures of hell. This is the doctrine to be found in the apocryphal gospels, and was taught by the Fathers of the Church (Jameson, Hist. Of Our Lord in Art, vol. ii. pp. 250-251).

THE GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS

In the Gospel of Nicodemus (apoc.) is to be found the whole story of Christ Jesus' descent into hell, and of his liberating the saints. It goes like this:

Satan, and the Prince of Hell, having heard that Jesus of Nazareth was almost to descend to their domain, began to talk the matter over, as to what they should do, etc. While thus engaged, on a sudden, there was a voice as of thunder and the rushing of winds, saying: " Lift up your gates, O ye Princes, and be ye lifted up, O ye everlasting gates, and the King of Glory shall come in."

When the Prince of Hell heard this, he said to his impious officers: "Shut the brass gates . . . and make them fast with iron bare, and fight courageously."

The saint having heard what had been said on both sides, immediately spoke with aloud voice, saying: "Open thy gates, that the King of Glory may come in." The divine prophets, David and Isaiah, were particularly conspicuous in this protect against the intentions of the Prince of Hell.

Again the voice of Jesus was heard saying: " Lift up your gates, O Prince; and be ye lifted up, ye gates of hell, and the King of Glory will enter in." The Prince of Hell then cried out: " Who is the King of Glory" upon which the prophet David commenced to reply to him, but while he was speaking, the mighty Lord Jesus appeared in the form of a man, and broke asunder the fetters which before could not be broken, and crying aloud, said: " Come to me, all ye saints, who were created in my image, who were condemned by the tree of the forbidden fruit . . . live now by the word of my cross."

Then presently all the saints were joined together, hand in hand, and the Lord Jesus laid hold on Adam's hand, and ascended from hell, and all the saints of God followed him (Nicodemus; Apoc. Ch. xvi and xix).

When the saints arrived in paradise, two " very ancient men " met them, and were asked by the saints: " Who are ye, who have not been with us in hell, and have had your bodies placed in paradise?" One of these " very ancient men" answered and said: " I am Enoch, who was translated by the word of God, and this man who is with me is Elijah the Tishbite, who was translated in a fiery chariot" (Nicodemus; Apoc. Ch. xx).

THE NEW TESTAMENT'S WITNESS

The doctrine of the descent into hell may be found alluded to in the canonical books; thus, for instance, in I Peter:

"It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also bath suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: by which he also went and preached unto the spirits in prison" (I Peter 3:17-19).

Again, in "Acts," where the writer is speaking of David as prophet, he says:

"He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption" (Acts 2:31)

The reason why Christ Jesus has been made to descend into hell, is because it is a part of the universal mythos, even the three days' duration. The Saviors of mankind had all done so, he must therefore do likewise. The Gentile redactors and writers of the New Testament only "patterned" the life of Jesus after their own pagan beliefs. Events in the life of the pagan Sun-gods and Saviors were transposed into the life of Christ.

All these gods, and many others that might be mentioned remained in hell for the space of three days and three nights. "They descended into hell, and on the third day rose again."

SO WHY THE THREE DAY TIME PERIOD THAT THEY HAD TO REMAIN IN HELL?

One only need look at the stars to know the story. Also, this explains why nation after nation had the same story of the Sun-gods. They all studied the stars.

Thus the story of the three days' entombment has an astronomical explanation...the winter soltice. The sun lies still and apparently motionless, neither ascending nor descending, for nearly three days at the midwinter solstice. It was thought by primitive man that the sun was in a tomb for three days having descended to Hell, the lowest point of its annual cycle. In tracking the course of the sun man could detect the time when the sun shown least every year. For 3 days when the sun is the lowest in the horizon it appears to be motionless for 3 days then beings it northward ascent again. These 3 "shrortest" days of the year provided the least amount of light of the whole year. The sun was believed to have died. The prayer was that it would rise again and the prayer always worked, the sun was born-again each year at midwinter (raised from the dead) as it began it northward track in the sky. However the battle of light with darkness (temptation) continued until the vernal equinox and only when the days became longer than the nights were the ancient astrologer priests happy to celebrate the sun's rebirth. So, the birth of god was at the midwinter solstice but he was fully born again at the vernal equinox (spring). Hence, spring was chosen to represent this "three days' descent of the gods into hell and death because very shortly the days would get longer and spring would arrive with its new life and vegetation after the "death" of winter. The Persians had an astronomical figure representing the descent of a god into hell and returning at the time that Orsus, the goddess of spring, had conquered the god of winter. The author of Revelation describes the Lamb of God (Rev 12) as conquering the dragon, which is the Scorpion or Dragon of the first month of winter, October, being conquered by the Lamb of March or spring.

NOW FOR SOME TOUGH QUESTIONS

If you are a "thinking believer" then you can easily see that the above story concerning Jesus is pure fiction based upon the primitive fears and suspicions of mankind. Hopefully today we know better. But to the point.

We possess a document that is touted to be "inspired, infallible, and inerrant;" the New Testament. As you can see we have a sever problem here both in I Peter and Acts let alone the doctrines emanating from such a book as expressed in the "Creed" of the Church.

Answer for yourself: If I Peter can be shown to be in error, what other "errors" are contained within it let alone other books in the New Testament?

Answer for yourself: If the writer of I Peter got it wrong about the descent into hell, what about other doctrines within the same verse: atonement, redemption, etc? Could he be wrong about these as well?

Answer for yourself: What about the book of Acts as well as it represents the Pauline mission with its doctrines as well?

THERE WAS DARKNESS ALL OVER THE LAND...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

If you have been diligent to read up and through this article then you should be impressed at the evidence presented.

Answer for yourself: Can such parallels be resigned to mere "coincidence"?

If you have ever spent much time in serious study of the New Testament then you have already seen how many of the events of the life of Jesus have been embellished by the early Gentile Church to "make Jesus greater" than those who came before him. And let me say that I believe he was greater than any. However, we need not make the "fish story" longer if you know what I mean for the truth is enough. The next example is really not of any major importance, but is included as it again is a parallel to the Sun-Myths and can be easily interpreted in such a manner.

In the same manner ends the tale of the long toil and sorrows of other Sun-gods. The last scene exhibits a manifest return to the spirit of the solar myth. He (the Sun personified) must not die the common death of all men, for no disease or corruption can touch the body of the brilliant Sun. After a long struggle against he dark clouds who are arrayed against him in an effort to prevent his light, he is finally overcome, and the Sun eventually dies beneath the horizon. Such are the stories of all the preceding Sun-gods who became men. With the setting of the Sun it was understood to "die" only to be "raised" again. Blacker and blacker grow the evening shades, and finally "there is darkness on the face of the earth," and the din of its thunder crashes through the air (Description of the death of Hercules, Tales of Ancient Greece, pp. 61-62).

It is the picture of a sunset in wild confusion, of a sunset more awful, yet not more sad, that which is seen in the last hours of many other Sun-gods. It is nothing more than a picture of the battle of the clouds over the dead or dying Sun, which is to be seen in the lengendary history of many Sun-gods. Just described is the "battle of the clouds over the dead or dying Sun..." (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 91).

If one undertakes the study of Bet Emet's Websites, and understand it is a life's work, then one is prepared to understand what has happened to Christianity down through the centuries and how Divine Truths, once expressed through allegory, metaphor, and simile by the Ancients who first received the Revelations of God, has been suppressed, altered, and tragically lost today through the "literalization" of such revelations given to us by the Ancients. This is a tragic story to say the least and renders us as "believers" and "followers of the New Testament Jesus" as idolators and we never know it because our Bibles inherited from Rome are "forged" in key "theological places". If you are diligent to study and learn from what is shared on these multiple sites then over time you will understand how it is possible to follow the "New Testament Jesus" in one way which ends with idolatry and in another way which ends in holiness and righteousness. The key to all of this rest in the true identity of "the Christ," "the Logos", and "Christ Jesus". We are all familiar with these terms but we will see hopefully there is a big difference between what we have been taught about them today and what they meant to the original Christians. Rome's has played a key role in the loss of these Divine truths and the substitution of falsehoods as you will come to see. "Surely that is not possible" I hear you say, but I only wish it were so. For your study and thought are these websites which were developed and revised over the years as Bet Emet Ministries' studies have progressed and deepened and more parts of the "theological puzzle" of Christianity became apparent to myself and others associated with Bet Emet.

These websites are intended to be "a step by step" process in your pilgrimage of learning. We begin by looking at the surface of the texts and then moving deeper as the websites progress we look often at the hidden and esoteric meanings that lie beneath these same texts. In other words we begin our websites with a "literal-historical" interpretation of "the Christ" and "Jesus Christ" and move later to the "Mystical Christ" and finally to the "Mythical Jesus Christ". As alluded previously we begin by looking at the "literal historical Jesus" and the texts and explain them "literally" as we have been taught since growing up most like since childhood in the Christian faith we inherited. In so doing it is my intent to show you and separate for you a Jewish Messiah and Judaism's truth from a non-Jewish Messiah and untruths given us by Rome. Only in such a "literal-historical" interpretation can we at first compare and contrast Judaism's truths against the later corruption of them by antisemitic Rome.

I don't expect all the readers to "agree" with what I write and reveal from my 20 years of scholarly studies from must reading an "article" or "two", but I do expect you to listen and take seriously what I show you since more than likely you have never looked into these matters and studied them out for yourselves as of yet. So be patient and "think" and in time I promise you as you get more of the puzzle pieces of this "Jesus Story" you will come to agree with what I have shown you in these articles for the facts and evidences, once possessed by you, will bring the necessary repentance in many areas of our Christian religious belief system which is so desperately needed today.

As your studies progress it is my hope that you will come to see the depiction of this "Jesus" in the New Testament in a deeper light; not as a historical-literal person but the "personification of Divine truth of 'the Christ'" that was entrusted to the Jewish nation for the Gentile world. As the websites progress you will come to see just whom this "Divine Christ within" really is and how this concept has tragically be changed by Rome and given a literal-historical life of its own. It is a real shame that the only Jew to ever came to you and me was this New Testament this "Christ" dressed up like Constantine and bearing "literalized sunworship concepts" which simply are not true in their "literal sense" since they bring idolatry with them. Over time you will come to see the Divine Truth within them however when they remain as allegories as they were intended for it is then and only then can they express the Divine truths as originally intended and as understood by the ancients who gave them to mankind in the first place. Rome changes them and never tells us in the book we inherited; the Roman Bible.

In closing it is my intent as a yet ordained Pastor who desired to serve the Creator and help His children do the same that once this information came to light over the years of my studies I realized that someone has to share and tell others of this deception in order that our worship of the Creator be in "Spirit and in Truth. Bet Emet, Hebrew for "House Of Truth", has done as best it can to present these truths in hopes that your love for and worship of God be perfected by what you learn from these articles.

The order of our study is very important. If you start from the beginning and work your way through these websites as if you are reading the "best of many books" (which you are) then you will end your study with few unanswered questions and you will have arrived as the truth you sought and have a very clear picture of whom God is and what He requires of you, the non-Jewish believer in Christianity today. Sure the trip is hard, long, and time consuming and filled with both tears and joy as you deal with what has happened at the hands of men who served themselves rather than God. But the goal must be kept squarely before you....to come to the Truth once known about God by these Ancients who framed many of the very same religious doctrines that sadly have come down to us altered today and sadly cover the pages of our Bibles. You will come to see that there is a very big difference from the Jewish Bible and the corrupted Gentile Christian Bible we inherited from Rome and for this reason I adopt a "literal-historical" approach to "Jesus Christ" in order to contrast Judaism's truths vs the Roman deception that lines the pages in our Christians Bibles. As we study we will come to see that the depiction of this "literalized Jesus Christ" as the "Jewish Messiah" by Rome in our forged Christian Bibles is a total deception. There are many reasons why the Jewish people and their Rabbis don't accept our "Christian Jesus". This forgery and deception and destruction of Divine Truths is Rome's doing! All of this is dealt with on our websites and you will get to it in time if you are diligent in your study. But to see this then we are forced to approach "Jesus Christ" assuming that what we read in our New Testaments is a "literal-historical" reality and only later will we examine in detail the evidence for a "literal-historical Jesus Christ" and in so doing come to see that the concept of "Jesus Christ" existed in Ancient Egypt over ten thousand years ago and begin to correctly see "the Christ" through eyes that see this Divine Concept "mystically" and "mythologically" as did the Ancients for thousands of years; that is until the 3rd century when Rome "reinterpreted" this Christ for the world at the point of a sword.

Let us end with one passage from the Hebrew Scriptures:

14 Then the LORD said unto me: 'The prophets prophesy lies in My name; I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spoke I unto them; they prophesy unto you a lying vision, and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their own heart.

It is time that we do diligent study in order to overcome these "lies" which we have inherited from Rome and others and repent of such error if it be in our life. It is time we search out and return to the faith of our Fathers who carry the Ancients traditions and truths with them. Today we find these "truths" in Judaism which itself is the Spiritual legacy of Egypt. Few know this because of lack of study but the beginning study has been done for you by Bet Emet where you can come to the knowledge of these things which were almost destroyed out of existence by the Roman purges of knowledge during the Dark Ages. It is time you accept the mantle of study which in first century Israel was "the highest form of worship".

Lev 20:77 Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy; for I am the LORD your God (the Jewish Tanakh)

PRESENTING THE "JESUS STORY" THROUGH THE 4 WAYS OF RABBINICAL TEACHING

The Websites and our spiritual pilgrimage follow but I must say that what I uncovered when getting to the bottom of the origin of the "Jesus Story" is that the "New Testament Jesus" can be understood in many different ways and in so doing yet communicate Divine Truth to the reader. I have discovered through my 20 years of study that we basically have 3 different ways to understand "the Christ" and the "Jesus Story" as I and others see it. We at Bet Emet Ministries have covered all 3 different understandings and presentations of "Jesus Christ" through the totality of our websites. Taken in order our Websites take the student through these 3 different understanding of "the Christ" in systematic order.

- Historically...(Ancient myths which were taught by Rome through the medium of a presumed historical person; although not accurate to the existence of a historical person yet important for us in that it can and does serves as an example of spirituality and righteousness to be emulated by all mankind)
- Mystically...(expressing a hidden teaching, a secret doctrine, given under strict and exacting conditions to approved candidates by the Masters of Wisdom regarding the descent of the Logos into matter, ie., mankind), which when properly understood with the necessary "keys of interpretation" is revealed as the metaphysical teaching of the Descent of the Soul into matter; said more simply the Descent of God/Spirit/Energy into matter (eventually the flesh of mankind) and we see this presence of God in man as the indwelling Christ within).
- Mythically...(personification of the Sun and its path through the Zodiac and the 4 seasons of the year; the equinoxes and solstices, which when properly understood with the necessary "keys of interpretation" is revealed as the mystical teaching of the gestation, birth, life, death, and rebirth of the Soul/Christ in mankind).

Paul speaks of this Mystical and Mythical Christ:

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are all three methods of presenting Jesus Christ equally accurate to truth? No, they are not, and our Websites will provide the evidence you need to not only see this for yourself but make adjustments in your religious belief system when needed. We will show you how Judaism maintained these Divine truths of "the Christ" and how later Rome will not only burn the libraries of the world to cover up their adulteration of the truth about "the Christ within" but almost eradicate this knowledge for the world by the "literalization" of "the Christ" where He is limited to only one man instead of indwelling in every child of God. Our focus needs to be on correctly interpreting the Mystical and Mythical Christ and then dealing with the erroneously interpreted "Historical Jesus...the Christ with flesh".

We must study in order as we progress from a "literal-historical" understanding of "the Christ" which we were given first in our Christian experience and progress to the deeper understandings of "the Christ". It goes without saying that we all begin to read and study the Bible from a "literal" perspective assuming that it is the vehicle for "literal truth" about Jesus Christ, never realizing that often these stories were written to be understood as allegories by the original writers let alone ever realizing that our "Jesus Story" can be found in identical form all the way back to pre-dynastic Egypt over 13,000 years ago. Bet Emet Ministries began several years ago to present websites dealing with Christianity which at first adopted this "Literal Interpretation" of Jesus in the "Jesus Story" since the "literal" approach toward Jesus in the New Testament is taught today by almost all of Christianity as they assume that Jesus Christ was a historical person. We all grow up in the Western Hemisphere assuming that the "Jesus Story" is a historical reality; that is until we do the serious study of our faith required to get to the bottom of the "Jesus Story" and the religious synthesis within it. Only with the study of Comparative Religions where I found "my Jesus Story" repeated over and over again since Ancient Egypt in almost ever nation under the Sun but also later in my studies of Gnostic Christianity did I come to clearly see the Mystical Christ "within" which had been so tragically altered by Rome beginning in the second century. Many of our websites, especially the early ones from years ago, begin by approaching the "Jesus Story" from this historical-grammatical method of interpretation because this is how we first meet this "Christ" and grow up hearing only of a "literal-historical Christ". This is how we first get acquainted with the "Jesus Story". This "literal-historical" approach I felt was necessary to get the reader and student started in order to reveal the greater Spiritual Truths that lay within Biblical Judaism that does not come with the added baggage of idolatry which we find in Gentile Christianity. As a pastor I realized that it takes time for a "seed to grow" and if I strike out and were to say that "almost everything you believe about Jesus that Rome taught us in their Second New Testament is wrong" I would lose any hope of reaching people with the fruits of my studies. So the beginning study of the Jewish Roots of Christianity follows the Rabbinical Methods of teaching and I applied them to Bet Emet's presentation of the "Jesus Story" and the totality of our Websites. There are 4 levels of Rabbinical teaching.

PASHAT

The first level of understanding is PASHAT (simple). The Pashat is the literal meaning. It is similar to what Protestant hermeneutics calls "Grammatical Historical Exegesis" and also similar to what Protestant Hermeneutics calls "The Literal Principle." The PASHAT is the plain, simple meaning of the text; understanding scripture in its natural, normal sense using the customary meanings of the words being used, in accordance with the primary exegetical rule in the Talmud that no passage loses its PASHAT (b.Shab. 63a; b.Yeb. 24a). While there is figurative language (like Ps. 36:7) symbolism (like Rom. 5:14); allegory (like Gal. 4:19-31) and hidden meanings (like Rev. 13:18; 1Cor. 2:7) in the Scriptures, the first thing to look for is the literal meaning or PASHAT. This is how and why I developed the first websites and in so doing try to reveal the beauty of Biblical Judaism to the Christian student desiring the truth of his Jewish Roots. History teaches us today that, yes, Israel was hoping for and looking for one that might come like their famous King David and conquer the Gentiles, but more than this history today also teaches us that these first believers in "the Christ" in Israel, both Jew and Gentile, were followers of "Chrestus" (the Christ within). We must not confuse these two terms for "Chrestus (the Christ within) is NOT the "Christos" of Rome's later imagination. You have to study to see this. For it is in Biblical Judaism do we find our links with Egypt in their purest form thus preserving better than any these Ancient understandings of God and the Cosmos and "the Christ within" and man's responsibilities to the Creator. These following websites approaches "the Christ" as an assumed "historical person" yet never telling the reader that behind this motif of a "historical Jesus" lies the greatest deception know to mankind (the Christ within was later 'literalized' and placed in a 'historical' setting of Rome's choosing.

- (The examination of the Jewish and Hebrew Roots of the Christian Faith as taken from a literal perspective. In so doing we expose many of the errors in doctrine and practice of today's Gentile Christianity with special emphasis upon the non-Jewish believer and his Divine place within the Israel of God instead of enmeshed in replacement religion as exists today in Gentile Christianity. We pay no attention in this site to the many problems concerning the Historical Jesus and approach the study from the normal assumption that the historical Jesus is true since that is how most of us grew up believing in the first place...in later sites we look at this problem in greater detail).

- THE COVENANT OF NOAH & THE LAWS OF NOAH AND THEIR RELATIONSHIP TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH
 - http://covenantofnoah.netfirms.com
 - http://www.geocities.com/covtnoah
 - (Now we look in depth to the non-Jewish believer and how he fits into true Biblical Faith. This is very important information and necessary for every Christian to read and study in detail. This is a very revealing study of the Covenants of God with special emphasis upon the Covenant concerning the non-Jew which are called today the Covenant of Noah comprising the 66 commandments of Noah; included in this site are OT references to this covenant as well and revealing exposition of this same covenant in the NT as taught to the non-Jews in fulfillment of the Great Commission before Rome would change everything in the 3rd and 4th century; see how the Pattern of Worship was the same for the Jew and non-Jew as they both kept and observed the same Biblical Festivals (equinoxes and solstices) and how denominational Christianity has missed the mark throughout history due to it's antisemitic background, the reinterpretation of these sacred times and appointed times of God along with altering Ancient spiritual dogmas).
- THE BIBLICAL "PATTERN" OF WORSHIP & THE GENTILE GOD-FEARER IN THE FIRST CENTURY SYNAGOGUE-"CHURCH"
 - http://jewishrootscx.netfirms.com
 - (Having learned all of this knowledge from the above websites and fully convinced that repentance is needed in my "Christian religious belief system" then the question that should be asked is this one as I see it: "If I, as a non-Jew, who had not converted to Judaism, had lived in the first century in Israel and had come into contact with this "Joshua-Jesus Movement within Israel as we find it in Acts 15 for example, then what would you have been taught about how a non-Jew is to "worship" the Creator"? Is there a "Pattern of Worship" of God that I need to know about? Other questions come to mind: What are we to do as we study and learn the truth about the early Gentile inclusion into the Israel of God? How are we to worship today since learning these truths which reveal the ruse and deception of Rome which changed the worship of God in the 3rd century? How can I bring this understanding into my life today? How can I worship the Creator in "Spirit and in Truth" in light of what I have learned in the above websites that has shown me that I have been badly taught and so badly misquided by my spiritual leaders in Christianity today? If you want those answers then this website is for you. My apologies that it is not finished but under "construction" but better to begin to learn what we can when we can than waste any more time. I trust that in time the website will be finished.

REMEZ

The next level of understanding is called in Hebrew REMEZ (hinting at a prior truth or a hidden truth that goes beyond the current text). Peculiarities and contradictions in the Biblical texts are treated and presented to the reader as hinting at a deeper truth than that conveyed by its PASHAT. The fun of discovering our Jewish Roots, Sabbaths, and Biblical Festivals is over and it is time for serious investigation of our inherited faith. Our Websites get more challenging as I begin using the principle of Remez to hint that there are problems with the "Jesus Story" and begin to question many of the teachings of Christianity and their presentation of Jesus as the Jewish Messiah. We still approach these issues as if "historical" but as your studies progress you begin to slowly get the picture that there is severe problems with what Christianity teaches about "the Christ" and its presentation of Jesus as the Jewish Messiah. It bears saying again that we approach this information again as if "historical" but as our websites progress we will soon move to the "Mythical" and the "Mystical" presentations of Jesus Christ. You might say we are in the process of cracking the egg shell regarding the "Jesus Story".

- RETURNING TO THE BIBLICAL FAITH OF JESUS/YESHUA BY EXAMINING CLOSELY OUR BIBLES
 - http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com
 - http://geocities.com/thefaithofjesus
 - (We move on and begin to look at our New Testaments since it is within them that we have the core of the problems concerning this Jewish Messiah portrayed as Jesus. Here we encounter examples of such textual and scriptural falsifications in our Christian Bibles, both Old and New Testaments as mentioned in the previous sites.. hundreds of examples where the facts and truths that once existed in the Jewish Masoretic Old Testament texts were purposefully changed in the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures by the Essenes and later incorporated into almost all Christian Old Testaments and the implication of such purposeful alterations by not only the Jews of Alexandria (the Essenes), but the later changing and altering of this solar-mythology by the Gentile Church in their final production.. .the New Testament. Here we encounter the change of these Divine Concepts as they become altered and reinterpreted and attached to the life of the New Testament Jesus. So it is necessary that we become very familiar with the document called the New Testament which has incorporated such religious agendas over time)

 - http://historyofformationofnewtestament.netfirms.com
 - http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua
 - (Now we must understand how we actually got this New Testament in the first place. This study is as best as possible an unbiased and intense study into the New Testament, its origins, its canonization, the disagreements of the early Church Fathers as seen for hundreds of years in the conflicts and disagreements concerning it, its falsification and purposeful mistranslation of the Jewish Masoretic text, the role of the Essenes in the falsification of the Jewish Old Testament and its impact of the later developing New Testament, and the determination of the role of the Holy Spirit in the production of the New Testament...if any)

- PAUL...THE TRUE FOLLOWER OF JESUS...OR...SUBVERTER OF THE FAITH OF JESUS AND FOUNDER OF A NEW RELIGION?
 - http://paulproblem.netfirms.com
 - http://paulproblem.faithweb.com
 - http://geocities.com/paulproblem
 - (Now we move to the Paul Problem. Let it be said that I am hard on Paul since he has been presented to us on the pages of this New Testament in a particular way and reinforced by 2000 years of Church Tradition. I must say that I deal with Paul "literally" as this is the way he has again been presented to us on the pages of the New Testament and in so doing I spare no ink in pointing out the problems this presents regarding a Jewish interpretation of "the Christ". Understand that this is a very challenging website which exposes the deception behind the New Testament's presentation of the Apostle Paul and his assumed rejection of Judaism. This site reveals the truth behind the purposeful manipulation of history and facts to cover up the truth about a Gnostic Paul who actually and historically only wrote 7 epistles where he espouses a synthesis of Gnosticism, Mystery Religions, and Judaism...along with this I reveal his and later pro-Pauline writers purposeful misuse of the Jewish Scriptures by Pauline writers in their presentation to the non-Jewish world of a new religion and how they made it seem as if Jesus was the cause for it...this is strong stuff and not for the faint-hearted. We will look at Paul in a different light when he is later put into his Gnostic setting which is historically accurate and only then we can say "kind things" about Paul...so hold on...we need to find the "real Paul" and we don't have it yet since Rome forged all but 7 of his epistles which he wrote and put his name on all others which they forged....modern scholarship will teach you this and how to spot this...so we have to be hard on Paul for right now since Christians believe that he taught all the things that carry his name. We will see as we study that he did not express an anti-Jewish faith and and anti-Law bias as portrayed in the Roman New Testament and the blame for this deception is again laid on the lying pens of Rome....so we deal on this site as "if" Paul was responsible for these writings since we are taught he wrote them all by Roman tradition)

- THE JEWISH CONCEPT OF "THE" MESSIAH....WHY CAN'T THE JEWS AND THE CHRISTIANS AGREE?
 - http://jewishmessiah.netfirms.com
 - http://www.geocities.com/bennoah1messiah
 - (Now we enter the beauty of Judaism and the truths they taught about their own Messiah and once knowing this then it is easy to contrast them with what we have been taught as Christians that come from our forged Christian Bibles. Ever wonder why the Jews and Gentile Christianity cannot agree on the Jewish Messiah? At last the unbiased truth concerning the Jewish Messiah and with it many explanations as to how the Christian theology concerning the Messiah deviates so drastically from the Jewish Messianic concepts as well as emphasis on the corruption of the Gentile's religious texts (OT and NT) which culminates in the creation of a Messiah which was never prophesied by the Jewish prophets.....the answers for the Gentile Christian are not always comforting but if you want the truth it is here for the interested and unbiased student and true seeker of truth. This is a selective summary of what went before on the other sites where I pull together pertinent information concerning one topic and one topic only: THE MESSIAH. If your desire is to study what the Hebrew Scriptures taught about the Jewish Messiah before they were altered and changed as they were later purposefully mistranslated into the Greek and even later carried over in their corrupted forms into the Christian's Old Testament and New Testament texts by Rome, then this material and information is for you. Along with this site is the examination of text after text not only in it's Hebraic original form but as it was altered and changed thereby causing New Testament believers to ignorantly accept and cherish beliefs about Yeshua/Jesus which not only are incorrect but which render them idolators before God).
- A TRUTHFUL ANALYSIS OF MESSIANIC PROPHECIES IN THE HEBREW BIBLE AS CONTRASTED WITH THE CHRISTIAN TRANSLATIONS...DID JESUS FULFILL THEM?
 - http://messianicprophecy.netfirms.com
 - http://www.geocities.com/bennoah1
 - (A very detailed examination of the Hebrew Scriptures and how they were later altered when translated into the Greek, Latin, and English versions of Christian Bibles by Rome. We trace the corruption of the Jewish Scriptures from the Hebrew in which they were originally written and show how these Jewish Scriptures were later purposefully mistranslated, purposefully misquoted, purposefully misapplied, and even invented out of thin air in order to alter the hoped for human messiah into a "cosmic Godman" by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt. Later these very same altered passages will become forced "fulfillments" when applied to a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus in later Latin and English versions taken from the Greek forgeries of the Jewish Scriptures. We show repeatedly how the Greek translations were forged in order to include the Essene concept of their "angel messiah" and "cosmic Godman" and later how this concept would be further adulterated when applied to Jesus some two hundred years later through the further forgery of other Hebrew Scriptures by the Roman Gentile Church. In other words we show beyond any doubt how the Holy Word of God has been corrupted today. No wonder the Jewish people don't believe in the Christian Jesus; their Jewish Scriptures read completely different than those of the Christian Church in "key" messianic places)
- DANIEL 9:17-27: THE SEVENTY WEEKS OF YEARS AS TAKEN FROM THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES

- http://seventyweeksdaniel.netfirms.com
- http://geocities.com/bennoah3
- http://daniel70wks.faithweb.com
- (We now look at a very problematic piece of prophecy. Of all the Old Testament scriptures translated and quoted (or purposely mistranslated or misquoted) by Christian evangelicals in hopes of finding validation to most of their Gentile Christian doctrines, Daniel 9:17-27 and Isaiah 53 are perhaps the two most popular. In both cases, Christianity relies on a claim that the only reasonable interpretation of those scriptures is theirs. But is this true? Have our Christian Bibles been forged to force fulfillments as applied to Jesus when the true Hebrew Scriptures read differently than our Christian Bibles? Well...it is time to see the truth for yourself concerning Daniel's 70 weeks and then you decide who is right....Judaism or Christianity)

- THE ESSENE CHRISTIAN FAITH AND ITS LEGACY OF SUN WORSHIP
 - http://essenechristianfaith.netfirms.com
 - http://essene.freewebsites.com/
 - http://geocities.com/essenecx
 - (As stated earlier Divine allegory of the ancients has been "literalized by Rome" and presented to us in our Christian Bibles. We begin to see this through a comprehensive and challenging investigation into the true origins of the Essene-Christian faith as we begin in Egypt and it's worship of God. In so doing we spend some time understanding Egyptian Sun-worship where astral-theology and solar-worship was personified into "savior Godmen"...Osiris being both the first and the "pattern" of all that followed; tracing such solar beliefs through successive Gentile nations and making note of similarities as well as differences, until we come to the Essene/Qumran cult, who, in rejection of Biblical Judaism because of their inability to assume the Priesthood following the Maccabee war, evolved away from Biblical Judaism and adopted these astral-theological religious ideas which had more in common with Egypt, Persian, Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, Pythagorianism, etc., than with Judaism, until we end up with a "corrupted Judaism" which is more commonly known today as Christianity. If these beliefs of "personified Sun worship" had remained but allegories and symbols we would not have a problem since they taught about the Descent of the Soul again in matter and the flesh of mankind, but they will not and under the Essenes were applied first to a "historical person" who lived long before the first century. The pattern is forged and later applied through oral tradition to one who was expected to come but did not. Thus we get the "literalized-historical Jesus Story" in hindsight. What we find is that the Essenes "literalized" these prior Divine Allegories concerning Divine Truths expressed by the Ancients through the medium of myths and symbols and first applied them to a man and later to the "Joshua-Jesus" we see in our "Jesus Story" today as if a "historical reality". It is in the hands of these apostate Essenes where these Divine concepts were "literalized" and were purposefully included in a falsified translation of the Jewish Old Testament called the Greek Septuagint. In so doing these Divine Concepts lose their original spiritual meanings and these reinterpreted doctrines become parts of the Greek Old Testament for the Greek speaking world and for all later Christians and the Christian Church; thus providing the substrate for all later quotes of the New Testament. The bottom line being that personified Sun-worship was applied to the life of the human Jewish Messiah as recorded in the New Testament and it is we today, not knowing that these concepts were only to be taken allegorically, have been misled to see in them a "literal" understanding when they never were originally intended to be taught as such. In so doing we spend a lot of time with the texts in order to see how this was done and how extensive this misrepresentation is in our Bibles).

- THE PAGANIZATION OF THE FAITH OF YESHUA ...AND THE BIRTH OF "GENTILE CHRISTIANITY"
 - http://paganizingfaithofyeshua.netfirms.com
 - http://www.paganizingfaithofyeshua.freeservers.com
 - (We move on now to look at more "literalization" of Sun-Worship as it was applied to the Jesus of the New Testament by the writers of the this New Testament. This is a very, very challenging study and expose of how Sun-Worship today as masqueraded as "orthodoxy" in Christianity...the subject is diverse and will require adequate reading on your part but well worth the price as you learn of the origin of the Sun Myths which were later personified by the Indo-Germanic nations and later written into the translation of the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt. These accounts would be later embellished by the Gentile Church as they applied them to the life of the Jewish Messiah as represented through this Jesus as they build it off the falsifications of the Greek Old Testament as altered by the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt; this site exposes the false theology connected with Jesus which lines almost every page in the New Testament in one way or another...a through understanding of this site, as well as the others of Bet Emet Ministry, exposes beyond any doubt the lies and idolatry that has been foisted upon unsuspecting Gentiles who are yet today pawns of this theological deception and antisemitism of Rome)

This approach, teaching God's higher Divine truths through the vehicle of a godly example, the "assumed historical Jesus of the New Testament", works well up to a point because in doing so we are presented with a "Godly" example of a life to be emulated as found in the Jesus of the New Testament (for the most part). A life patterned after the Jesus of the "Jesus Story" will hopefully issue forth in one bearing the fruit of morality and ethics and one lived in the Fruit of the Spirit. This is the reason why Israel does not evangelize today because Christianity has accomplished for them their task as God's Priesthood. As a pastor I wish they could have accomplished this without the masked idolatry connected with the "Jesus Story". The non-Jew has learned of the God of Israel and has learned how to live in peace and harmony through the teachings of Christianity. Sadly in all of this the main character, the Jewish Messiah, has been so badly misrepresented in the character of Jesus who, for example, is made to cleanse all foods and abolish the kosher laws in Mark 7:14. This is rather strange for a Jew who is obligated to observe Kosher. Hopefully you see the problems of what I speak. Again through our websites the student is made aware of the problems inherent in places in this New Testament's depiction of the New Testament Jesus as the expected "Jewish Messiah". Yet, in such a presentation then Jesus is the non-Jew's "pattern" for he, real or not, is the only Jew to ever witness to us and came knocking on the doors of our lives to teach us of God. Sadly the Jewish community is closed to the non-Jew for the most part due to the tragic treatment of their people by the Christian Church these last 2000 yrs. As I say often it is so sad that when we answered the door of our lives as we heard the "knock" of this New Testament Jewish Rabbi named Jesus that we did not possess, at that time, enough knowledge of the truth about "the Christ within" and the true "Jewish Messiah" as taught from the Hebrew Scriptures and not the forged ones Rome gave us, that we could not recognize that this Jew named Jesus, as God's "light to the Gentile world", came dressed like the idolator Constantine teaching a replacement religion that nullified Judaism's truths. Lacking this knowledge which Bet Emet's Websites provide the student we bought unsuspectingly into the Roman counterfeit and no wonder the Jews cannot accept this Roman Jesus as their Messiah. Good for them! But hopefully as your studies mature you begin to see that there are other ways to understand the "Jesus Story" but surely understanding the "Jesus Story" as a historical truth concerning a literal person who lived 2000 years ago and who embodied the historical Jewish Messiah is not one of them. The facts and evidence proving this cannot be denied when seen by any "thinking believer".

DRASH

Another level of Jewish hermeneutic and understanding the Scriptures is called in Hebrew "drash" meaning "search", this is the allegorical, typological or homiletical application of the text. Creativity is used to search the text in relation to the rest of the Scriptures, other literature, or life itself in order to develop an allegorical, typological or homiletical application of the text. This process involves eisegesis (reading of the text) of the text. Ironically as I found this expression or interpretation of the texts reflected most accurately the type of "belief" of the earliest Chrestians, mistakenly called Christians by Rome later, who were not only looking for a historical Jewish Messiah to be revealed but at the same time understood that the "logos" or "the Christ/Sophia/Egyptian Karast" lived within all mankind. This understanding of "the Christ" reflects Paul and his 7 authentic epistles where he teaches the "Christ within".

As you might expect a few years later, as time allowed, Bet Emet provided a website dealing with the Mystical Interpretation of the "Jesus Story" and "the Christ" as we showed that the religious beliefs of the earliest "believers" who were called the first "Christians", long before Rome emerged to dominate the Christian faith, did not accept a historical Jesus at all but rather understood "the Christ" as a Divine Concept that lives within every man and woman and is not exclusive to just one person as is portrayed today by "literalistic Roman Christianity. It is in this site that we restore the earliest Egyptian and later Gnostic Chrestian (Christian) understanding of the "the Christ" as it existed for almost 5 centuries before being utterly destroyed by Rome with its replacement religion we have today which I call "Literal Christianity".

- MARCION AND THE "FIRST" NEW TESTAMENT...WHO WERE THE ORIGINAL CHRISTIANS AND WHAT DID THEY BELIEVE ABOUT "THE CHRIST"?
 - http://firstnewtestament.netfirms.com
 - (Now we put all the pieces together and the whole picture comes into focus. We now look at the true Paul, a Gnostic which never taught a human Jesus Christ but rather "the Christ within" in his 7 authentic epistles. We trace in this website how the earliest "Christian" believed in the "Christ within" and not "a Christ without". We see how the ancient religious allegories were understood not only by these ancients who were given them but by the Gnostic Jews and Gentiles in the earliest centuries of the church as well long before Rome will come an "literalize" all of it and give it a fictitious historical timeline in creating a "historical Jesus". In so doing we will see how the earliest New Testament expressing these allegorical Divine truths is butchered by Rome and destroyed and how we end up with the forgery we have today. Never let it be said that archeology and hard study are not our friends.

An unbiased study of History will show you that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence or any "unforged" anywhere that the "Jesus Story" originated as the biography of a man named Jesus, and quite a lot of evidence exists that will prove that it did not. An unbiased through study of Comparative Religion will reveal to you that the basic plot of the "Jesus Story", from beginning to end, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions thousands of years prior to the alleged time of Jesus and if you continue such dedicated studies into Astronomy and Solar Mythology you will find that beyond any doubt the "Jesus Story" is nothing more than an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the path of the Sun through the celestial sphere and the 12 Houses of the Zodiac during the year. To you amazement, if you continue your study, the personification of the Sun through the sky as found in the story of ancient solar and lunar gods as it moves through the Zodiac and as followed in chronological procession through the year matches EXACTLY the chronology of the "Jesus Story" when personified from Matthew chapter 1 through then end of the book at Matthew 28. This will take your breath away for event after event, saying after saying, from chapter to chapter parallels the Ancients' story of the personified "sungods" in their lives and events. There truly is nothing new under the Sun (forgive the pun). But take heart, a deeper spiritual understanding of this cycle is before us as again God is teaching man of the "gestation, birth, life, death, and rebirth" of the Soul in mankind and when expressed through allegory and simile it took the form of the stories of the lives of the sungod which later the "Jesus Story" was copied from. That explains why they read the same.

This website will be a lot different from anything you most likely have ever studied. Growing up in the Western Hemisphere we are traditionally taught a "literalistic" and not an "allegorical" or "symbolic" understanding of Christianity. This "literalistic" interpretation of "Jesus" and "the Christ" is based upon the inherited religious documents we received from Rome which we were taught to accept as infallible and inerrant without every questioning them. However great advances in Biblical Studies and archeology have been made in the last two hundred years and one in particular in the last 50 years has made a startling impact upon Christianity and few know of this. I am referring to the discoveries of the Nag Hammadi Library along with the Essene's Dead Sea Scrolls in the last 50 years which has turned our traditional Roman understanding of Christianity upside down and basically taught us that almost everything we had through we had "known" from Roman Christianity up to now concerning "Jesus" and "the Christ" was most likely wrong. That is simply because when we discover from study of these archeological finds and see for ourselves that the First New Testament written and given to us by the earliest Gnostic Christians like Marcion and Paul did not teach a "human Jesus Christ" but rather an allegorical and symbolic "Christ" as the Logos within each of God's children. This explains why there were no genealogies, birth or infancy narratives, or the 4 traditional Gospels in the earliest Gnostic Gospels until the second century when Rome created the "literal-historical" Jesus Christ. It is this "allegorical Christ" and "allegorical Joshua-Jesus Christ" [pattern] that the earliest New Testament and the authentic Pauline epistles taught but few know this today since Rome's efforts to destroy all of this literature as well as murder the Gnostics until few remained to safeguard this Revelation which can be traced to the beginning of mankind. In this website I reveal these truths concerning the "allegorical Christ" of the earliest Chrestians (Christians). Along with this we tackle the difficult problem of Christian forgeries of later Pauline Epistles and Gospels in their attempt to create a "historical Jesus" and a "historical Christ" in order to mimic their Godman-Emperor. This information goes a long way not only in explaining the lack of credible and unforged evidences of a historical Jesus but show how a Second New Testament was latter forged in Paul's name, who was long dead, along with the names of long dead Apostles in Rome's attempt to place a historical Jesus within an appropriate timeline. By comparison of what was written and contained within the First New Testament with what was later written later by Irenaeus and others in Rome's attempt to refute the Gnostic Christ and the Gnostic Joshua-Jesus we can easily now come to terms with this creative theology of Rome which was little more than a synthesis of "literalized" Sun Worship as exposed on our other sites. What should strike you as you study these materials is that the concept of the "Logos" and the "allegorical Christ" goes all the way back to the beginning of mankind where God gave Revelation of Himself and His plan to the Ancient Egyptians who first wrote of the Karast/Christ.)

SOD

The 4th and final level of understanding the Scriptures is called in Hebrew "Sod" meaning "hidden". It is here that I reveal the hidden links to Egypt and Astronomy which they "allegorized" to capture for all time the Divine Concepts that they witnessed written in the sky and Heavens above them. God, writing on the blackboard of the sky and Heavens, expressed to these Ancients sages and Priest eternal principles that were later captured in "myths" and "legends" to preserver for all time these Godly truths that would last through all time and yet today survive in spite of the destruction of Egypt by Alexander the Great and later Rome. These Laws of the Cosmos were expressed in allegorical myths that were reaffirmed by the same Laws witnessed operating in Nature. Ancient man, understanding that these same Laws operated within himself and his body saw therefore that "he was created in the image of God "; the image he witnessed operating above and around him when noticing the same Laws and Cycles in the Heavens and in Nature operating within his physical body as well. This is truly beautiful when you see it as it brought tears to my eyes to see and comprehend Gods' earliest message to me and you that has not been changed or adulterated by the agendas of men down through history. It is so simple when you see it. That is the way God intended it to be in the beginning but we strain at a nat and swallow a camel today with our highly developed and evolved theologies down through Christian history.

It has been a hard and long process for me to accomplish but my task is about through when I complete this last website on the "Mythical Jesus Christ" as seen in the stars.

Now it is time to devote this website to the comprehensive understanding of the "Mythical Christ". In so doing we will prove that the "Jesus Story" is actually an allegory for the path of the Sun "personified" as it travels through the 12 Houses of the Zodiac and through the 4 seasons of the years (the Spring Equinox, the Summer Solstice, the Autumn Equinox, and the Winter Solstice). You will come to see that this is the oldest and most important story humans ever knew as it also is full of Divine Truths that are to be understood "allegorically" and not "literally" as we have erroneously been taught today by a literalized Christianity of Rome's making. We owe a great debt to Ancient Egyptians and their great wisdom and their foresight in preserving for the the world this earliest understanding of God.

- THE EGYPTIAN RELIGION AND ITS RELATIONSHIP TO JUDAISM AND CHRISTIANITY

- We have all heard that "all roads lead to Rome" but in reality all roads lead to Egypt. This is especially true when one studies Christianity and Judaism and finds that these sister-faiths are nothing more than evolutionary developments of the Egyptian Religion. Understand from the beginning that Judaism is a much more faithful picture of this Planet's original understanding of the Divine than Christianity. Judaism comes in a close second. As a Pastor I am amazed where my studies have taken me and the things I have learned over these last twenty years in my pursuit of Jewish Roots of the Christian Faith. Never did I expect to find what I have uncovered and consider myself fortunate to live in an age where archeology and other such disciplines are giving back to mankind what Rome destroyed, covered up, and took from us over the last two thousand years. The study of error is often a little less important than the study of truth. The history of the human mind, in its progress from ignorance towards knowledge should tell us the mistakes into which it has sometimes wandered, as well as its steps in the right path. This is the goal of this website: to re-examine Gentile Christianity as to its earliest roots and determine if what is considered "Christian orthodoxy" today is a faithful representation of the earliest understanding of God by the Ancients since it is they who coined the religious concepts which we are told that we adhere to today in the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere.
- There is much to say about the knowledge contained in this Website but let me be brief. This website will reveal to you how the Ancients understood the message of God and His revelation to them from their critical observations about the Heavens and the sky as well as Nature. The Egyptians Priests and scholars understood that God was revealing His Laws and intentions in the operations of the Divine Laws that governed the Cosmos. These Ancients holy men saw that these same Laws operated within their own bodies as well and that they were "created in the image of God" as what God was doing "above them" and "around them" He also was doing "within them". These Ancients sought out God and His way like no other nation has ever done on the face of the earth and tragically this knowledge was lost to us until only recently with the discoveries of archeology. We must understand that when allegory, metaphor, simile, and myth which expressed both the identity and actions of the Creator as understood by the Ancients in grasping for understanding of God and His workings in the Cosmos, was altered and stripped of its symbolism and rendered for all time as if "literal" by those who will come later through "conquest" and destroy Egypt and their understanding of God, then not only is Divine Truth lost forever but it plunges its recipients into abject idolatry. Such is the plight of the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere as these allegories and metaphors that once expressed Divine Truth were altered by Rome and "literalized" and applied to men's lives; in this case Jesus. If you have been diligent to study the website referenced just above this one then you saw for yourself this tragic loss of Divine Truth by Rome's "literalization" of such Egyptian Ancient truths concerning the "Logos" and "the Christ".

- ASTROTHEOLOGY AND THE "JESUS STORY" OF THE NEW TESTAMENT: DOES IT ORIGINATE WITH THE STARS?
 - http://jesusastrotheology.netfirms.com
 - This will be the last website for Bet Emet Ministries and in so doing we will go where few have gone. In this website we will show beyond any doubt from Astronomical examples of the Sun, Moon, Stars, and Constellations, that the Ancients preserved what they witnessed in the stars and Heavens seen in the cycles, patterns and paths and movements of these Heavenly orbs in "allegories" and in "myths" and "legends" not only concerning physical movements of these Celestial orbs as taken from their observations but expressed within these "solar myths" and "lunar myths" deeper Divine Truths of a Mystical Nature. These hidden deeper Divine Revelations from God to mankind dealing with the Spiritual Nature of mankind and his expected Spiritual maturation were again saved for all time through the agency of Myth which was never to be interpreted "literally" but rather were to function as "allegories" and "symbols" only that were but vehicles for transmission of higher truths from God. From these celestial patterns the Ancients extrapolated the Laws, Ordinances, Commandments, and Covenants of the Creator and gave them to mankind as a "blueprint" for our existence. These myths held the message of God to mankind. Later these myths were told through lives of personified man-gods like Osiris, Dionysus, Attis, Amon, Mithra, and Jesus. Since we include Jesus in the same sentence with other astral myths then this will be a hard study for as you examine the evidence presented you will see without a doubt that an unbiased study of History shows that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence anywhere that the "Jesus Story" originated as the biography of a real historical man named Jesus. In fact the evidence, or should I say the lack of it, and the forgery of all that does exist outside this one New Testament, is hard to deny and makes a belief in a historical Jesus almost impossible when knowing from the above studies the hundreds of forgeries in the religious texts of the Christian Bible. Nowhere outside of this one forged book by Rome can we find this "historical Jesus". As if that was not enough an unbiased and through study of Comparative Religion reveals to the reader as seen in the above studies and sites that the basic plot of the "Jesus Story", from beginning to end, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions thousands of years prior to the alleged time of Jesus and if you continue such dedicated studies into Astronomy and Solar Mythology you will find that beyond any doubt the "Jesus Story" is nothing more than an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the path of the Sun through the celestial sphere and the 12 Houses of the Zodiac during the year. What is most startling is when you see for yourself that the personification of the Sun and its path through the sky as found in the story of ancient solar and lunar gods follow in chronological procession through the year the exact chronology of the "Jesus Story" when personified from Matthew chapter 1 through then end of the book. The Synoptic gospels follow the path of the Sun in its travels through the sky from beginning to end. Most may have no idea of what I am saying I can only tell you to hold on and read the articles on this site and you will quickly come to see of what I spoke. Let it be said when you see this and that all the other "Jesus Stories" are but Ancient allegories of the Heavens and the Sun and its path through the Zodiac which was later "literalized" then without a doubt there is no more room for idolatry connected with any Jesus of any kind. Then we can follow in the footsteps of Moses and quit worshipping a false "god-man" and return to worshipping our Creator in Spirit and in Truth. You come to see that the "Jesus Story" is nothing but a retelling of the "Osiris Story" and the "Horus Story". It is from these two Ancient Egyptian stories that all other "saviors" have come.

Orthodox Christians, since they are committed to a belief in the literal truth of the Bible, hold that after the flood men became even more evil than they were before, so that 4,000 years after the creation of the world, god sent his only begotten son to suffer and die for the salvation of the human race. This ministry of Jesus, the Christ, was supposed to be a unique event in human history but as we show it is anything but that. This opinion is no longer tenable among those who accept reason as the criterion of truth.

If you are diligent to study and read these websites then you have it all. There is little that exists that is not covered in one way or the other or has somehow escaped my attention over these almost 20 years of study. There is nothing I would trade for my years of study and the truths that I have gathered and although it has been challenging to my very core I fully am aware that because of such serious studies my walk with God, the true God, is closer than ever. It is truly well with my soul because "I KNOW THE TRUTH ABOUT GOD AND HIS CHRIST AS SEPARATED FROM ALL THE FICTION" that men have written down through history to promote their own religion and political agendas.

So we began our study with the question:

Matt 16:13 13 When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? (KJV)

Now you have you answers! ?The rest is up to you to study to show yourselves approved..needing not be ashamed when you meet this Creator face to face when you cross your Nile/Jordan...(the same)

IN CLOSING

As stated earlier we begin our study with Bet Emet Websites with a "historical" assumption and present studies to show the beauty of Judaism over the dishonesty in Christian theological dogma and do so by using the depiction of the New Testament Jesus as if "historical" because he provides a vehicle for the teaching of Jewish theology, monotheism, morals, values, ethics, etc. It is not my purpose to reveal the weaknesses behind such a historical presentation of Jesus at this time as it will be developed and proven at a later time as one's studies progress through the Mystical Jesus and the Mythical Jesus as detailed on the above websites.

Of concern for us of course is the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament and its reliability as understood "literally" since it is being taught as a literal truth today about a historical man who lived 2000 years ago. You will come to see in time as you study that the Ancients as far back as Egypt understood this "Karast/Christ" entirely different from how we have been taught today under the direction of Roman and Protestant Christianity. Here are some big questions for you to ponder in light that most Christians trust in this Jesus Christ for their Eternal Salvation.

- Answer for yourself: Who or what is truly behind the name "Jesus Christ"? Can it be proven that the "Jesus Story" is nothing but the personification of the Sun and its passage through the various houses of the Zodiac as it passes through the 4 seasons and the equinoxes and solstices? If so then what do you do now?
- Answer for yourself: Are the infancy narratives and later depictions of the life and ministry of Jesus Christ in the New Testament nothing more than solar stories told as allegories which were later "literalized" and subsequently written into Rome's New Testament and depicted as a literalized historical Jesus Christ when in fact they were understood by the Ancients as astrological myths taken from astronomy?
- Answer for yourself: Did Rome destroy the Gnostic Christ of the earliest "Christians" which had existed since the beginning of time over the first 5 centuries of the early Church and replace it one of their own making? What are you to do when you see this from your studies on our Websites?
- Answer for yourself: If I study the Websites and find that the "Jesus Story" follows chronologically the Gospel of Matthew from chapter one through the end of chapter 28 and see for myself that the "Jesus Story" presented there parallels identically the personification of the Sun in its path through the Zodiac then what should this mean to me regarding my belief in Jesus as the historical Christ and him being the Jewish Messiah?
- Answer for yourself: Have we as Christians and followers of the "the Christ" been deceived by Rome and spent a good part of our lives worshipping a man as God as Rome has declared in their New Testament since the Nicean Council (325 A.D.) when in fact we should have been worshipping the one true Creator as the Pharaoh Moses (Akhenaten) instructed when he stood up to the religious establishment of Egypt when some were straying from the truth in their worship of the "godman" similarity to what we have done today with Rome's historical Jesus? Are we guilty of idolatry as Christians because we have believed a fable no more real than Snow White and the seven dwarfs?

Well the following studies in the above websites is not for the weak of heart as I will present over and over again infallible proofs that the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament is but a hoax perpetrated upon us by Rome in their hatred of the Jewish faith and Jewish Gnosticism back in the first century. You will see, in the last website depicting the Mythical Christ, as we move chronologically from one sign of the Zodiac to the other, from month to month, from season to season, from Spring equinox to Summer solstice, from Autumn equinox to Winter solstice, and repeating again this cycle, along with the study of selected events from the depiction of the life of Jesus in Rome's New Testament, that if you study with us and finish the studies on this website, that the "Jesus Story" as depicted in the New Testament is nothing more than the literalization by Rome of the path of the Sun through the Zodiac along with other solar myths later incorporated into their "Jesus Story" as later literalized by Rome as well. In so doing you will see as I and many others have that we have not been taught the truth about "the Christ within" and how He is so integral to the proper worship of the Invisible God as Egypt and Moses taught. It would seem that Egypt got it right in the beginning but thanks to Hellenism and Romanism we lost these earliest and correct understanding of Divine Concepts witnessed in God's Heaven and Nature. In a way these were our classroom and where we were to be instructed by the Creator about our life and purpose in God's creation. We are truly blessed today to live in an age where archeology and the information age can bring these truths back to life for you and me.

As a "retired Pastor", and moved by what my studies revealed over the years, I feel moved to share this information and evidence from such studies with those interested in the truth behind the origin for "Jesus Story" which is taught to the world today as a historical reality when in fact it is not. In the websites that are delineated above such evidence is presented to the reader in hopes that the missing puzzle pieces concerning the "Jesus Story" will be plainly evident to him and he can, in the light of such knowledge, no longer be deceived by the astrological allegory of "the Christ" as found in the New Testament which is erroneously taught "literally" today. I make very few promises to our readers but I make this one now: If you do these studies, and read these articles on this website then you will be thoroughly convinced as I was that the "Jesus Story" was never meant to be understood "literally" as it has been taught to you and me. Thus the worship of Jesus as a historical person or connecting this assumed historical person with God or believing him to be God is the most vulgar idolatry according to Moses and the Ten Commandments and a terrible affront to the Creator and constitutes blasphemy of the Name of God.

Currently Bet Emet Ministries offers a CD with all our websites contained on it where the above information is available for easy search and study where you can work through this material at your leisure. If you would desire the synthesis of our scholarly studies into these areas concerning the origins for the Christian faith and the truth behind "the Christ" and the Jewish Messiah along with the "Jesus Story" then one is available for a small donation to support the efforts of this ministry. Inquire is you so desire by e-mailing me at the link below. Shalom.

We offer a CD of all out sites contained on one disk if you are interested...please inquire for the CD if you so desire DISTURBING QUOTES ABOUT THE CHRISTIAN FAITH....COULD THIS BE POSSIBLY TRUE AND WE NOT KNOW IT?

Let us begin this serious study with a series of very disturbing quotes. The information presented in these Web Pages is not provided as a form of entertainment. I strongly suggest that you do not continue your study and search for truth in these pages unless you are willing to take responsibility for what you learn.

2 Peter 2:21..."For it had been better for them not to have know the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandments delivered unto them. (KJV)

THE TESTIMONY OF THE APOSTLE PAUL INCRIMINATES THE FAITH THAT HE IS TEACHING THE GENTILES

We find Saint Paul, the first Apostle of the Gentiles, avowing that he was made a minister of the Gospel which had already been preached to every creature under heaven...

Col 1:23 23 If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you catch that?

Paul is stating that he, the Apostle to the Gentiles, is preaching a message that HAS ALREADY BEEN PREACHED TO EVERY CREATURE UNDER HEAVEN! This bears some deep thought. I did just that. This opened my heart and mind to considerable in-depth study to fathom out the depths of what this one verse alluded.

Simply said, Saint Paul was preaching a God manifest in the flesh, who had been believed on in the world before the commencement of his ministry. Dear one, this could not have been Jesus of Nazareth, who had certainly not been preached at that time, nor generally believed on in the world till ages after. Saint Paul owns himself a deacon, which is the lowest ecclesiastical grade of the Therapeutan church. Many wonderful books yet exist which explains this verse. Unfortunately it is not comforting to a Christian to learn the truth about "the Gospel" which Paul taught. I will now quote from a rather old book by Bunsen called The Angel-Messiah published in London in 1867. The following quote is taken from page 240:

"The Gospel of which Paul's Epistles speak had been extensively preached and fully established before the time of Jesus by the Terapeutae or Essenes, who believed in the doctrine of the Angel-Messiah, the Aeon from heaven; the doctrine of the "Anointed Angel," the doctrine of the atoning sacrificial death of Jesus by the blood of his cross; the doctrine of the Messianic ante-type of the Paschal lamb and of the Paschal omer, and thus the resurrection of Jesus Christ the third day according to the Scriptures-these doctrines of Paul can with more or less certainty be connected with the Essenes...It becomes almost a certainty that Eusebius was right in surmising that Essenic writing have been used by Paul and the evangelists. Not Jesus, but Paul, is the cause of the separation of the Jews from the Christians."

What Bunsen fails to tell us here explicitly, and which is alluded to only implicitly, is that the origin of this crucified "Angel-Anointed, Angel-Messiah" had its roots in the paganized worship of the Sun by the Gentile nations.

What one fails to understand when he hears the word "Essene" is that in the time of Yeshua these "Essenes" were no longer a holy lineage from Zadok, but were rather Pythagorean in their beliefs. Such a religious synthesis explains on the part of the Essenes of the first century how they came to believe in the crucified Sun god-men of which I will explain later. Let us resume for now.

The very ancient and Eastern doctrine of an Angel-Messiah had been applied to Gautama-Buddha, who predicted that another Avatar (an incarnated deity in some shape in the earth; usually of Hindu origin) would come upon the earth in six hundred years after his death. This time had nearly expired; so Jesus of Nazareth was proclaimed as the expected Messiah by these Buddhist Jews, and the Sun-Myths were interwoven with his real history. Jesus unquestionably possessed a nature as divine as it is possible for a human being to possess, or he would not otherwise have been received as the Angel-Messiah by a sect so pure and holy as were the Essenes.

But let us not stop short of the other disturbing quotes.

THE EARLY CHURCH FATHERS INCRIMINATE THEMSELVES AND THE GENTILE CHRISTIAN FAITH...AND I BET YOU NEVER KNEW THIS...DID YOU?

In Seminary I remember looking at the Library shelves that supported the multiple volumes of the Ante-Nicean Fathers. I beheld thousand and thousands of pages of their writings. I even amused myself that to read and understand such a large volume of literature would take years. It did!

What I came to admire about such writings is when you read enough of them you find that these "pro-Christian" writers often incriminated themselves with what they wrote. The following examples are for your benefit.

JUSTIN MARTYR

Eusebius, in his Church History, tells us that Justin, in his Dialogue with Trypho, says "there exists not a people, civilized or semi-civilized, who have not offered up prayers in the name of a crucified Savior to the Father and Creator of all things" (Hist. Eccl. lib i. ch. iv).

The honesty of Justin Martyr as portrayed here is the heart of the subject matter of these web pages. I intend to show you that from the beginning of time the pagan nations had their "crucified Sun-gods" and much recorded about Jesus of Nazareth in the New Testament is nothing more than the "re-telling" of the same Sun-Myths; the only difference is that now they are applied to the life of Jesus the Jew. Do you want the truth before you die? Then keep reading.

EUSEBIUS

Eusebius says that "the names of Jesus and Christ were both known and honored by the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. i. ch. iv). How could this be?

Eusebius, the great champion of Christianity, admits in his book: "that which is called the Christian religion is neither new nor strange, but-if it be lawful to testify the truth-was known to the ancients"

(Hist. Eccl. lib. 2, ch. v.). How could this be?

Eusebius, who is our chief guide for the early history of the Church, confesses that he was by no means scrupulous to record the whole truth concerning the early Christians in the various works which he has left behind him (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., ch. viii. p. 21).

Edward Gibbon, speaking of Eusebius says: "The gravest of the ecclesiastical historians, Eusebius himself, indirectly confesses that he has related what might rebound to the glory, and that he has suppressed all that could tend to the disgrace, of religion. Such an acknowledgment will naturally excite a suspicion that a writer who has so openly violated one of the fundamental laws of history has not paid a very strict regard to the observance of the other; and the suspicion will derive additional credit from the character of Eusebius, which was less tinctured with credulity, and more practiced in the arts of courts, than that of almost any of his contemporaries" (Gibbon, Rome, vol. ii., Philadelphia, 1876).

SAINT AUGUSTINE

Augustine is quoted as saying: "That in our time is the Christian Religion, which to know and follow is the most sure and certain health, called according to that name, but not according to the thing itself, of which is the name; for the thing itself which is now called the Christian Religion really was known to the ancients, nor was wanting at any time from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, from whence the true religion, which had previously existed, began to be called "Christian;" and this in our days is the Christian religion, not as having been wanting in former times, but as having in later times received this name" (Opera Augustini, vol. i. p. 12; quoted in Taylor's Diegesis, p. 42).

Now if you read these quotes you have to admit that they are very troubling to the contemporary Christian. I always heard: "Where there is smoke there is fire" [pardon the pun please]. If you find the courage to look beyond these quotes then you will find the kindling used for the paganization of Christianity by the Gentile Church whereby it become little more than another manifestation of Sun Worship. Jesus know the difference and you should as well.

TERTULLIAN

Tertullian, one of the Christian Fathers (A.D. 200), originally a Pagan, and at one time Presbyter of the Christian Church in Africa, reasons in the following manner on the evidences of Christianity: "I find no other means to prove myself to be impudent with success, and happily a fool, than by my contempt of shame, - as, for instance, I maintain that the Son of God was born. Why am I not ashamed of maintaining such a thing? Why, but because it is itself a shameful thing. I maintain that the Son of God died. Well, that is wholly credible, because it is monstrously absurd. I maintain that after having been buried he rose again; and that I take to be mainly true, because it was manifestly impossible" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 326).

For example, early Church Father Tertullian (@ 160-220 C.E.), an "ex-Pagan" and Bishop of Carthage, ironically admits the true origins of the Christ story and of all other such god-men by stating in refutation of his critics, "You say we worship the sun; so do you" (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).

Interestingly, a previously strident believer and defender of the faith, Tertullian later renounced Christianity. (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).

OTHER INCRIMINATING QUOTES CHALLENGING THE TRUTHFULNESS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH

THOMAS PAINE

“The Christian religion is a parody on the worship of the Sun, in which they put a man whom they call Christ, in the place of the Sun, and pay him the same adoration which was originally paid to the Sun.”

AMMONIUS SACCUS

Ammonius Saccus, a Greek philosopher, founder of the Neoplatonic school, taught that Christianity and Paganism when rightly understood, differ in no essential points, but had a common origin, and are really one and the same religion" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 329).

GODFREY HIGGINS

Godfrey Higgins, in Anacalypsis, states: "that every part of the vulgar Christian religion is the same as that of the vulgar religion of the Gentiles; that there is nothing new in the Roman Catholic religion; that, in short it is Reformed or Protestant Gentilism." He goes on to say: "several of the most important doctrinal parts of corrupt modern Christianity are nothing more than scraps of the Heathen mythologies of various kinds taught by different nations, long previous to the Christian era...the immaculate conception, the incarnation, the trinity, with its various hypostases, and the crucifixion and resurrection..." He further states: "It is more than probable that every part has been copied from some former religion; that no part of what has been really the system of the Christian priests was invented originally for their use. To tradition it is indebted for every doctrine and rite which it possesses; to fraudulent and dishonest practices it is chiefly indebted for their establishment."

CELSUS

Celsus, the Epicurean philosopher, wrote that "the Christian religion contains nothing but what Christians hold in common with heathen; nothing new" (Justin, Apol 2.).

Celsus, in the Octavius of Minucius Felix, says: "All these fragments of crack-brained opiniary and silly solaces played off in the sweetness of song by deceitful [Pagan] poets, by you too credulous creatures [that is, the Christians] have been shamefully reformed and made over to your own god]."

ISAAC DE CASAUBON

Issac de Casaubon, one of the greatest ecclesiastical scholars, says: "It mightily affects me to see how many there were in the earliest times of the Church, who considered it as a capital exploit to lend to heavenly truth the help of their own inventions, in order that the new doctrine might be more readily received by the wise among the Gentiles. These officious lies, they were wont to say, were devised for a good end" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 44).

FAUSTUS

Faustus, writing to St. Augustine, says: "You have substituted your agape for the sacrifices of the Pagans; for their idols you martyrs, whom you serve with the very same honors. You appease the shades of the dead with wine and feasts; you celebrate the solemn festivals of the Gentiles, their calendars, and their solstices; and as to their manners, those you have retained without any alteration. Nothing distinguishes you from the Pagans, except that you hold your assemblies apart from them" (Draper, Science and Religion, p. 48. New York: 1876).

GREGORY OF NAZIANZUS

Gregory, writing to St. Jerome, says: "A little jargon is all that is necessary to impose on the people. The less they comprehend the more they admire. Our forefathers and doctors have often said, not what they though, but what circumstances and necessity dictated" (Hieron ad. Nep.,quoted in Volney's Ruins, p. 177, Boston, 1872).

ALBERT CHURCHWARD

Mythicist Albert Churchward stated a century ago: "The canonical gospels can be shown to be a collection of sayings from the Egyptian Mythos and Eschatology"(The Origin and Evolution of Religion).

JOSEPH WHELESS

"The reason why all these narratives are so similar, with a god-man who is crucified and resurrected, who does miracles and has 12 disciples, is that these stories were based on the movements of the sun through the heavens, an astro-theological development that can be found throughout the planet because the sun and the 12 zodiac signs can be observed around the globe. In other words, Jesus Christ and all the others upon whom this character is predicated are personifications of the sun, and the Gospel fable is merely a rehash of a mythological formula (the "Mythos," as mentioned above) revolving around the movements of the sun through the heavens." The logical question arises: Why, if Jesus is a historical character, are there are presently two dates for both Christmas and Easter? This purportedly well-known character, who set the world on fire, has no birthdate whatsoever, and the "historical" references and genealogies found in the gospel accounts differ from each other. The gospels are not history at all but a retelling of the Mythos. The historical Jesus is a phantom. "These, which cannot both be historical, are based on the two birthdays of the double Horus in Egypt." In addition, early Christian "doctors" were constantly contradicting themselves as to when exactly "the Lord" died or "ascended to heaven" after "he" was resurrected. Two of the most powerful early bishops, Irenaeus and Papias recorded that Christ lived to be very old, "flatly denying as 'heresy' the Gospel stories as to his crucifixion at about thirty years of age."

Joseph Wheless states, "The gospels are all priestly forgeries over a century after their pretended dates." "As said by the great critic, Salomon Reinach, 'With the exception of Papias, who speaks of a narrative by Mark, and a collection of sayings of Jesus, no Christian writer of the first half of the second century (i.e., up to 150 A.D.) quotes the Gospels or their reputed authors.'"In The Book Your Church Doesn't Want You to Read, John Remsburg states: "The Four Gospels were unknown to the early Christian Fathers. Justin Martyr, the most eminent of the early Fathers, wrote about the middle of the second century. His writings in proof of the divinity of Christ demanded the use of these Gospels had they existed in his time. He makes more than 300 quotations from the books of the Old Testament, and nearly one hundred from the Apocryphal books of the New Testament; but none from the four Gospels. Rev. Giles says: 'The very names of the Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, are never mentioned by him (Justin) - do not occur once in all his writings.'" In A Short History of the Bible, Keeler says, "The books [canonical gospels] are not heard of till 150 A.D., that is, till Jesus had been dead nearly a hundred and twenty years. No writer before 150 A.D. makes the slightest mention of them." (J. Wheless, Forgery in Christianity).

"Those who concocted some of the hundreds of "alternative" gospels and epistles that were being kicked about during the first several centuries C.E. have even admitted that they had forged the documents." Wheless quotes the Catholic Encyclopedia: "Enterprising spirits responded to this natural craving by pretended gospels full of romantic fables, and fantastic and striking details; their fabrications were eagerly read and accepted as true by common folk who were devoid of any critical faculty and who were predisposed to believe what so luxuriously fed their pious curiosity. Both Catholics and Gnostics were concerned in writing these fictions. The former had no motive other than that of a PIOUS FRAUD."

Forgery during the first centuries of the Church's existence was admittedly rampant, so common in fact that a new phrase was coined to describe it: "pious fraud." Wheless, op cit. Mangasarian states: "The church historian, Mosheim, writes that, 'The Christian Fathers deemed it a pious act to employ deception and fraud.' [Ecclesiastical Hist., Vol. I, p. 347.] Again, he says: 'The greatest and most pious teachers were nearly all of them infected with this leprosy.' Will not some believer tell us why forgery and fraud were necessary to prove the historicity of Jesus. . . . Another historian, Milman, writes that, 'Pious fraud was admitted and avowed by the early missionaries of Jesus.' 'It was an age of literary frauds,' writes Bishop Ellicott, speaking of the times immediately following the alleged crucifixion of Jesus. Dr. Giles declares that, 'There can be no doubt that great numbers of books were written with no other purpose than to deceive.' And it is the opinion of Dr. Robertson Smith that, 'There was an enormous floating mass of spurious literature created to suit party views.'"

Such prevarication is confessed to repeatedly in the Catholic Encyclopedia. Wheless: "The clerical confessions of lies and frauds in the ponderous volumes of the Catholic Encyclopedia alone suffice . . . to wreck the Church and to destroy utterly the Christian religion. . . . The Church exists mostly for wealth and self-aggrandizement; to quit paying money to the priests would kill the whole scheme in a couple of years. This is the sovereign remedy" (J. Wheless, Forgery in Christianity). As Wheless says, "The proofs of my indictment are marvelously easy."

BARBARA WALKER

The assertion that Jesus Christ is a myth [reincarnation of Pagan Sun-Myths] can be proved not only through the works of dissenters and "pagans" who knew the truth - and who were viciously refuted or murdered for their battle against the Christian priests and "Church Fathers" fooling the masses with their fictions - but also through the very statements of the Christians themselves, who continuously disclose that they knew Jesus Christ was a myth founded upon more ancient deities located throughout the known ancient world. In fact, Pope Leo X, privy to the truth because of his high rank, made this curious declaration, "What profit has not that fable of Christ brought us!" (The Woman's Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets, by Barbara Walker, p. 471). Rev. Taylor, in The Diegesis, reports a slightly different version of Leo X's admission: "It was well known how profitable this fable of Christ has been to us." (footnote, p. 35.)

KERSEY GRAVES

The Jesus story incorporated elements from the tales of other deities recorded in this widespread area, such as many of the following world saviors and "sons of God," most or all of whom predate the Christian myth, and a number of whom were crucified or executed. Many on this list come from The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors by Graves. This is not to suggest that all of these god-men characters were utilized in the formation of the Christian myth, as overt contact had not occurred in such places as Mexico or Bermuda. Also, modern orthodoxy does not allow for the dates provided by Graves, i.e., that Quetzalcoatl originates in the 6th B.C.E., a date far too early in the orthodox perspective. However, we utilize this list to demonstrate that the same concepts are found worldwide with and without cultural exchange, because they are derived from the same astro-theological observations. Also, we are in concurrence with the "ancient advanced civilization" theory ("Atlantis") that would allow for one or more centralized civilizations to have spread throughout the world during a very remote period in protohistory, thus taking with it the well-developed Mythos and Ritual, which would then mutate into the various forms found around the globe.

M. TURRETIN

Mr. Turretin, in describing the state of Christianity in the fourth century, says "that it was not so much the empire that was brought over to the faith, as the faith that was brought over to the empire; not the Pagans who were converted to Christianity, but Christianity that was converted to Paganism" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 50).

EDWARD GIBBON

Edward Gibbon says: "It must be confessed that the ministers of the Catholic Church imitated the profane model which they were impatient to destroy. The most respectable bishops had persuaded themselves that the ignorant rustics would more cheerfully renounce the superstitions of Paganism if they found some resemblance, some compensation, in the bosom of Christianity. The religion of Constantine achieved in less than a century the final conquest of the Roman empire; but the victors themselves were insensibly subdued by the arts of their vanquished rivals" (Gibbon, Rome, vol. iii. p. 163).

EMPEROR HADRIAN

The early Christians were charged with being a sect of sun-worshippers (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 283). The Emperor Hadrian could see no difference between them and the followers of the ancient Egyptian god Serapis, who was the Sun. In a letter to the Consul Servianus, the Emperor says: "There are there [in Egypt] Christians who worship Serapis and devoted to Serapis are those who call themselves 'Bishops of Christ'" (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, vol. ii. p. 86. London: 1877).

ONE OF THE BIGGEST QUESTIONS YOU WILL EVER HAVE TO ANSWER

Answer for yourself: Are these above writers, historians, and scholars wrong in their characterization of Gentile Christianity or could they be accurate in their remarks about Christianity and we know it because we either have never studied such issues for ourselves or the religious documents that we inherited and were taught to cherish are purposeful corruptions of the Jewish Scriptures where such relgious doctrines were written in them along with the later falsification of such beliefs in the New Testament?

Answer for yourself: Could what we have accepted by "faith alone" about the Christain faith and the Jesus of the New Testament be wrong because our religious documents are forgeries in "key" places and we stand before God as idolators and blasphemers and not know it?

I would think you would want to know the facts and the truth concering such questions before you die and meet God face to face! I do!

Now lets return to our study where we left off.

THE ETERNAL BATTLE BETWEEN HORUS AND SET

The god of wind and storms, brother of Osiris and Isis, Set (or Seth) was once the Lord of Upper Egypt, counterpart to Horus, who ruled Lower Egypt. When Set's cult lost favor during the human struggle for unification, Set acquired notoriety as the evil god of desert storms, drought and destruction. Red-haired and crimson-eyed, pale-skinned Set is blamed for ending the golden age when Isis and Osiris lived among men and ruled over Egypt. Set got Osiris drunk and killed him, then stole his throne and Isis, his queen. War and chaos prevailed until Isis retrieved the body of her dead husband, magically resuscitated his soul, and conceived the child Horus. After a convoluted series of events, Horus beat Set in combat, cast him into the underworld and took the throne. Horus still watches over the living in the person of Pharaoh, while his father Osiris takes care of the dead in the next world. All the while, Set battles Horus for revenge, sowing pain and discord through the land whenever he gets the upper hand. In the end days, Horus and Set will battle one last time. Horus will banish Set forever, Osiris will return to the earth, and all the dead will emerge from their tombs to rejoin the living.

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar? It is the same story we read about Jesus and Satan, the Christianized form of Horus and Set.

BET EMET MINISTRIES

Hebrew For "The House Of Truth"

"A Christian's religious belief system, when tested and exposed to contradictory facts from Biblical languages, Biblical history, Biblical culture, and archeology, must in the Spirit of Truth and Repentance, be flexible enough to change"...Craig M. Lyons Ms.D., D.D., M.Div.

EGYPTIAN RELIGION AND ITS REALTIONSHIP TO JUDAISM AND CHRISTIANITY

We have all heard that "all roads lead to Rome" but in reality, when dealing with Spiritual issues involving the Soul, all roads don't lead to Rome; they lead to Egypt. This is especially true when one studies Christianity and Judaism and finds that these sister-faiths are nothing more than evolutionary Spiritual developments of the once great Egyptian Religion. Understand from the beginning that Judaism is a much more faithful picture of this Earth's original understanding of the Divine realm than Christianity. For this to be your experience, however, one must move beyond the literal and historical approach to Judaism, to the study of the Kabbalah. The Kabbalah, for those who are not acquainted with this Spiritual concept, means "receiving" and a discipline, or better yet, a school of thought concerned with the mystical aspect of Judaism. It is a set of esoteric teachings that is meant to explain the relationship between an infinite, eternal and mysterious Creator with the finite and mortal universe of His creation. In solving this paradox, Kabbalah seeks to define the nature of the universe and the human being, the nature and purpose of existence, and various other ontological questions. It also presents methods to aid understanding of these concepts and to thereby attain spiritual realization. The Jewish people, cannot take credit for these Spiritual revelations, as they were taught for thousands of years before their existence, in the Ancient Egyptian religion.

As am ordained pastor, I am amazed where my religious studies have taken me and the things I have learned over these last twenty years in my pursuit of Jewish Roots of the Christian Faith. Never did I expect to find what I have uncovered and consider myself fortunate to live in an age where Archaeology and Egyptology, plus other such disciplines, are giving back to mankind the Spiritual knowledge what nations like Rome destroyed, covered up, and took from mankind over the last two thousand years. The study of error is often a little less important than the study of truth. The history of the human mind, in its progress from ignorance towards knowledge, should tell us the mistakes into which it has sometimes wandered, as well as its steps in the right path. This is the goal of any true search for Spiritual truth. I set out after seminary in 1988 to re-examine Gentile Christianity as to its earliest roots and determine if what is considered "Christian Orthodoxy" today is a faithful representation of the earliest understanding of God by the Ancients since it is they who coined the religious concepts which we are told to adhere today in the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere.

When Jews and Christians shall at length acknowledge that many of their Religions doctrines, which together now make up this Christian orthodoxy, or the religion of the majority, as distinguished from the simple religion which Jesus taught and practiced in the Bible, when they shall acknowledge that many of them are so many sad and lamentable errors. Then, and not till then, will they seek to know their origin, and inquire from which of the several branches of the Ancient Wisdom religions they sprung. More so for Christians than Jews, since living in the shadow of Rome, only then will they then see that most of the so-called Christian doctrines reached Europe from Egypt, through Alexandria. To elaborate a little more fully and in summary fashion: when allegory, metaphor, simile, and myth which expressed both the identity and actions of the Creator as understood by the Ancients in grasping for understanding of God and His workings in the Cosmos, were altered and stripped of their symbolism and rendered for all time as if literal and historical, then not only then is Divine Truth lost forever. At the same time, such Spiritual delusion plunges its recipients into abject idolatry. Such is the plight of the primarily Christian Western Hemisphere as these Spiritual allegories and metaphors that once expressed Divine Truth were altered by Rome and "literalized" and applied to men's lives, especially the life of the New Testament Jesus.

Samuel Sharpe stated: “All nations borrow from others; at least, from those who are before them in the race of civilization. They borrow from each of their neighbors in those branches of knowledge in which they think they can do so wisely, and what they have taken often shows itself in the language.”(1) I can remember my amazement when I discovered that the Hebrew word "Yahweh" finds its origin in Egypt; taken from one of the names for the sons of Ptah (one of the many Names given the Creator). This is only the beginning of knowledge and what you can learn if your studies progress far and deep enough to look at Egypt as the source for Judaism and Christianity. Sadly, today much of the beauty of this earliest Divine Revelation given to mankind through Egypt by the Creator is altered almost beyond recognition. The culprits of this dastardly deed was first accomplished by Alexandrian Essenes and later Rome as we find in the Christian faith today which is but, at best, a blurred photograph of the earliest understanding of God on this planet by those who knew Him best. The aim of my life is to show the extraordinary readiness with which these earliest religious beliefs and understanding of God were copied by neighboring nations and then tragically altered and corrupted from their original meanings, particularly by the Greeks and later Romans. Samuel Sharpe stated: “In matters of religion, the more ignorant part of those two nations bowed in reverence to the greater earnestness and seriousness of the Egyptians,”(2) who were at the same time so remarkably rich in understanding of the Divine and His message to them as seen in operation of His Divine Law in Heaven above, Divine Law operating in Nature all around mankind, and these same Divine Laws operating in their own physical bodies as well. Egypt understood these Laws of the Divine as the recurrent message of the God of all creation, a message speaking Order and Harmony to mankind through God’s Law. Early man came to understand their responsibility to manifest that same order in their own lives since being created in the image of the only God they could see who operated these same Laws of divine harmony and order not only above them, but below and around them. Hence the axiom: So Above, So Below.

Greece received from Ancient Egypt their religion, yet Christian Rome, from which our religious belief systems has chiefly sprung in this Western Hemisphere, would take and alter almost beyond recognition the simple Divine message of the Creator given originally to Ancient Egypt. In so doing, Spiritual allegory and metaphor became literalized and historicized, and limited to but one person, that being Jesus. With this Roman transformation of the Ancient Egyptian religion, Rome imposed upon all a promised damnation if one failed to accept Roman Orthodoxy. The monuments and hieroglyphics of Ancient Egypt, as well as the Jewish people and nation with their Kabbalah, have protected and safeguarded this same Divine message in the absence of their Egyptian parents since their destruction and Hellenization by Alexander the Great. Ironically, when the literal reading of the Jewish texts of their Tanakh, the Old Testament as well as the Christian gospels, along with the Gnostic Pauline epistles are read esoterically, and not exoterically, we find again the Ancient Egyptian Spiritual truths regarding the evolution of the Soul in mankind. Read exoterically, literally, and historically, we never get a glimpse of these mystical and metaphysical Spiritual truths that further evolve man’s evolution into the stature of the fulness of Christ.”(3) Rome, however, in conquering Greece and owing to their own Sun Worship, will only further remove mankind from their earlier understanding of Ancient Egypt’s Divine message entrusted to them. Egypt today gets a bad rap by those who misunderstand its religion and many lacking such knowledge interpret Egyptian faith as idolatrous Sun Worship in its own right. Nothing could be further from the truth once you look into it for yourself and remember that allegory, myth, simile, and metaphor was only used to communicate these Divine Truths of the incarnation of Divine Mind, God, into "matter" and mankind; NEVER was this Cosmic message to be understood in a "literal" or historical sense.

Almost all Egyptologists we find today interpreted, and continue to interpret, the ancient Egyptian writings and other modes of expression (art, architecture, ...etc.) without trying to understand the Astronomical, mystical, and metaphysical thoughts and beliefs expressed in them. Hence, their explanations continue to be shallow, which reflects their pre-conceived inherited beliefs of Islam, Judaism, and Christianity; all three world religions based upon a literal and historical Abrahamic faith. In concert, these Egyptologists look at the Ancient Egyptian religion as being primitive and inferior to the modern western world.

In spite of their short sightedness, the Greek historian Herodotus (500 B.C.) stated: "Of all the nations of the world, the Egyptians are the happiest, healthiest and most religious."(4) Herodotus' statement reflects the excellent conditions of people who didn't just theorize about metaphysics, but who practiced it to the fullest. Ancient Egyptians had a very sophisticated understanding of metaphysics and the laws which govern man and his universe. The Egyptian thinking was simple, coherent, consistent, logical, analytical and rational. Their main premise that one is all, and all is one, reflects their total cosmic consciousness, which Herodotus called "most religious". The Ancient Egyptians did not have a word for religion in their language. For them, there was no perceived difference between sacred and mundane. They understood that man is a model of the universe. If man understands himself perfectly, he also understands the universe: Astronomy, astrology, geography, rhythm, proportion, mathematics, magic, medicine, anatomy, art - all are linked in a grand dynamic scheme. No aspect can be isolated from another and treated as a separate specialty or field without distortion and destruction.(5) You should find it rather interesting that this concept is embodied within Biblical Judaism but not Christianity.

All roads lead to Ancient Egypt as we will see and we live in an exciting time of rediscovery of long lost Divine Truth that helps us in our understanding of Whom God is and What His message originally was to this Planet. The Egyptian race has ceased to be a leading nation and its history has been neglected, and its very essence forgotten or misunderstood at best. Yet the Egyptian mind still has a most important influence upon our modern civilization and we fail to understand or recognize it. The shadow of Egyptian truth can be found today in Biblical and Rabbinical Judaism and their Kabbalah, and to a lesser extent in Christianity because of its rigid anti-approach to the Bible, reinforced by its solely literal and historical understanding of the Bible's texts. This weakness will become very apparent as you read through this book, absorbing the knowledge that it contains.

In preparation for what will follow I would like to say that a quest into the fountainhead of modern man's religious beliefs and practices inevitably leads back BEFORE the path of the Judaic-Christian heritage and the Greek classic tradition. It leads us to the very dawn of civilization. Myths, symbols, and ideas cherished as our own in this primarily Christian nation will be found to have been fashioned many thousands of years ago by cultures sometimes labeled as primitive, crude, heathen or even pagan by Roman Christianity. I will let you decide if such designations are deserving of these ancient nations once you see such evidence for yourself. Only then can you decide if such labels are correct. Ancient Egypt, often called the cradle of mankind, represents a terminal point in this search for the origin of modern concepts. This ancient civilization, perhaps more than any other, can supply us with the clues to as understanding of many of the religious and Spiritual beliefs which have found their way into modern times. Much like the ageless pyramids, ancient Egyptian thought has withstood the assault of the ages and, merged with elements of other cultures, becomes absorbed by the mainstream of Western thought today. Only lacking is the proper hermeneutic for this material and great wisdom.

For the Christian more than the Jew, who is closer to this original thought and understanding of the Divine and God, this can be the most important study of one's life. The Egyptians, the parents of the Judaic-Christian faiths, were essentially a religious people. Their religion was composed of elements uniquely African and Ancient Egyptian, and those it shared with others ancient religions. But amazingly, ancient Egypt was familiar with such relatively modern concepts as the Big Bang, Immortality of the Soul, the Last Judgment, Messiah, Resurrection of the Dead, Hades, Heaven, the Unity of God, Prayer, Sacrifices, Logos, Millennium, Sabbath, Circumcision, Immersion, the Supper with God, etc. These religious concepts and their original Spiritual meanings have been tragically altered down through history from their original meanings as understood by those who first received them from God and left such teaching for mankind throughout history in their writings. It would do us good to understand these religious concepts in the same manner that the ancients received from God. Only then, can we compare them and their original meanings to the same things and dogmas we as Christians inherited down through time. Only then, when comparing what went before and what occurred later, are we able to see first hand the effects upon the earliest of all Spiritual dogmas by later succeeding and conquering nations, culminating with Rome. Our goal must be to see if these religious and Spiritual dogmas that we have inherited from Ancient Egytp, after being filtered and passed down through Judaism and Christianity through the centuries, today contain the same Spiritual, mystical, and metaphysical ideas of their founders or if they differ appreciably. If they don't and if they differ substantialy, then we must ask ourselves: Why? This is for you, the reader to discern and decide upon examining the evidence as we read through this book. Let us as Christians and followers of the "Christ" ask ourselves if we are really following in the Spiritual concepts of God as the Ancients knew Him and recorded His works or, it is possible, we are ignorantly following the religious and political agendas of men who, for various reasons, departed and purposefully separated from these earliest Spiritual understandings of God, man, and Soul.

It is my hope to not over complicate this for our readers as I try to construct the ancient past. I will endeavor to present this information in an unbiased manner as possible as we draw together the facts concerning the ancient Egyptian religion. I will point to the parallels between ancient Egyptian beliefs on the one hand, and the Christian and Hebrew thoughts on the other. By relating ancient Egyptian civilization to modern Western thought, I hope to supply important keys to the reader to help in his understanding of our modern times and aid in the proper application of these Divine principles of Ancient Egypt and the earliest expression of Christianity to our lives as they existed before the rise of Roman Orthodoxy, also called by some Roman brainwashing. It would be then that Rome will alter, corrupt, and forge religious documents that go almost unnoticed today in our Churches; noticeable usually only to the Biblical scholar. BIRTH, LIFE, AND DEATH OF A STAR

A star is born in a huge cloud of gas and dust known as a nebula (plural: nebulae). Part of the nebula begins to shrink under the pull of its own gravity and this forms a protostar. Now the star begins to take shape. The temperature continues to rise and nuclear fusion begins to take place. The pressure from inside the star finally equalizes the gravity pushing in, and the star stops contracting. In order for nuclear fusion to take place, there must be tremendous amounts of pressure and heat. This pressure crushes together elements to create more massive elements, matter and energy. Stars begin fusing hydrogen first because it is the least dense and the easiest to fuse. Four hydrogen nuclei fuse together to form one nucleus of helium. By-products of this is the production of two positrons, two neutrinos, and the release of energy. Stars that are going through this hydrogen burning process are known to be on the main sequence. Stars spend most of their life (aprox. 90%) on the main sequence. A star will eventually use up most of it's hydrogen and be left with helium. At this time there is not enough pressure crushing down on the star to create a nuclear reaction with helium. Nuclear reactions cease inside the star, and because there is no longer any outward push from fusion, the star begins to collapse upon its self. Here is where the star leaves the main sequence. This collapse begins to create more and more pressure inside the star until it is sufficient to have the fusing process of helium begin in the core, while some of the remaining hydrogen burns just outside of it. The products of this helium burning is carbon and oxygen. The star swells, and depending on its size, either becomes a red giant or a red supergiant. The red giant begins to brighten between 1,000 and 10,000 times. The hydrogen-rich covering on the surface of the star begins to swell. Because there is so little pressure now in the outside areas of the star, the surface temperature drops to about 5,000 - 6,500 degrees Fahrenheit. This temperature is actually very cool for a star. A strong solar wind begins to blow, and jettisons away most of this hydrogen covering. All that is left is a long-period variable star. This shed material is known as a planetary nebula. The center of the star has now met its demise. During the formation of the planetary nebula the star ceases all nuclear reactions. The star is still very hot, up to several hundred thousand degrees Fahrenheit. Over a few hundred million years, the star cools and becomes a white dwarf. As the star cools more, it becomes dark and barely detectable. It is now known as a black dwarf. The white/black dwarf is composed of carbon and oxygen. Surrounding this is a thin layer of helium, sometimes surrounded by hydrogen. The star is very compact. Carbon begins to be crushed into neon and magnesium, while oxygen is being crushed into silicon and sulfur. Silicon and sulfur get crushed into an iron core. This iron core now just sits in the center of the star. The reason for this is that iron doesn't burn. Nuclear burning is only possible if an object is releasing energy. In order for iron to go the the fusing process, energy must be added. This leads to the collapse of the star. The addition of energy that the iron needs will only occur during the supernova explosion caused by the collapse of the star. Because the iron is not fusing, it does not create any outward pressure do balance the effects of gravity. This sudden crush makes protons and electrons combine to form neutrons. This expels high-energy subatomic particles (known as neutrinos.) This huge energy release is equivalent to 100 of our stars burning for more than 10 billion years. A small amount of energy is deposited in the lower layers of the shell surrounding the core, triggering the supernova explosion. The energy deposited around the core creates a shock wave that runs outward toward the stars surface. As it is passing through, it heats up the shell sounding the core, starts nuclear burning, and throws off the shell faster than 10 million mph. This is when the iron fuses to create heavier particles. When the shock wave reaches the surface, it heats them very quickly and causes them to glow. In a day or 2, the star is brighter than a billion suns. In a couple of weeks, the explosion diminishes, although it may remain visible for months or years. What's left is two distinct parts. There is a rapidly expanding gaseous shell that barges through the surrounding interstellar medium and interacts with it, and there is the compact stellar remnant which is either a neutron star or a black hole. Because there is so much mass and no nuclear reactions inside of the star to compensate for it, the gravity continues to crush the star. Eventually, the gravity gets so strong that it even holds back light. When material first begins to get pulled into a black hole, it swirls around it for awhile. It will heat up and eventually give off visible x-rays that are detectable before finally crossing the event horizon and enter the black hole.

PLATO'S CAVE ALLEGORY....THE KEY TO UNDERSTANDING RELIGION AND METAPHYSICS

Time for a lesson that will explain the use of "myths" to teach metaphysical realties. In so doing let us use the example given us by Plato. Plato thought a lot about the natural world and how it works. He thought that everything had a sort of ideal form, like the idea of a chair, and then an actual chair was a sort of poor imitation of the ideal chair that exists only in your mind.

Answer for yourself: Is that was Moses was speaking about when referencing over and over again the "pattern in the Mount" (Heaven)? Yes!

Exod 25:9 9 According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it. (KJV)

Exod 25:40 40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount. (KJV)

Num 8:4 4 And this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold, unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had shewed Moses, so he made the candlestick. (KJV)

1 Chr 28:12 12 And the pattern of all that he had by the spirit, of the courts of the house of the LORD, and of all the chambers round about, of the treasuries of the house of God, and of the treasuries of the dedicated things: (KJV)

1 Chr 28:19 19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern. (KJV)

Heb 8:5 5 Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. (KJV)

One of the ways Plato tried to explain his views on the world of "forms" and "ideas" was with the famous metaphor of the cave. He said, Suppose there is a cave, and inside the cave there are some men chained up to a wall, so that they can only see the back wall of the cave and nothing else. These men can't see anything outside of the cave, or even see each other clearly, but they can see shadows of what is going on outside the cave.

Answer for yourself: Wouldn't these prisoners come to think that the shadows were real, and that was what things really looked like?

Suppose now that one of the men escaped, and got out of the cave, and saw what real people looked like, and real trees and grass. If he went back to the cave and told the other men what he had seen, would they believe him, or would they think he was crazy? Plato says that we are like those men sitting in the cave: we think we understand the real world, but because we are trapped in our bodies we can see only the shadows on the wall (we are unaware of the metaphysical realities around us). One of his goals is to help us understand the real world better (the realm of God, the realm of the neteru, the Invisible Realm of God) by finding ways to predict or understand the real world even without being able to see it.

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

Egypt saw into this "invisible" world better than any nation that has graced our planet. They pioneered the ideas that Plato will later teach concerning "the Cave". Let us not forget that when Socrates, Plato's master died, Plato travelled to Egypt and studied there with students of Pythagoras. Again we find that behind Greek thought we find Egyptian influence and we always will. With the recovery of the ability to read the Egyptian Hieroglyphs this unbelievable wisdom of Egypt once again sees the light of day and can be understood by all. This hierarchy of energies in the Cosmos was reflected in the the neteru (Energies/Powers, Forces, Attributes of God, gods, goddesses) in ancient Egypt, where material and spiritual realities were understood as aspects of a single scheme and the manifestation of ONE God since they all "Emanated" from Him. The material world was generally thought of as an aspect of the spiritual (Energy) world. The material world as understood as the Cosmos above, its laws, its operation, its cycles and patterns affected the material world below as seen in Mother Nature, its laws, its operations, its cycles and patterns. That is why Egypt would say: "So Above, So Below". Together both danced in harmony following the Sun across the sky and celebrated its equinoxes and solstices. The Egyptians took note of this and from intense observations over thousands of years came to understand the world of "forms", in my estimation, more perfectly than any nation sense and this information is available to us today only for the last two hundred years. We are truly so fortunate to have lived in this time.

WHAT'S ALL THIS FUSS OVER LUCIFER?

This may be a surprise to you but the word "Lucifer" appears only one time in the King James translation of the Bible. Also surprising is the fact that in other translations it does not appear even one time! The verse in which the King James Bible uses the word "Lucifer" is Isa. 14:12, which states: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How are thou cut down to the ground, which did weaken the nations!"

Now if you spoke or studied in Hebrew (let us not forget that is the language originally used in the Bible) you would find that the Hebraic translation of the verse reads differently: "How you have fallen from the heavens, shining star, son of the morning! You who weakens the nations are cut down to the ground." Notice that the word "Lucifer" is not in the original text of the Bible at all!

In fact, Isa. 14:12 is the only place in the entire King James Bible that the word "Lucifer" appears. The word "Lucifer" never appears in the Hebrew text.

Answer for yourself: Then why is it in your and my Bible?

It should not be.

Answer for yourself: What about the inerrancy and infallibility question?

Answer for yourself: Are our Bibles correct or have then been tampered with?

Answer for yourself: And if we can prove that doctrines were "created" for selfish ends, then can we recognize them?

Answer for yourself: And after recognizing them will we continue to play into the hands of those who created these man-made doctrines by adhering to them in our churches?

I want you to read the context of the verses that surround these verses in Isaiah. After you have read them you should notice that the name "shining star, son of the morning" refers to the king of Babylon, and not the Devil.

Now I must ask you:

Answer for yourself: Why did the translators of the King James Bible of 1611 A.D. insert the word "Lucifer: in Isa. 14:12?

Answer for yourself: How did the words "Lucifer" and "Satan" become to mean the same individual?

Answer for yourself: If we can prove in this instance that words were added to our Bible to create or perpetuate a man-made doctrine, then has it occurred at other places in our Bibles and can we know where it occurs?

Answer for yourself: What are we currently practicing in our churches as part of our worship of God is directly attributed to "additions" to the text by men with "hidden agendas?"

Answer for yourself: When we locate such man-made traditions and doctrines, do we continue to follow such fables & false doctrines in our worship of God?

Answer for yourself: Are we truly worshipping our God in "Spirit and in truth?

The word "Lucifer" is Latin for:

- 1) Phosphorous
- 2) Venus as the morning star
- 3) The light-bringer which announces the dawn of the Sun

The name "Lucifer" is sometimes applied to the planet Venus as the evening star as well. Interestingly enough, the passage in Luke 10:18 ("I saw Satan fall like lightening from heaven") was thought by some to refer to the Isa. 14:12 passage in which the star was used metaphorically for the king of Babylon. According to the Funk and Wagnalls Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology, and Legends of 1984 this "Lucifer" would become the chief of fallen angels and the name for Satan before his rebellion. "Lucifer", as a name give to the devil, comes from this passage, which the early Catholic Church Fathers interpreted, without any coroborrating evidence, as relating to the apostasy & punishment of angelic leaders. Such an application was tied to the King of Babel according to Keil & Delitzsch in their Commentary on the Old Testament. Thus we now find that the Devil is become the chief of the fallen angels or evil spirits. Thus we find in Christian theology today that his personal name was originally Lucifer or light-bearer (Isa. 14:12) and is the term applied for the king of Babylon. "Lucifer", in religion, is a name that was thus given to Satan by early Christians and was adopted without question in the middle ages because no one sought to study the Scriptures in Hebrew.

Let's summarize:

- 1) The words "Lucifer" and "Satan" have been connected by the erroneous association of Isa. 14:12 with Luke 10:18.
- 2) This association was made by Roman Catholic Church Fathers after the deaths of the Apostles.
- 3) The association of the "Devil" as "Satan" is a fabrication of Christian theology.
- 4) This is not the only religious fabrication in the Christian faith today.

Answer for yourself: Do you know the others?

One of the church fathers who was the leading proponent in creating this man-made theology which connected "Satan" with "Lucifer" was Origen. He is known for writing "The prophet says, 'How is Lucifer, who used to arise in the morning, fallen from heaven! He who assailed all nations is broken & beaten to the ground...' Most evidently by these words he is shown to have fallen from heaven, who formerly was Lucifer, and who used to arise in the morning...Nay, even the Saviour Himself teaches us, saying of the devil, 'Behold, I see Satan fallen from heaven like lightening..."

It is Origin who established for us today the link between Isa. 14:12 & Luke 10:18. Origen took two verses completely out of their original context and created a new doctrine for the church. From the time of Origen onward Lucifer & Satan become synonymous.

Hebrew scholars of the Jewish faith never associated Satan with the verse found in Isaiah. It would be the early Greek Catholic Fathers who would re-define the meaning of these two scriptures and create a new identity for Satan. This error in Christian theology became part of Christian beliefs around 210-225 A.D. This concept has been in place for over 1700 years and is rarely questioned today. But it should be.ÿ_ÿ_I don't want to shock you but you better be seated for this. There are many who see in these verses materials derived from a Canaanite myth concerning Helal, the Day Star or Lightgiver, son of Shahar the Dawn. Many connect with this myth the ultimate conflict of good versus bad as manifested on earth. We know today that there was a god Shahar in Canaanite (Ugaritic) mythology who was the god of dawn or the morning star. Connected to this myth is Helal the son of Shahar. Connected again to both is the mythological concept of the "mount of assembly of the gods in the far north" which is also the point around which all the constellations turned. It was here, also, where the summit of the heavenly mountain & throne of the Most High was located. The passage in Isa. 14:12 preserves for us the Canaanite for a nature myth, which tells of the attempt of the morning stat to scale the heights of heaven, thus surpassing all other stars only to be cast down to the earth by the victorious sun. Thus we see in this myth the story of the aspiring of a minor deity to reach the highest heaven where the supreme god dwelt. The goal of such was to replace the supreme ruler with the minor ruler. Such later was borrowed to describe the king of Babylon and his ambition for prominence which tragically ended in his downfall.

Let me ask you:

Answer for yourself: Did early Christian theologians substitute the name of "God" in the place of "the Canaanite most High god"?

Answer for yourself: Did early Christian theologians substitute the name "Lucifer" or "Satan" in the place of "Helal, son of Shahar?"

Answer for yourself: Have you heard this Canaanite account preached in your churches before but with new characters and identities?

Think of the numerous commentaries that have been written, sermons that have been preached, and prayers that have been prayed, which assume that Lucifer and Satan are one and the same.

Answer for yourself: Why is this false-doctrine perpetuated by Protestant denominations, seminaries, pastors & teachers of churches, and the Catholic Church?

Answer for yourself: Why have few discovered this error? Do they not have the resources to discover this lie?

You may be surprised to find out that they are aware of the error because many of their books document it.

Answer for yourself: Then why don't they preach the truth about this addition to the scriptures?

This is not only a matter of ignorance, but deception. Once this false-doctrine became part of the Christian Belief System there was no limit to the innovative teachings which would be built around it.

According to the Bible, except for I Chron. 21:1, Satan is not a proper name referring to a particular being and a demoniac one who is the antagonist or rival of God. It is, in it's original application, understood as a common noun meaning an adversary who opposes and obstructs. It is applied to human adversaries in I Sam. 29:4 where the Philistine questioned David's loyalty to them in battle and were fearful that David would become a "satan" against them in battle. In II Sam. 19:22 David accused the sons of Zeruiah of beings "satans" to his restoration to the throne of Israel. In I Kings 11:14 the Lord raised up "a satan" against Solomon in the person of Hadad the Edomite who stood against Solomon in his idolatries. In I Kings 11:23 & 25 we see God raised up another "satan" against Solomon as an adversary to his rule.

Satan (meaning adversary) as a verb is used of prosecution in a law court (Psm. 109:6) and the role of an antagonist in general (Psm. 38:20-21; 109:4,20,29). The angel of the Lord who was sent to obstruct Baalam in Num. 22:31 was chosen by God to fulfill the role of "a satan" in order to oppose and obstruct Baalam. God sent "satan" to Baalam. This angel was accomplishing good for God but was a "satan". The will of God would be done because of the testing and trial of Baalam. There is nothing in the Hebrew to suggest that this "opposition" presented to Baalam was the permanent function of that or any other particular angel. "The Satan" as a role or function of a particular angel first appears around 520 B.C. in Zech. 3 and then in Job 1-2.

In I Chron. 21:1 it states that "Satan stood up against Israel and moved David to number Israel". Notice there is no article before the noun, thus more than likely Satan seems to be a real proper name. In Zech 3, Satan acts as a prosecutor in a celestial court. In Job 1-2 Satan questions Job's integrity and suggests to the Lord that Job be tested to prove his love and commitment to God. In all these accounts "Satan" or "satans" are clearly in subjection & subordinate to God. In neither of the accounts listed are there "warfare" occurring between The God and His Satan or satans. The only warfare going on is between men's flesh in it's submission to the will and purposes of God. Satan, the angel, is clearly obedient to all of G-d's commands is unable to act of his own free will and cannot do anything without G-d's permission. Nowhere is he in any sense a rival of God. In I Chron. 21:1, it states that Satan is said to have incited David to take a census of Israel, which resulted in the death of 70,000 Israelites (21:14). If we contrast that with 2 Sam. 24:1 it states "the anger of the Lord was aroused against Israel, and He (God) moved David against them to say, 'Go number Israel and Judah'". God caused David to take the census. Notice that one scripture blames the census on Satan and the other on God.

Answer for yourself: How do we reconcile?

It is rather simple. God is David's adversary (satan-small "s") since David is relying on the flesh for the defense and protection of Israel instead of God. God being angered in David's rejection of Him and His protection and provision, dispatched an adversary (satan) to David. It happens that the adversary (satan) dispatched happened to be "the" Satan, himself. Satan obeys G-d's wishes and judges David and Israel for the king's transgression and sin.

Answer for yourself: Did Satan fight God or David?

Answer for yourself: Who disobeyed God?

Answer for yourself: Who needed to repent here; Satan or David?

You be the judge. Next month, we will talk about Persian dualism and the concepts that have birthed the erroneous teachings concerning spiritual warfare in today's churches. God is not fighting Satan but the "satans" (men-as adversaries to the will of God in the earth) created in the image of God. You got it! God fights the flesh of men to submit to the Spirit of God, thus accomplishing His purposes, and not ours.

Answer for yourself: It's exciting to finally know the truth, isn't?

HEROD'S ORDER FOR ALL INFANTS TO BE PUT TO DEATH...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

One would expect that an extraordinary circumstance as the birth of a God into the world must be marked with unusual incidents and fanfare. This was first exhibited by angels, shepherds, prophets, magi or "wise men," flocking around their cradles.

Besides that, one would expect the unusual display of divine power and providential care on the part of the great Father God, who was still left in heaven to save the young saviors through their infancy. But such power is threatening to the powers that be. Something had to be done to ensure the status quo. So the powers at be, not being resourceful, decide to kill the infant Savior/god-man. There is nothing new under the sun. This same story is repeated in various renditions from pagan nation to nation.

It is certainly a remarkable circumstance that so many of the infant Saviors should have been threatened with the most imminent danger of destruction, and yet in every case miraculously preserved, and thus were the Saviors saved. All of the myths of a Sun (Son) god describe some kind of threat to the life of the child god at birth. Also mentioned, is the governor or king, that sees the child as a thread to his sovereignty.

Answer for yourself: Is the same story told about Jesus only coincidence?

A jealousy seems to have existed in several instances in the mind of the tyrant king or ruler of the country that the young Saviors and prospective spiritual rulers (who were mostly of royal descent) would ultimately acquire such favor with the people, by such a display of superior power and greatness of mind, as to endanger his retaining peaceable possession of the secular throne; to express it in brief, he feared the young God would prove a rival king, and hence took measures to destroy him.

Therefore, in common with almost all of the Sun-gods, they are fated to bring ruin upon their parents or the "reigning monarch." Perseus, Oidipous, Romulus and Cyrus are doomed to bring ruin on their parents. They are exposed in their infancy on the hillside, and rescued by a shepherd. "All the solar heroes begin life in this way." Whether, like Apollo, born of the dark night (Leto), or like Oidipous, of the violet dawn (Iokaste), they are alike destined to bring destruction on their parents, as the Night and the Dawn are both destroyed by the Sun (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

ASTROLOGICAL BACKGROUND

These "destruction myths" find their origin, like most Christian doctrine, in the stars. The new Son (Son) is born in the winter as we have seen. The astrological sign of Capricorn represents the lord of Hades. This is the Cardinal sign of Winter (opposition, Satan, Saturn). Winter takes control (at the Winter Solstice on Dec. 22), and within three days of mounting his throne, he is challenged by the Sun (Son) of the Father (Sun) that he, or some other ruffians captured (at the autumnal equinox) and has finally slain at the winter solstice. So now the king (Winter, Darkness) is worried and knows that he must murder the Sun (Son) before he gains the strength of his Father (Sun). The guardians of the Sun (Son) know that he can not withstand the power of the Winter (Satan, Herod), so they shield him (Son) and hide him till his time of glory approaches (he reaches maturity)

(Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 34).

The Sun (personified as the Son) will be mature enough to withstand the powers of Satan after he reaches the age of thirty. This Thirty does not mean years, it means degrees of arc. The Sun is born right after the King of Darkness takes his throne, in the sign of Capricorn. This king (Herod) is determined to kill all opposition to his power within the nether world. But Capricorn (Herod) will die after thirty years (degrees), because each zodiacal sign is limited to thirty degrees of arc. Therefore after the death of Herod (Capricorn), the Sun(Son) comes out from hiding to begin his mission, he is thirty years (degrees) old. But even though the chief rival (Herod/Capricorn) of the Sun(Son) has died, the Sun is yet within the domain of Satan, under the equinoxes. He, the Sun, must face more struggles and temptations as he climbs and fights his way to his glory, at the vernal equinox (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 35).

The Sun scatters the Darkness; and so the phrase went that the child was to be the destroyer of the reigning monarch, or his parent, Night. The oracles and the Magi, is was said, warned the latter of the doom which would overtake him. The newly-born babe is therefore ordered to be put to death by the sword, or exposed on the bare hilltops, as the Sun seems to rest on the Earth (Ida), at its rising. The exposure of the child in infancy represents the long rays of the morning sun resting on the hill-side (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

The Sun-hero Paris is exposed on the slopes of Ida, Oidipous on the slopes of Kithairon, and AEsculapius on that of the mountain of Myrtles. This is the rays of the newly-born sun resting on the mountain-side (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i, pp. 64, 80).

In Sanskrit Ida is the Earth, and so we have the mythical phrase, the Sun at its birth is exposed on Ida-the hill-side. The light of the sun must rest on the hill-side long before it reaches the dells beneath (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 221; Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 114).

In oriental mythology, the destroying principle is generally represented as a serpent or dragon. Now, the position of the sphere on Christmas-day, the birthday of the Sun, shows the Serpent all but touching, and certainly aiming at the woman; that is, the figure of the constellation Virgo (who suckles the child Iessus in here arms). Thus we have it illustrated in the story of the snake who was sent to kill Hercules while he was yet an infant in his cradle. The history of the Savior Hercules is so similar to that of the Savior Christ Jesus, that the learned Dr. Parkhurst was forced to say:

"The labors of Hercules seem to have been originally designed as emblematic memorials of what the REAL Son of God, the Savior of the world, was to do and suffer for our sakes, bringing a cure for all our ills, as the Orphic hymn speaks of Hercules"

The "same" story can be found in Typhon, who sought the life of the infant Savior Horus.

Again, it illustrated in the story of the virgin mother Astrea, with here babe beset by Orion, and of Latona, the mother of Apollo, when pursued by the monster (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 158, 166, 168).

And last, that of the virgin mother Mary, with her babe beset by Herod. But like Hercules, Horus, Apollo, Theseus, Romulus, Cyrus, and other solar heroes, Christ Jesus has yet a long course before him. Like them, he grows up both wise and strong, and the "old Serpent" is discomfited by him, just as the sphynx and the dragon are put to flight by others.

IT IS NO DIFFERENT WHEN WE COME TO CHRISTIANITY AND THEIR "CHRIST STORY"

In the case of the Christian Savior we are told that an angel, or "the angel," warned Joseph (the assumed father) to take the young Savior and God and flee with him into Egypt, because "Herod the king sought to destroy the young child's life," and had, in order to effect this end, decreed the destruction of all the children under two years old. And Joseph heeded the divine warning, and fled as directed. An angel and a dream, then, it will be observed, were the instrumentalities used to save the young Judean Savior from massacre.

And strange as it may seem, we find the same agencies had been previously employed to effect the rescue of other Saviors likewise and similarly threatened.

CHRISHNA OR CHRIST...?

In the case of Chrishna of India, in particular, the similitude is very striking in nearly every feature of the whole story.

In the first place there is the angel warning. In the Christian story we are not specifically informed how the tyrant Herod first became apprised of the birth of the Judean Savior. The Hindu story is fuller, and indicates that the angel was not only sufficiently thoughtful to warn the parents to flee from a danger which threatened to dispossess them of a divine child, and the world of a Savior, but was condescending enough to apprise the tyrant ruler (Cansa) of his danger likewise -- as we are told he heard an angel voice announcing that a rival ruler was born in his kingdom.

And hence, like Herod, he set about concocting measures to destroy him without a direct attack. Why either of them should have taken such a circuitous or roundabout way of killing an infant, when the life of the strongest man, and every man in their kingdoms, was at their instant disposal, "divine inspiration" does not inform us.

But so it was. And we must not seek to "become wise above what is written" in their bibles. Herod's decree required the destruction of all infants under two years of age (see Matt. 2:16) -- first ordering, however, "Go, and search diligently for the young child" (Matt. 2: 8).

Cansa's decree ran thus: "Let active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth, and let every boy in whom there may be found signs of unusual greatness be slain without remorse."

Now, let it be specially noticed that there is to this day in the cave temple at Elephants, in India, the sculptured likeness of a king represented with a drawn sword, and surrounded with slaughtered infants -- admitted by all writers to be much older than Christianity. Mr Forbes, in his Oriental Memories, vol. iii. p. 447, says, "The figures of the slaughtered infants in the cave of Elephanta represent them as being all boys, who are surrounded by groups of figures of men and women in the act, apparently, of supplicating for those children." And Mr. Higgins, in his Anacalypsis, testifies relative to the case, that Chrishna was carried away by night, and concealed in a region remote from his natal place, for fear of a tyrant whose destroyer it had been foretold he would become, who, for that reason, had ordered all the male children born at that time to be slain. Sculptures in Elephanta attest the story where the tyrant is represented as destroying the children. The date of this sculpture is of the most remote antiquity. "He who hath ears to hear, let him hear," and deduce the pregnant inference, Joseph and Mary fled with the young Judean God into Egypt; Chrishna's parents likewise fled with the young Hindoo Savior to Gokul.

STEP BY STEP

Now, let us observe for a moment the chain or category or resemblance.

- There was an angel warning in each case relative to the impending danger.
- The governor or ruler was hostile in each case to the mission of the young Savior.
- A bloody decree was issued in both cases, having for its object the destruction of these infant Messiahs.
- The hurried flight of the parents takes place in each case.
- And it may be remarked further, that the "Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus," once believed by the Christian world to be "inspired," and which for hundreds of years passed current as divine authority, relates that Christ and his parents sojourned for a time at a place called Matarea, or Mathura, as Sir William Jones spells it, who says it was the birth place of Chrishna.

It is further related in the case of Chrishna, that as he and his parents approached the River Jumna in their flight, the waters "parted hither and thither," so that they passed over "dry shod," like Moses and the Israelites in crossing the Red Sea. And here let it be noted that the representation of this flight, which is said to have occurred at midnight, is like that of the massacre perpetuated and attested by imperishable monuments of stone bearing evidence of being now several thousand years old.

Sir William Jones says: --

The Indian incarnate God Chrishna, the Hindus believe, had a virgin mother of the royal race, who was sought to be destroyed in his infancy about nine hundred years before Christ. It appears that he passed his life in working miracles, and preaching, and was so humble as to wash his friends' feet; at length, dying, but rising from the dead, he ascended into heaven in the presence of a multitude." The Cingalese relate nearly the same things of their Budha." And several authors of Egyptian history refer to a story perpetuated in the Egyptian legends concerning the God Osiris, who was threatened with destruction by the tyrant Amulins, to save whom his parents fled and concealed him in an arm of the River Nile, as Christ was concealed in the same country, and, for aught that appears to the contrary, in the same locality. The mother of another and older Savior of Egypt fled by a timely warning to Epidamis before the birth of the divine child, and was there delivered of "our Lord and Savior," Horus. And the earthly or adopted father of the Grecian Savior, and God, Alcides, had to flee with him and his mother to Galem for protection from threatening danger.

In the ninth and tenth volumes of the Asiatic Researches, we find the story of the "only begotten" or "first begotten son of God," Salvahana, of Cape Comorin, son of a virgin mother (as were all the other Saviors referred to), and a carpenter by the name of Taishnea. Note with me the remembered to Joseph, "foster-father of Jesus," who was himself a carpenter. The story of this "Son of God" presents several features very similar to that relating to Jesus. Sir William Jones, Colonel Wilford, and the Rev. Mr. Maurice all confess to the antiquity of this story, as originating before the birth of Christ. Speaking of Zoroaster of Persia (another case), 600 B.C., an author remarks, "Tradition reports that his mother had alarming dreams of evil spirits seeking to destroy the child to whom she was about to give birth. But a good spirit came to rescue him, and consoled her by saying, 'Fear not; God Ormuzd will protect the infant, who has sent him as a prophet to the people and the world who are waiting for him.'" China, too, presents us with a case of the threatened destruction of a Savior in infancy, evidently recorded more than two thousand five hundred years ago. It is the case of the God Yu, who was concealed in a manner similar to that of Moses -- a commemoration of the story of which is perpetuated by an image or picture of the virgin mother with a babe upon her knee -- sometimes in her arms. Now, let it be noted that these virgin-born Gods, who, we are told, came "to save the world," could not save themselves, but had to be protected and saved by other Gods.

Without pursuing the subject further in detail, we may mention by way of recapitulation, that Chrishna, Alcides, Zoroaster, Salvahana, Yu, to which list we may add Bacchus, Romulus, Moses and Cyrus, according to their reputed history, were threatened with death and destruction, but were providentially and miraculously preserved. The case of Augustus is related by Suetonius, that of Romulus by Livy, and that of Cyrus by Herodotus. It will be recollected that Pharaoh, like Herod, in order to reach the infant Moses, ordered the massacre of all the male infants (Herod making no distinction of sex), in order that he might, by this singular and circuitous method, reach the object of his jealousy and malignity without passing a direct sentence of death upon him.

It saddens me to say this as an ordained Pastor but my studies throughout these last twenty years has totally convinced me that the whole story of Herod's slaughter edict, with the familiar history of its execution, like nearly every other miraculous incident related in Christian "Holy Scriptures," which detail their histories, are traceable in the skies. The Bible is a book of "personified Astronomy" sifted down through Ancient History from nation to nation finally being gathered and collected and handed down through the Jewish nation only to be "reinterpreted" again by Rome after the first century.

Herod, we are told, literally means hero of the skin -- a term applied also to Hercules, a personification of the sun -- because the sun, on entering the constellation of the Zodiac in July, was supposed or assumed to invest himself with the skin of the lion, and this became "the hero of the skin," or a hero with a new skin. Now this solar Herod, passing through the astronomical twins and young infants of May, was said to destroy them, though the word destroy is in the Greek anairean, which any person, on turning to the Greek lexicon, will observe means also to take away, pass through, or withdraw from, so that Pharaoh more properly passed through the infants than destroyed them.

The text, "In Rama there was a voice heard," "Rachel weeping for her children," etc., is quoted by a writer (Strauss) as referring to the children slaughtered by Pharaoh. Let two things be noticed here: 1. Rama is the Indian and Phenican name for the zodiac. 2. Rachel had but two children to weep for -- Joseph and Benjamin -- just the number found in the fifth sign, or May sign, of the zodiac. And Venus, among the ancient Assyrians and Phenicans, was in tears when the sun, in his annual cross through the heavens, passed through or over the astronomical Twins (Gemini), doubtless fearfully apprehending their destruction.

The case of the massacre is an illustration and example of the manner in which all the miraculous stories related in the Christian Scriptures, as having been practically exemplified in the life of Jesus Christ, are traceable to older sources, frequently terminating among the stars. The good news, however, is that when this "stellar" and "solar" story is correctly understood and when the reader becomes equipped with the "keys" for its proper interpretation then one sees yet the Divine Truths about this "Christ" which the Ancients understood as the "Divine Spark of life of the Creator" that embodies all matter, including them as fleshy creatures. Simply said, the "Jesus Story" or the Ancient stories of "the Christ/Karast" handed down from nation to nation are not stories of someone else; rather they are the story of each man and woman and their intended Spiritual maturation as God's Souls in matter, in the flesh and clay of mankind. The "Jesus Story" is our story; it is to be your story. The "Jesus Story" when correctly interpreted is the personification of the Divine in matter whereby Ancient mankind could understand his origin, his identity, and his purpose in this physical creation called life and knowing this then the Soul within him found its purpose and goal for its existence; namely, to be the living example of "the Christ" living within the bodies of each creature made by God. This man understood that these stories were not about someone else; they were personifications that spoke to each person about their very own Soul. Today, we have lost these precious "keys" to interpret what we read in our Bibles and make gross errors in our "religious belief system" because of it.

It should be noted that the terrible story of Herod killing the infants as portrayed in Matthew is not found in any histories of the day, including Josephus, who does otherwise expose Herod's real abuses. The "slaughter of the infants" is yet another part of the standard Mythos. This story is a rehash of the Krishna tale: "[The tyrant Kansa] ordained the massacre in all his states, of all the children of the male sex, born during the night of the birth of Christna. . ." KILLING OF BABY BOYS TO FIND A BABY CHRIST...FULFILLED OR UNFULFILLED?

Matthew 2:17-2:18

Then was fulfilled that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet, saying, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel is weeping for her children, and will not be comforted, because they are no more."

Answer for yourself: Where did the writer of the Gospel of Matthew draw his texts as this supposed "fulfillment"?

[Jeremiah 31:15 -"Thus says HaShem: a voice in Rama I hear. It is wailing, weeping bitterness. Rachael is weeping for her children. She refuses to be comforted for her children, for they are no more."

And here is the actual Hebrew text:

So far, the translation looks pretty good, however, if we read the next two sentences, we find out what this quote really meant.

[Thus says HaShem: Refrain your voice from weeping, and your eyes from tears, for your work shall be rewarded says HaShem; And they shall come back from the land of the enemy, and there is hope for their future says HaShem, and your children shall return to their own border.]

Answer for yourself: Was the writer of the Gospel of Matthew guilty of taking a prophetic passage completely out of context to forge and create a "false fulfillment" of a prophecy in order to make it look to his Gentile readers that Jesus is the fulfillment of the prophet when in fact he was not? He sure was!

Answer for yourself: Can the Holy Spirit have anything to do with such falsification of the Hebrew Scriptures and such outright lying to the future readers of such religious texts? I sure hope not. It is evident that God does not have a amnesia and forgets what He revealed to the prophets let alone cannot remember the contexts of His word spoken before. What we have here is the forgery of the New Testament and the purposeful misquotation to mislead the reader with the intention of directing him and his beliefs to the agenda of the writer which is anything but the teaching of truth and the accurate representation of God to the reader.

This is a typical ruse of using a text out of context as "proof". Maybe you need to refresh yourself and re-examine the various ways the Gentile translators mishandled the Jewish Scriptures in giving you such a corrupted text.

As we can see, in no way is this verse a prophecy that the children of Beth-Lechem would be killed. When Yakov Avienu, buried his wife Rachel on the side of the road as he traveled to Beth-Lechem of Ephratah (sound familiar?) we are told that she is there for all generations to pray to God on behalf of all of the children of Israel who shall be led into exile. The nations lead the Jews into bondage, the Jews are exiled and often murdered. God tells the spirit of Rachael that the Jews shall one day return from "the land of the enemy, and there is hope for their future." God also speaks of the return of the Jewish people back to the land of Israel.

This text does not speak of a massacre of an entire town, and in the actual Hebrew text, the children are exiled and will return.

And the irony of it is that Christians use this quote to kill the Jewish spirit and cause the spirit of Rachels worldwide to cry more tears due to the effects of Christian evangelism of the Jews whereby their corrupted texts and evangelism causes more Jewish people to be exiled from the truth of their heritage and the truth of the only Bible given to man...the Jewish Scriptures!

A Christian might reply that this verse was stating that this was speaking of the resurrection of the dead babies. Or maybe some woman was there named Rachael. Or that when Jesus returns, then we can all live in peace in Israel. And of course "the enemy" is Satan. And the Missionary will go on and on, trashing these words of the future to fit what they want. The reality is that the Jews have a long memory, and they remember any great disaster that befalls their people. And if a foreign leader kills a great multitude of Jewish baby boys, they will not forget it. And yet, neither the Romans nor the Jews take note of this. What I find amazing is that of all of Herod's detractors, and there were many and volumes litter history of his atrocities which were many, NOT ONE OF THE MANY HISTORIANS THAT WRITE OF THE ATROCITIES OF HEROD MENTION THIS EVENT IN ALL OF THEIR WRITING DETAILING THE MURDERS AND HORRIFIC ACTS OF HEROD.

Answer for yourself: How are we to account of such a silence in all of history and it's chronicle of the terror of Herod?

It never happened. Scholars see this “story” in the New Testament as the re-playing of Moses’ life as “one greater than Moses” is here in the life of Yeshua in the mind of the writer of the Gospel of Matthew. Such a ploy was to steer both Jews and Gentiles away from Biblical Judaism which was in it's day a world-religion.

No, this verse is not about Jewish babies being sacrificed so that the Christ may live. It is about a Jewish nation that can take anything thrown at it, and still be able to return home one day. This is a promise of God. Again a gross misapplication of the Jewish Scriptures. It amazes me that anyone can seriously look to these examples and try to say that the Holy Spirit inspired such a travesty of Biblical translation. More to follow.

If you really want to start a textual analysis to find hundreds of purposeful misquotations, purposeful mistranslations, and purposeful lifing Hebrew verses out of context or the plain "invention" of Scripture in the New Testament passed of as supposed "quotes" we have a website that will show you how our Christian Bibles have been butchered when compared to the Hebrew.

THE HYMN OF CLEANTHES

Chiefest glory of deathless Gods, Almighty for ever, Sovereign of Nature that rulest by law, what Name shall we give Thee?-- Blessed be Thou! for on Thee should call all things that are mortal.
For that we are Thine offspring; nay, all that in myriad motion
Lives for its day on the earth bears one impress--Thy likeness--upon it.
Wherefore my song is of Thee, and I hymn thy power for ever.

Lo, the vast orb of the Worlds, round the Earth evermore as it rolleth, Feels Thee its Ruler and Guide, and owns Thy lordship rejoicing.
Aye, for Thy conquering hands have a servant of living fire-- Sharp is the bolt!--where it falls, Nature shrinks at the shock and doth shudder.
Thus Thou directest the Word universal that pulses through all things,
Mingling its life with Lights that are great and Lights that are lesser,
E'en as beseemeth its birth, High King through ages unending.

Nought is done that is done without Thee in the earth or the waters
Or in the heights of heaven, save the deed of the fool and the sinner.
Thou canst make rough things smooth; at Thy voice, lo, jarring disorder
Moveth to music, and Love is born where hatred abounded.
Thus hast Thou fitted alike things good and things evil together,
That over all might reign one Reason, supreme and eternal;
Though thereunto the hearts of the wicked be hardened and heedless--
Woe unto them!--for while ever their hands are grasping at good things, Blind are their eyes, yea, stopped are their ears to God's Law universal,
Calling through wise disobedience to live the life that is noble.
This they mark not, but heedless of right, turn each to his own way,
Here, a heart fired with ambition, in strife and straining unhallowed;
There, thrusting honour aside, fast set upon getting and gaining;
Others again given over to lusts and dissolute softness,
Working never God's Law, but that which warreth upon it.

Nay, but, O Giver of all things good, whose home is the dark cloud,
Thou that wieldesy Heaven's bolt, save men from their ignorance grievous;
Scatter its night from their souls, and grant them to come to that Wisdom
Wherewithal, sistered with Justice, Thou rulest and governest all things;
That we, honoured by Thee, may requite Thee with worship and honour,
Evermore praising thy works, as is meet for men that shall perish;
Seeing that none, be he mortal or God, hath privilege nobler
Than without stint, without stay, to extol Thy Law universal.

DID THE SABBATH BEGIN WITH ANCINET EGYPT?

The piou authors of "Mazzaroth" wrote: "The I Babylonians, Egyptians, Chinese, and the natives of India were acquainted with the seven days' division of time, as were the Druids" (James Bonwick, Egytpian Belief And Modern Thought, p. 412).

Answer for yourself: What is the "mazzaroth"? What does it have to do with the Sabbath? Is the Sabbath just a Jewish observance or did the "non-Jews" long, long before there were ever a Jewish person born keep and observe the Sabbath as a "holy day" before God?

31 Canst thou bind the chains of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? 32 Canst thou lead forth the Mazzaroth in their season? Or canst thou guide the Bear with her sons? 33 Knowest thou the ordinances of the heavens? Canst thou establish the dominion thereof in the earth?

Strong's Concordance:

4216 Mazzarah (maz-zaw-raw'); apparently from 5144 in the sense of distinction; some noted constellation (only in the plural), perhaps collectively, the zodiac: KJV-- Mazzoroth. Compare 4208.

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

4216 mazzarah- Mazzaroth; the 12 signs of the Zodiac and their 36 associated constellations

Answer for yourself: What did we see?

"Mazzaroth" is a Hebrew word which means in general "The Constellations of the Zodiac." The book of Job, which is thought to be the oldest book in the Bible, is believed to go back to approximately 2,150 B.C., which is 650 years before Moses came upon the scene around 1,500 B.C. to write the Pentateuch. We find our earliest reference to this "mazzaroth" as far back as Job in the Hebrew Bible. We we find that even before the book of Job the Ancient Egyptians were very familiar with this "mazzaroth" and this Zodiac.

From Strong's Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible in the Hebrew and Chaldee Dictionary, Mazzaroth (maz'-za-roth) is connected to the comparisons of the following two words:

- mazzarah (He Resh Zayin Mem) M(ah)ZZ(aw)R(aw)H, maz-zaw-raw'; apparently from the Heb. nazar, naw-zar', a primary root, to hold aloof, here specifically to set apart (to sacred purposes), i.e. devote – consecrate, separate, thus used here in the sense of distinction (only in the plural), perhaps collectively as the zodiac: Mazzaroth.
- mazzalah (He Lamed Zayin Mem) M(ah)ZZ(aw)L(aw)H, maz-zaw-law'; apparently from the Heb. nazal, naw-zal', a primary root, to drip, or shed by trickling: distill, drop, flood, (cause to) flow(-ing), gushout, melt, pour (down), running water, stream, thus in the sense of raining; a constellation, i.e. Zodiacal sign (perhaps as affecting the weather); -- planet.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever thought before reading this above that the Zodiac is "sacred"? But were we not taught by Christianity that anything connected to the Zodiac and Astrology was "Satanic"? Well I was; but that was before I began to study the Bible for myself over 20 years ago. Amazingly when we do these types of studies and look up the words in our Bibles in their original language, even going so far as to look at the "root words", we find quite the opposite of many of our inherited Christian traditions when we study for ourselves.

Gen 1:14 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: (KJV)

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon: "Seasons"

4150 mowed` or moed` or (feminine) mow` adah (2 Chr. 8:13)- an appointed place, an appointed time, a meeting

- a) an appointed time
 - 1) an appointed time (in general)
 - 2) a sacred season, a set feast, an appointed season
- b) an appointed meeting
- c) an appointed place d
- d) an appointed sign or signal
- e) the Tent of Meeting

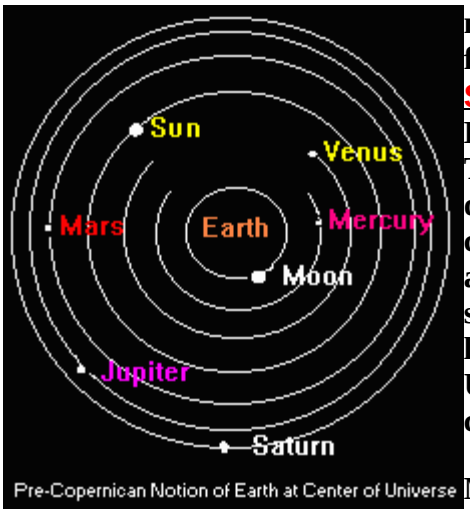
Answer for yourself: What do we see in the word "seasons" which are determined by the movment of the orbs of Heaven? It refers to the feasts of God. The Hebrew word "mo'edh" refers to an assembly, called again "hagh", or a "dance" or a "pilgrimage". These "signs" and "seasons" arrange "appointed times" with God, "appointed meeting times" with God, they are "signals" for mankind to gather with God and to walk in step with his Creator God. There are Divine Messages from Heaven for man at each step of the way on this "pilgrimage" of his Soul. You might not be aware yet but we have just cracked the whole secret of the whole Bible and its Festival calendar right here in this verse in Genesis.

Behind this all we find calendar cycles as we should. The Hebrew word "mo'adhim", or the "appointed assemblies" of the Lord refer to both day and night as determined by the Sun, the week determined by the phases of the moon, and month based on the recurrence of the new moon. This is "celestial" before it is to become "terrestrial". Again we find the uranograph here and the Ancients understood this and brought these "signs" down from Heaven and incorporated them into their religious worship of the Creator. If you missed the earlier articles on the uranograph please take the time to see them for yourself because they are the "key" to unlocking the hidden wisdom behind the pages of our Bibles which is sadly passed off today as supposed "historical" and "literal" narratives. The year was divided into two seasons, seedtime or winter, and harvest or summer. These times were connected to the Equinoxes and Solstices. Although no connection to the Hebrew word here, Muzaloth was the eighth heaven of the translation of Enoch, and a place of changing of the Season. Similar to the Hebrew mazzaloth in 2 Kings 23:5, RSV, "constellations," as a reference to Mazzaroth . It all ties together.

If we look to the Strong's Concordance for the same word:



4150 mowed` (mo-ade'); or moed` (mo-ade'); or (feminine) mow` adah (2 Chronicles 8:13) (mo-aw-daw'); from 3259; properly, an appointment, i.e. a fixed time or season; specifically, a festival; conventionally a year; by implication, an assembly (as convened for a definite purpose); technically the congregation; by extension, the place of meeting; also a signal (as appointed beforehand): KJV-- appointed (sign, time), (place of, solemn) assembly, congregation, (set, solemn) feast, (appointed, due) season, solemn (-ity), synogogue, (set) time (appointed).

Notice if you would the word "synogogue" in the above definition which comes from Christian sources no less. They need to be applauded for such frankness for if we look to the Jewish faith and the synagogue we find they like their predicessors, the Ancient Egyptians, their whole religious calendar followed these "signs" and "seasons".

Answer for yourself: And what were the very foundation for these "signs" and "seasons"? They were the Equinoxes and Solstices which taught a message to the whole of mankind from the very Heavens above.

Answer for yourself: And what was this message? It was the salvation of man's Soul which lies at the very foundation of the Biblical Festivals.

That was the "big view"; now lets cut this down to size somewhat and focus on 4th Commadment of the well-known "Ten Commandments". First of all there is no such thing as "Ten Commandments"; rather they are "Ten Categories" of Divine Laws given mankind; "ten categories" comprising 613 Laws and Commandmetns (mitzvoth) given to the Jewish Nation, 66 of which were previously given to the "non-Jewish nations of the world. These 66 Laws are often called today the "Laws of Noah"; Laws and Commandments which frame the Covenant of God with the "non-Jew". In spite of Christian teaching it is here that the "non-Jew" find his Covenant with God. If you doubt this then look to Acts 21 and see what James calls both "necessary" and "what seemed good to the Holy Spirit" that "non-Jews" were to be taught by the Jews in order that they become "acceptable to God". Make the connection between what James says with these "Laws of Noah" and then you have it.

Pre-Copernican Notion of Earth at Center of Universe

Dion Cassius, known in English as Dio Cassius or Cassius Dio, was a noted Roman historian and public servant. Dion Cassius wrote his Roman History in 80 books in Greek, sometime in the early 3rd century. In the he makes mention that the Ancient Egyptians derived the 7 days of the week from the seven visible orbs of Heaven as viewed from the Earth; namely, the Sun, Moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn. The first pages of the Bible explain how God created the world in six days and rested on the seventh. This seventh day became the Jewish day of rest, the sabbath, Saturday. Little did we known that behind this verse lie the 7 visible orbs of Heaven. We thus correlate the 7 days of the week to the 7 visible "planets" (as so called by the ancients). In the picture above we see the pre-Copernican view of the solar system with the "Earth" at the center of the Solar System and not the Sun. A long time ago people thought that the Earth was flat, and at the center of the Universe. They believed that the seven members of the Solar System forever circled around "us". We today know that this is not true.

Montucla, a French historian of mathematics, thought the week began on Saturday. Bailly says: "It is to the Egyptians that is attributed the idea of dedicating each day of the week to one of the planets." Sonnerat considered Saturday the Indian Sani or Saturn. Jahn says: "The Egyptians consecrated to Saturn the seventh day of the week."

Now here is where it gets really good. With the Egyptians, however, the seventh day was consecrated to Amen or Amoun, the Father, or Sun-god. Quoting Bonwick, p. 412, he states that "Pauw was of opinion that 'the Egyptians seem to have observed it very regularly.'" Bunsen, speaking of Set, the advesarial brother of Horus, adds, "He (Set) is the ass god of the Semitic tribes, who rested on the seventh day." To properly understand Set and his role in Egyptian religion is a study in itself. What is important for us to understand is that in early times Set was worshipped as the god (neteru) of wind and the desert storms, and prayed to that he would grant the strength of the storms to his followers. Although he was always a dark and moody god, he was believed to be the ally of his brother and sister, Osiris and Isis, the counterpart to his sister-wife Nephthys, and the defender of their father, Ra. But somewhere along the line the view of Set changed. He became a god of evil, in eternal conflict with the gods of light, and especially with Horus, the son of Osiris. Set became identified with his former enemy, the serpent Apep. By the XXVI Dynasty, Set was the major antagonist and embodiment of evil to the Egyptians. Why this change came about is unknown, but it is thought that some time after the unification of Egypt, the religion of Set fell into disfavor with the state religion, the worship of Ra and Osiris. It may be that there was open rebellion against the pharaoh Narmer (Menes) who unified Egypt under his rule, the rebellion failed and their beliefs were effectively quashed. Victors are known to rewrite history, it may be that they also rewrote the religion. It is an interesting idea to think that the struggle for the control of Egypt might have found its way into their core beliefs. In the Legend of Osiris, Set kills Osiris and scatters his body, then claims the throne of the gods for his own. He is later struck down by Horus, the son of Osiris, who restores order to the world and sets up the pharaohs as the guardians of Maat. Set and Horus continue to battle for control of the world, setting up an epic conflict of good versus evil. Set was not really worshipped after becoming a god of evil, but his religion was the major one for Upper Egypt until after the unification of Egypt. An older form of Set is seen however in which he is seen to be a companion and ally to Osiris and Isis. He is depicted defending the Sun Boat from demons and revered as the patron of Upper Egypt. In this form Horus is his brother and is the patron of Lower Egypt.

Hesiod, Herodotus, Philostratus, etc., mention the Sabbath day. Homer, Callimachus, and other ancient writers call the seventh day the "holy one". Eusebius confesses its observance by "almost all the philosophers and poets." Lucian notes that it was given to schoolboys for a holiday. Dr. Schmitz observes: "The manner in which all public ferhe (holidays) were kept, bears great analogy to our Sunday". The people generally visited the temples of the gods, and offered up their prayers and supplications. All kinds of business except lawsuits were suspended.

As in other cases, we may get illustrative light from the Assyrian neighbours of the Egyptians.

The Rev. Mr. Sayce finds the day of rest an Assyrian word. Saturday in Central Asia is still "Shambé", from the Persian "Shabat". The Accadians, thousands of years ago, says Sayce, kept holy the 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th of each month as Salum, "rest", "on which certain works were forbidden."

About the year 3000 B.C.E., long before the Arise of the Semitic nations, among whom the Babylonians, Assyrians, Israelites, and later the Arabians, were most prominent, there lived in Mesopotamia a nation of great power and importance, which is known by the name of Accad. And, strange to say, the Accadians were not a white, but a dark race. They are spoken of as "blackheads" or "blackfaces". But we learn so were the Egyptians and later "Jews". When we study to find out that the Jews are the biological offspring of these "black skinned" Egyptians the links begin to appear. Quite simply the Jewish race of antiquity were taught these earlier religious dogmas of Ancient Egypt, in particular for our focus here, the Sabbath as the 7th day of the week.

How much the Semites owe to the Accadians, whose dominion ceased about 1500 B. C., and whose language began to die out under the reign of the Assyrian king Sargon (722-705), we may infer from the fact that many religious institutions, legends, and customs among the Semites were of Accadian origin. But even further back we can go to Ancient Egypt and see how during their sojourn in Egypt the Semitic peoples who we later call the Hebrews and "Jews" were taught the Sabbath by "non-Jews". This pretty much settles all arguments that the Sabbath is "not for the non-Jew"; in fact it was to them it was given in the beginning of time by our Creator and written in the Sky and Heaven above.

Answer for yourself: What should that say to us? The Sabbath is not just a "Jewish thing".

Mr. George Smith wrote thus in 1876: "In the year 1869 I discovered among other things a curious religious calendar of the Assyrians in which every month is divided into four weeks, and the seventh days or Sabbaths are marked out as days in which no work shall be undertaken" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief And Modern Thought, p. 412-413).

Mr. H. F. Talbot quotes the Divine command from the Assyrian "Creation" tablet :

"On the seventh day he appointed a holy day, And to cease from all business he commanded."

Answer for yourself: But isn't it true that Judaism teaches that for a gentile to be considered righteous by a Jew, he/she must worship and honour God and obey the 7 laws that were given to Noah? Yes it is. But Judaism makes a terrible mistake when at the same time teaching that a "non-Jew" is not required to keep the Sabbath. Judaism today teaches that the bible is quite clear on the point: "It [the Shabbat] is a sign between Myself and the Children of Israel for eternity..." (Ex. 31:17) They go so far as to say that unless you're claming membership in the Covenant of Moses (Conversion), there is no duty implied by the bible to keep the Sabbath. They reiterate that at most you can say it's a good idea. But as for making it mandatory, the Children of Israel are specificied explicitly.

For what it's worth, in Jewish law, a non-Jew's observance of the Sabbath in the exact manner as traditional Judaism (which goes well beyond the literal resting on the day) is tantamount to either theft or adultary. Here is the "key". We are "not Jews" and we have at best, limited association to the Jewish people as far as the Exodus concerns us. We do not find our "history" with the Jewish people and their struggles and trials as a people seeking their own unique identity following their leaving of Egypt in what is today called the Exodus. However, most non-Jewish observations of the Sabbath is not to the same degree or kept entirely in the same way as do the Jews. The "non-Jew" is encouraged to seek his own unique observation and sanctification of this time, this "appointed time" with God.

Jeremiah 3: 1-4

1That is to say, If a man puts away his wife and she goes from him and becomes another man's, will he return to her again? [Of course not!] Would not that land [where such a thing happened] be greatly polluted? But you have played the harlot [against Me] with many lovers--yet would you now return to Me? says the Lord [or do you even think to return to Me?] 2Lift up your eyes to the bare heights and see. Where have you not been adulterously lain with? By the wayside you have sat waiting for lovers [eager for idolatry], like an Arabian [desert tribesman who waits to plunder] in the wilderness; and you have polluted the land with your vile harlotry and your wickedness (unfaithfulness and disobedience to God). 3Therefore the showers have been withheld, and there has been no spring rain. Yet you have the brow of a prostitute; you refuse to be ashamed. 4Have you not just now cried to Me: My Father, You were the guide and companion of my youth?

Hosea 2:2-7

2Plead with your mother [your nation]; plead, for she is not My wife and I am not her Husband; [plead] that she put away her [marks of] harlotry from her face and her adulteries from between her breasts,(A) 3Lest I strip her naked and make her as in the day she was born, and make her as a wilderness and set her like a parched land and slay her with thirst. 4Yes, for her children I will have no love nor pity nor mercy, for they are the children of harlotry. 5For their mother has played the harlot; she who conceived them has done shamefully, for she said, I will go after my lovers that give me my food and my water, my wool and my flax, my oil and my refreshing drinks. 6Therefore, behold, I [the Lord God] will hedge up her way [even yours, O Israel] with thorns; and I will build a wall against her that she shall not find her paths. 7And she shall follow after her lovers but she shall not overtake them; and she shall seek them [inquiring for and requiring them], but shall not find them. Then shall she say, Let me go and return to my first husband, for then was it better with me than now.

THE VISIT OF THE MAGI...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

In several of the previous articles we have made mention of several "magi" accounts. We add to these now. As soon as the God-begotten saviours were born into the world they were adored by shepherds from near by. In some cases they were also visited by wise men, or Magi, as the Persians and Brahmins called them, from far away. Sometimes the visitors were from even farther away, even angels leaving their heavenly ranks to wing their way to this rude tenement to adore its new born saviour.

We are informed by the Matthew writer, that being guided by a star, the Magi from the east came to where the young child was. The original word here is "magoi" from which comes our word "Magician." The persons here denoted were philosophers, priests, or astronomers. They dwelth chiefly in Persia and Arabia. They were the learned men of the Eastern nations, devoted to astronomy, to religion, and to medicine. They were held in high esteem by the Persian court; were admitted as counselors, and followed the camps in war to give advice (Barne's Notes, vol. i. p. 25). Matthew relates in 2:2: "And when they were come into the house (not stable) they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him. And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense, and myrrh."

The visit by "Magi" to the newly born incarnate Sun-god is very natural, for after all the Magi were Sun worshippers, and at early dawn on the 25th of December, the astrologers of the Arabs, Chaldeans, and other Oriental nations, greeted the infant Savior with gold, frankincense and myrrh. They started to salute their God long before the rising of the Sun, and having ascended a high mountain, thy waited anxiously for his birth, facing the East, and there hailed his first rays ;with incense and prayer (Dupis, Orig. Relig. Belief, p. 284; Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. pp. 96-97; Prof. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 272).

In an earlier age we find what seems strange to man today was anything but that to the primitive Gentiles of antiquity. I am speaking of the birth of their god-men or Avatars. Such events were numerous in country after country, at least as far as legends go. The birth of a God or Messiah was, as a matter of course, regarded as an event of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the great ones of the earth, and even the creatures of heaven also. "And hence we find it related in the history of several of the God-begotten Saviors of antiquity, that as soon as they were born into the world they were visited by "wise men from a distance" (or Magi, as they were called by the Persians and Brahmins). And in some cases they were likewise waited upon and adored by the neighboring shepherds; and even celestial spirits are reported in some instances as leaving their star-gilt homes to wing their way to the humble mansion, the rude tenement, containing a new-born God, that they might honor and adore "the Savior of men, the Savior of the world" (Graves, The Sixteen Crucified Saviors).

One only needs to look at the sacred biographies of both Confucius and Christ because both provide examples of the angel host forsaking their homes in the skies to pay their adoration and worship to a Deity-begotten god-man at his birth. Such a godman was always sent down by the "Father of Mercies" to save a guilt-laden world. And in both cases the Magi are reported as assembling to present their offerings to the infant God.

In the case of Confucius (born 598 B.C.), it is declared, "Five wise men from a distance came to the house, celestial music was heard in the skies, and angels attended the scene" (Five Volumes). Strikingly similar to this ancient legend, in each of the several characteristics, is the Christian story.

Matthew in chapter 2 verse 1 which speaks of "wise men from the east" journeying to Jerusalem to visit the infant Christ, soon after his birth, amongst the mules and oxen in a stable, though he omits to state the number of itinerant adorers who presented themselves on the occasion.

The Persian story is more specific, as it gives the number of Magi who visited the young Savior of that country as five. Luke 2:13 speaks of "a multitude of the heavenly host praising God," in gratulation of the birth of the Judean Savior.

Now, when we bear in mind that one method of praising God, with the orientals, was by music, we quickly understand this is only another mode of proclaiming, as in the case of Confucius, that "celestial music was heard in the skies." And "angels attended the scene" of Confucius' birth. So, likewise, Luke 2:15 relates that the angels, after rejoicing with the shepherds on the occasion of the birth of Christ, "went away into heaven."How complete the parallel! and, but for the digression, and monopoly of space, we might trace it much further, and show that Confucius, like Christ, had twelve chosen disciples; that he was descended from a royal house of princes, as Christ from the royal house of David; that he, in like manner, retired for a long period from the noise and bustle of society into religious contemplative seclusion; that he inculcated the same Golden Rule of doing to others as we desire them to act toward us, and other moral maxims equal in importance to anything that can be found in the Christian Scriptures, etc.

Other Saviors at birth, we are told, were visited by both angels and shepherds, also "wise men," at least great men.

Chrishna, the eighth avatar of India, 1200 B.C., (so it is related by the "inspired penman" of their pagan theocracy) was visited by angels, shepherds and prophets (avatars). "Immediately after his birth he was visited by a chorus of devatas (angels), and surrounded by shepherds, all of whom were impressed with the conviction of his future greatness." We are informed further that "gold, frankincense and myrrh" were presented to him as offerings. The well-known modern traveler, Mr. Ditson, who visited India but a few years since, uses the emphatic declaration, "In fact, as soon as Chrishna was born he was saluted by a chorus of devatas, or angels." In the evangelical narrative of the Christian Savior an angel is reported to have saluted his mother thus: "Hail, thou that art highly favored; the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women" (Luke 1:28)

Answer for yourself: Can these facts be relegated to the bin of "coincidence?"

And in the next chapter the angel is reported as joining with "the heavenly host" "in praising God."

A similar report is found in the Hindu bible (the Ramayana), appertaining to the mother of the eighth Savior, of whom it is declared "Brahma and Siva, with a host of attending spirits, came to her and sang, 'In thy delivery, O favored among women, all nations shall have cause to exult.'" And when the celestial infant (Chrishna) appeared (it is related in a subsequent chapter), "a chorus of heavenly spirits saluted him with hymns; the whole room was illuminated by his light, and the countenance of his father and mother shone with brightness and glory (by reflection), their understandings were opened so that they knew him to be the Preserver of the world, and they began to worship him." The last text here quoted brings to mind Luke 24:45, which declares, "Then he (Christ) opened their (his parents) understandings."

Answer for yourself: Can these facts be mere "coincidence?"

The ninth avatar of India (Sakia) furnishes to some extent a similar parallel. According to the account of an exploration made in India, and published in the New York Correspondent of 1828, "There is on a silver plate in a cave in India an inscription stating that about the time of the advent of Buddha Sakia (600 B.C.), a saint in the woods learned by inspiration that another avatar (Messiah or Savior) had appeared in the house of Rajah of Lailas. Learning which, he flew through the air to the place, and when he beheld the new-born Savior he declared him to be the great avatar (Savior or prophet), and that he was destined to establish a new religion" -- the New Covenant Religion.

Answer for yourself: Can these facts be relegated to the bin of "coincidence?"

This should make you sick. Look at what we have we inherited in the Gentile Christian Church.

Answer for yourself: Is it any wonder that Jews, the true people of Jesus, won't accept what we so readily hold as "sacred?"

We next draw on the history of Greece. It is authentically related of Pythagoras (600 B.C.) that his fame having reached Miletas and neighboring cities, men renowned for wisdom (wise men) came to visit him. (Progress of Religious Ideas, vol. i.) In the Anacalypsis we are told that Magi came from the East to offer gifts at Socrates' birth, bringing gold, frankincense and myrrh," the same kind of offering as that presented to the two divine infants Chrishna and Christ, according to their respective "inspired" biographers. (Matt. 2:4, and the Ramayana).

And the legend of Mithra, of Persia, might also be included in our category of comparison, if we had space for it. All the four Saviors last named (if Socrates may be called such) are reported as having been honored and enriched with aromatic offerings at their respective births. And we have the statement from Mr. Higgins (Anacalypsis), that the same assortment of spices (with the gold) constituted the materials offered as gifts to the sun, in Persia more than three thousand years ago; and likewise in Arabia near the same era.

And it may be stated here, that an ancient historic account of Zoroaster of Persia (6,000 B.C., according to Pliny and Aristotle), speaks of his having also been visited by Magi, or "Magia," at the period of his earthly advent. And it is, perhaps, well to note in this place, that "Magi" is the term used in the Apocryphal Gospels, to designate the "wise men" who visited Christ at birth; and that Magi, Magic and Magician are but variations of the same word, at least derivations from the same root, all suggesting a wisdom correlated to the Gods. Osiris, an incarnate deity of Egypt, we may cite as another case of an infantile God receiving signal honors and eclat at birth, as he was visited while yet in the cradle by a host of admiring adorers. "People flocked from all parts of the world to behold the heaven- born infant." Such a world-wide fame must have had the effect to attract, with the numerous crowd who thronged to see and worship him, no small number of "wise men."

Answer for yourself: Now ask yourself: "Is Christianity a Divine and unique religion from God?

Answer for yourself: Does it make sense at all that the divine Father, in his infinite wisdom, should have chosen to reveal the intelligence of the birth of his son Jesus Christ to a set of nomadic heathen idolaters hundreds of miles distant (though known as "wise men" because of their skill in astrology) before he made it known to his own "chosen people" (the Jews)?

Answer for yourself: Does it make sense that God would call such pagans "wise men," while men of God's own election, the Jews, according to the Christian bible, were often stigmatized and denounced as "fools," a "generation of vipers," etc?

Let us not forget that it was at the moment of the winter solstice (25th December), precisely when the Persian magi drew the horoscope of the new year, the the "morning star" was positioned in the heavens as being in the bosom of the Virgin (Virgo) rising heliacally in the eastern horizon. On this account he was figured in their astronomical pictures under the form of a child suckled by a chaste virgin (Volney, Ruins, p. 155; Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 236).

Answer for yourself: If you have been keeping up, is there little doubt that so far the telling of the story of Christ in the New Testament is nothing but the "re-telling" of the Sun-Myths?

CONSTANTINE'S EASTER LETTER AND THE LOSS OF THE FAITH ONCE GIVEN TO THE SAINTS

I have up to this point given a detailed account of the apostasy encountered by the early Gentile Church under the influence of Constantine. Why did this man turn from established orthodoxy handed down by the apostles? The answer comes when we see what was in the heart of such a man that caused him to accept certain values and beliefs. We are the recipients of his "false-belief system today." For an example, let us see into his heart as we examine why the Christian Church today celebrates and observes Easter instead of Passover as God commanded!

CONSTANTINE I: ON THE KEEPING OF EASTER

From the Letter of the Emperor to all those not present at the Council. (Found in Eusebius, Vita Const., Lib. iii., 18-20.)

When the question relative to the sacred festival of Easter arose, it was universally thought that it would be convenient that all should keep the feast on one day; for what could before beautiful and more desirable, than to see this festival, through which we receive the hope of immortality, celebrated by all with one accord, and in the same manner? It was declared to be particularly unworthy for this, the holiest of all festivals, to follow the custom [the calculation] of the Jews, who had soiled their hands with the most fearful of crimes, and whose minds were blinded. In rejecting their custom, (1) we may transmit to our descendants the legitimate mode of celebrating Easter, which we have observed from the time of the Saviour's Passion to the present day [according to the day of the week]. We ought not, therefore, to have anything in common with the Jews, for the Saviour has shown us another way; our worship follows a more legitimate and more convenient course (the order of the days of the week); and consequently, in unanimously adopting this mode, we desire, dearest brethren, to separate ourselves from the detestable company of the Jews, for it is truly shameful for us to hear them boast that without their direction we could not keep this feast. How can they be in the right, they who, after the death of the Saviour, have no longer been led by reason but by wild violence, as their delusion may urge them? They do not possess the truth in this Easter question; for, in their blindness and repugnance to all improvements, they frequently celebrate two passovers in the same year.

Answer for yourself: Did you know that often two Passovers were observed in the same year? Why?

If Constantine had read the Bible, the Old Testament, he would have seen that God allows for the celebration of Passover exactly one month later for those who were unclean when it was supposed to be celebrated, or who traveled from such far distances that they could not make it in time) Again Constantine is wrong!

We could not imitate those who are openly in error. How, then, could we follow these Jews, who are most certainly blinded by error? for to celebrate the passover twice in one year is totally inadmissible. But even if this were not so, it would still be your duty not to tarnish your soul by communications with such wicked people [the Jews]. Besides, consider well, that in such an important matter, and on a subject of such great solemnity, there ought not to be any division. Our Saviour has left us only one festal day of our redemption, that is to say, of his holy passion, and he desired [to establish] only one Catholic Church. Think, then, how unseemly it is, that on the same day some should be fasting whilst others are seated at a banquet; and that after Easter, some should be rejoicing at feasts, whilst others are still observing a strict fast. For this reason, a Divine Providence wills that this custom should be rectified and regulated in a uniform way; and everyone, I hope, will agree upon this point. As, on the one hand, it is our duty not to have anything in common with the murderers of our Lord; and as, on the other, the custom now followed by the Churches of the West, of the South, and of the North, and by some of those of the East, is the most acceptable, it has appeared good to all; and I have been guarantee for your consent, that you would accept it with joy, as it is followed at Rome, in Africa, in all Italy, Egypt, Spain, Gaul, Britain, Libya, in all Achaia, and in the dioceses of Asia, of Pontus, and Cilicia. You should consider not only that the number of churches in these provinces make a majority, but also that it is right to demand what our reason approves, and that we should have nothing in common with the Jews. To sum up in few words: By the unanimous judgment of all, it has been decided that the most holy festival of Easter should be everywhere celebrated on one and the same day, and it is not seemly that in so holy a thing there should be any division. As this is the state of the case, accept joyfully the divine favour, and this truly divine command; for all which takes place in assemblies of the bishops ought to be regarded as proceeding from the will of God. Make known to your brethren what has been decreed, keep this most holy day according to the prescribed mode; we can thus celebrate this holy Easter day at the same time, if it is granted me, as I desire, to unite myself with you; we can rejoice together, seeing that the divine power has made use of our instrumentality for destroying the evil designs of the devil, and thus causing faith, peace, and unity to flourish amongst us. May God graciously protect you, my beloved brethren.

THE CONSTANTINE CONSPIRACY

We at Bet Emet Ministry are aware through the study of history of the compromise which led the institutional church into apostasy (departure from the true faith). We at Bet Emet feel the Lord has called us to awaken those who are asleep to the facts of the terrible apostasy from the faith of Jesus and who are comfortable in their compromise with paganism in the practice of their own faith (mainline Christianity). I do hope this treatise peeks the interests of many, causing more investigation of the subject and more light on the nature of the great apostasy to whom multitudes are not aware. With the intriguing prospect that mysteries and conspiracies of the past can become common knowledge, perhaps more "ordinary" believers like myself will join in the process of the restoration of the truth in these latter times.

This anti-Judaism which became anti-Semitism, exempted the church, in its opinion, from following the scriptural commands of the Sabbath and the holy feasts, such as Passover. The church equated obedience to these scriptural mandates with following Judaism (called today “being under the Law”). They supposed that since the Jews were so proud of observing the Sabbath and holy feasts, they would be in league with Judaism if they also followed these things. Of course, since many in Judaism (but not all) denied the Roman depiction of Jesus as Messiah, the church thought keeping the Sabbath and Passover would be equated as associating with those who deny Messiah (Christ).

Answer for yourself: Have you ever investigated why the Jews reject the "Christian Jesus?" Well, until you do then you will not possess the knowledge that explains why, and once having such knowledge, then your study of the "Jesus Story" becomes paramount in your life because the arguments of the Jews are irrefutable when one is armed with the facts from both unbiased history as well as the true Hebrew Scriptures.

All Christians and Jews, centuries later, are affected by this apostasy. Most Christians think of Sunday and Easter as biblically mandated holy days and are totally ignorant of this being false doctrine and pagan worship days. Also, there are many Jewish people who think of this Jesus as leader of a Gentile (thusly pagan) religion, forgetting he is often depicted with his Jewishness and in defense of the Law as a rabbi. Both mainstream Rabbinical Judaism and mainstream Christianity stubbornly follow their respective traditions, voicing the idea that to do otherwise would leave one "not a Jew" or "not a Christian" as the case may be. The few Christians who faithfully keep the Sabbath and enjoy the Jewish holy feasts are consigned to being a cult by mainstream Christianity. They are mostly not respected as real Christians. The minority of Jewish people who accept Jesus are viewed as traitors and apostate Jews by the mainstream Jewish community. By some they are likened to being non-persons.

In many of our writings at Bet Emet we are dealing with the problem of the historical denial of the scriptures by the Gentile church. What I found was that the whole issue of church apostasy comes down to a time and a man who transformed the environment and system in which Christianity and Judaism operated. I propose that the events which culminated in and included the rule of an Emperor named Constantine formed a satanic conspiracy; one that must be overturned by an equally powerful divine conspiracy, prayerfully accomplished in our time, whereby the truth behind the "Jesus Story" is known by all.

WHAT IS THE ZODIAC?

The Zodiac is a circle of space surrounding the Earth. It may be imagined as a belt in the heavens about 15 degrees wide in which the planets travel. It is the Sun's apparent path, called the ecliptic. The zodiacal circle is divided into twelve parts, each part containing 30 degrees of space called the Signs of the Zodiac. Thus a sign is a one-twelfth division of the zodiacal circle and is defined as containing 30 degrees of celestial longitude: 12 signs each measuring 30 degrees constitute the circle of the zodiac or 360 degrees. In this circle the planets travel each in its own orbit, one outlying beyond the other. The zodiac, then, is a circle divided into twelve signs through which the planets travel or transit from west to east, going through one sign after another in their order from Aries to Pisces. Although the zodiac is generally referred to as a circle it is, in fact, elliptical. Each sign possesses a certain specific influence of its own. The motion of the Earth around the Sun once a year causes the Sun to appear to pass through one of the 12 signs each month. Its influence, according to location, determines not alone the seasons but the general nature and character of persons born at that time.

The signs in order are:

- Aries the Ram,Taurus the Bull,
- Gemini the Twins,
- Cancer the Crab,
- Leo the Lion,
- Virgo the Virgin,
- Libra the Scales,
- Scorpio the Scorpion,
- Sagittarius the Archer,
- Capricorn the Goat,
- Aquarius the Water-Bearer, and
- Pisces the Fishes.

The signs of the zodiac do not correspond to the constellations of the same names, although the mythologies of the signs and the constellations are related.

The word zodiac comes from the Greek zodiakos meaning a circle. It is often assumed that the connection is with animals (living creatures, from the Greek zoe "to live" and the English zoo. However, the root meaning of zodiakos has nothing to do with living creatures, but instead comes from the primitive root zoad, meaning a path or way or going by steps. In this connection, it is used to denote the way along which the sun appears to move through the stars in the course of the 12 months. This course is repeated every year as the apparent position of the sun returns to almost the exact spot that it occupied on the same date a year before. So the path through the sky along which the sun travels (or appears to travel) is called the zodiac and is divided into 12 segments.

Each of these segments is marked by a group of stars which is easily recognized. These 12 groups of stars (constellations) have names that are familiar to most people and are known as the "signs" of the zodiac. Please keep in mind that the star groups (constellations) do not necessarily look like the objects for which they are named, but each is associated with the picture of the object.

The fact that the signs of the zodiac bear little resemblance the pictures associated with them should be of great interest to observers of the night-time sky. Every ancient culture with any knowledge or tradition concerning the stars recognizes the same 12 star groups and the same names or meanings of names. Examine the star knowledge of whatever ancients you choose (Babylonia, China, India, Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Central America.....) and everywhere the same constellations are identified and associated with the identical or similar meanings and names.

Answer for yourself: How can we explain this?

The only explanation for this fact is that there was one original Source who identified the constellations with their meanings before the dispersion of the peoples of the earth. God is that Source. The 12 signs as originally given by God were a prophetic outline of the purpose of God in the history of salvation.

Answer for yourself: What is the role of the Zodiac in God's salvation of mankind? What is the message we are to hear and have we heard it yet? It is to these issues we continually turn in the next articles.

Let us continue our studies.

INDIVIDUAL COMPARISONS OF THE LIFE OF THE SUN-GODS OF THE GENTILE NATIONS WITH THE LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST DEPICTED IN THE NT.....SHOULD WE BE CONCERNED?

It is not my intention to scare anyone or to destroy the faith of anyone. However, before God, it is my intention to reveal the truth to the Christian in hopes if there be opportunity to repent of false beliefs and idolatry, then one might be so equipped with the facts and truth that such an intelligent decision could be made by each individual; thereby increasing the merit for manifesting the Kingdom of Heaven and bringing Messiah the King.

In order for such a noble purpose to be realized in the life of our readers, it is often necessary to challenge long held beliefs held to be "sacred," but when the light of truth is shone upon them, often they are shown to be what they really were all along....pious lies and frauds.

This is not easy for a Christian Pastor to admit or teach, but over 15 years of consciousness and in-depth study, often 8 hours a day, year after year, has brought copious information across my mind and heart which has brought major repentance into my life whereby many of those "sacred" doctrines of Christianity were shown to be nothing more than what was stated above: "pious lies and frauds." It was time to cast out the leaven of sin and wickedness, even "religious" wickedness which went Sunday after Sunday unexposed for what they really were.

IF YOU HAVE KEPT UP?

If you have kept up with the reading of these web pages up to now, then you know the basic premise both stated and being revealed to the readership; namely, Gentile Christianity with it's host of religious dogmas and doctrines are little more than "refined" Sun Worship. Be careful to understand that this a charge which is, unfortunately, easy to prove and is levied against not only Catholics, but the offspring of such a revolting idolatrous faith...Protestantism as well.

It is my intention to examine the life of Christ as recorded in the New Testament in detail in hopes of ascertaining if what is accepted by faith by the vast majority of Christians today as "truth" is really that, of if it is nothing more than "Plagiarized Paganism originating with Sun worship and the various Sun Myths of the Gentile nations since time began." If I am able to prove my point, and I have up to now and will continue to do so, then understand the tragic and serious implications that it means for you..the traditional Christian. Basically, you are a member in good standing of an apostate faith and don't know it. And without such information made available to you, as most never read sufficiently to see such abominations for themselves which are dressed up and passes off by the Christian Church as "orthodoxy," then the only recourse for most is to die in their sin and never know it. I hope to help those who take the time to look to see "if they be in the faith of Yeshua."

Answer for yourself: Do you want to know the truth before you die? Do you really?

HERE IS THE OPPORTUNITY YOU SAID YOU WANTED

Up to now in this web site and its articles we have laid the foundation, and strengthened the foundation for what comes next. The concepts revealed in the previous pages are fundamental to understanding what comes next. In the accounts of Jesus' life as recorded in the New Testament I and other scholars maintain that the very core of the Life of Christ as depicted in the New Testament is little more than manifestations of Astro-Theology in the majority of such a document. Without a background in Biblical Judaism of the Second Temple Period it is literally impossible to read the New Testament and discern truth from error. We, as believers in the historical Jesus are handicapped by the absence of such information.

As if that was not bad enough, we read many of the accounts of Jesus' life, many accounts which translate into doctrines and dogmas, which if can be proven to be lies and pious frauds, would do each of us good to reconsider our religious belief systems.

LEVITICUS 23: THE PATTERN FOR WORSHIP FOR BOTH JEW AND "NON-JEW"

1 ¶ And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: The appointed seasons of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are My appointed seasons. 3 Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day is a sabbath of solemn rest, a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of work; it is a sabbath unto the LORD in all your dwellings. 4 ¶ These are the appointed seasons of the LORD, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their appointed season. 5 In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at dusk, is the LORD'S passover. 6 And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD; seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread. 7 In the first day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 8 And ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD seven days; in the seventh day is a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 9 And the LORD spoke unto Moses saying: 10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: When ye are come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring the sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest. 11 And he shall wave the sheaf before the LORD, to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. 12 And in the day when ye wave the sheaf, ye shall offer a he-lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt-offering unto the LORD. 13 And the meal-offering thereof shall be two tenth parts of an ephah of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour; and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of a hin. 14 And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor fresh ears, until this selfsame day, until ye have brought the offering of your God; it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. 15 ¶ And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the day of rest, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the waving; seven weeks shall there be complete; 16 even unto the morrow after the seventh week shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall present a new meal-offering unto the LORD. 17 Ye shall bring out of your dwellings two wave-loaves of two tenth parts of an ephah; they shall be of fine flour, they shall be baked with leaven, for first-fruits unto the LORD. 18 And ye shall present with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams; they shall be a burnt-offering unto the LORD, with their meal-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. 19 And ye shall offer one he-goat for a sin-offering, and two he-lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings. 20 And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs; they shall be holy to the LORD for the priest. 21 And ye shall make proclamation on the selfsame day; there shall be a holy convocation unto you; ye shall do no manner of servile work; it is a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations. 22 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corner of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them for the poor, and for the stranger: I am the LORD your God. 23 ¶ And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 24 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying: In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall be a solemn rest unto you, a memorial proclaimed with the blast of horns, a holy convocation. 25 Ye shall do no manner of servile work; and ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD. 26 And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 27 Howbeit on the tenth day of this seventh month is the day of atonement; there shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls; and ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD. 28 And ye shall do no manner of work in that same day; for it is a day of atonement, to make atonement for you before the LORD your God. 29 For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people. 30 And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any manner of work in that same day, that soul will I destroy from among his people. 31 Ye shall do no manner of work; it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. 32 It shall be unto you a sabbath of solemn rest, and ye shall afflict your souls; in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye keep your sabbath. 33 ¶ And the LORD spoke unto Moses, saying: 34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying: On the fifteenth day of this seventh month is the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the LORD. 35 On the first day shall be a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 36 Seven days ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD; on the eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you; and ye shall bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD; it is a day of solemn assembly; ye shall do no manner of servile work. 37 These are the appointed seasons of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to bring an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meal-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, each on its own day; 38 beside the sabbaths of the LORD, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD. 39 Howbeit on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruits of the land, ye shall keep the feast of the LORD seven days; on the first day shall be a solemn rest, and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest. 40 And ye shall take you on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook, and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days. 41 And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year; it is a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall keep it in the seventh month. 42 Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are home-born in Israel shall dwell in booths; 43 that your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God. 44 And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the appointed seasons of the LORD.

Answer for yourself: What has this got to do with me, a Christian? Everything!

First of all hidden in the New Testament is the depiction of "non-Jewish" believers keeping and observing these "Appointed Times of God" both in the Old and New Testament and we will look at example in the forthcoming articles. But every Festival and Feast of these commanded in Leviticus 23 were observed by both the "Jews" and the believing "non-Jews". This is the fact of the Biblical texts when correctly studied and when we look behind the Greek and the Hebrew of these texts.

The Christian-professing world largely ignores the Biblical Holy Days, God's Holy Days (although many thousands of Christians do observe them today, just as the early Christian church did without fail), and instead observe traditional man-made holidays that are called Christian.

The first Christians were "Jews" and continued to honor the Sabbath and Biblical Festivals and the Jewish people continue to do so today. Evidence indicates that many Gentile Christians also continued to celebrate these Biblical Feasts along with the Jews both in Palestine and in Asia, Minor, for many centuries into the Christian Era until the time of Constantine.

For the first three centuries after Pentecost, the early "church" began falling away from the teachings of James and the Jerusalem assembly. This we will see occur over the next two to three centuries and was due largely to the growing influence of the Catholic Church which grew stronger and stronger through intimidation and threat of death. By the time of Constantine the followers of "the Christ" were divided over key doctrinal issues. On top of this, a vigorous persecution was setting in against any who opposed the Catholic Church.

In Vol. 2 of Philip Schaff's History of the Christian Church, Page 204, we read "Tertullian, at the close of the second and the beginning of the third century, views the Lord's day (that is, Sunday, my insertion) as figurative of rest from sin and typical of man's final rest, and says: 'we nothing to do with Sabbaths, new moons, or the Jewish festivals, much less with those of the heathen.' "

Page 205 of the same book, beginning of fourth paragraph: " The observance of the Sabbath among the Jewish Christians gradually ceased." Under the order of Emperor Constantine in 325 A.D. a council was called for his bishops to convene a council at Nice in Turkey (modern Isnik) to discuss and to settle various church related doctrines, one being which was the proper day of worship. Here is an interesting passage from Vol. 3 of Philip Schaff's History of the Christian Church, page 405,

"The feast of the resurrection was thenceforth required to be celebrated everywhere on a Sunday, and never on the day of the Jewish Passover, but always after the fourteenth of Nisan, on the Sunday after the first vernal full moon." (Passover is always on the 14th day of the first month at evening. - See Exodus 12:6)

Near the end of the passage we read, "It is our duty to have nothing in common with the murderers of our Lord."

The battle against the destruction of this "Pattern of Worship" continues. It is up to us study hard in order to find the truth for ourselves and then to hold it for dear life.

ANCIENT MAN AND HIS FEAR OF DARKNESS: THE ORIGIN FOR ALL WORLD RELIGIONS?

Archeology is our friend because according to the best understanding we have gleaned from the available ancient records, life for our ancient forefathers was a mixture of wonder and fear. Each day, just finding food to sustain one's family without falling prey to what you hunted and becoming a meal yourself for the roaming predatory animals, was a life and death struggle. As if that was not enough primitive mankind had to battle the elements, in particular winter, for his survival and this was a test of his endurance and skill to survive.

It was from these sparse, distressful conditions of the human race that the Ancient's long history of the search for God, his Creator, and meaning of life has come. From the beginning, man's' profound questions concerning his origins and how he was created and by Whom demanded answers. When no clear answer were forthcoming from the universe, man turned inward, and developed his own based upon what he saw above and around him. Keep in mind that all the theological teachings of the Western World were developed in the Northern Hemisphere. The study of this Subject, man's search for his origin and his Creator, is properly called - "Astro-Theology" or, "The Worship of the Heavens".

The Ancient's understanding of his origins and his Creator is the first, original, and therefore the oldest, and most esteemed tale on Earth! It did not take ancient man very long to decide that in his world of wonder and fear that his single greatest enemy to be feared was the darkness of night, and all the unknown dangers that came with it. Simply stated, man's first enemy was darkness.

Understanding this one fact alone, people can readily see why the greatest and most trustworthy friend the human race could ever have was by far, heaven's greatest gift to the world.

Answer for yourself: And what was ancient man's greatest friend and gift from God? It was the Sun that eliminated the threat of darkness that was man's greatest enemy.

Armed with this important truth we can now begin to unriddle the hidden mysteries that lay behind Christianity as well as the vast majority of earth's religions. It is the oldest and greatest story ever told; namely, the salvation of mankind by God through His Sun.

Modern-day Christianity has often belittled our ancient ancestors and falsely accused them of being no more than ignorant worshippers of the Sun. The hard facts of the matter is that this accusation is a blatant lie. Understand that no people of the ancient world believed the "Sun" to be "God". In reality every Ancient culture and nation on Earth have all used the Sun as the most logically appropriate symbol to represent the Glory of the unseen Creator of the heavens. I used to accept this premise until I began to study for myself and you can't imagine my surprise and amazement as I studied the Ancients and found that they not only did not literally worship this "orb" of Heaven as many Christian writers had depicted but they had a much greater possession of knowledge of the world and the Cosmos than mankind today. That's right; almost impossible to believe until you see this for yourself. I found that the ancient Egyptians had developed a very complex religious system, called the Mysteries, which was also the first system of salvation given to mankind. As such it regarded the human body as a prison house of the soul, which could be liberated from its bodily impediments, through the discipline of the Arts and Sciences, and advanced from the level of a mortal to that of a God. This was the notion of the sumum bonum or greatest good, to which all men must aspire, and it became the basis of all ethical concepts. The Egyptian Mystery System was also a Secret Order, and membership was gained by initiation and a pledge of secrecy. The teaching was graded and delivered orally to the Neophyte and hierophant; and under these circumstances of secrecy, the Egyptians developed secret systems of writing and teaching, and forbade their Initiates from writing what they had learnt. In the article that follows I will began to explain this "secret wisdom" of the Inner Mysteries that was withheld from the layman and is yet kept from them today primarily because over time this secret legacy has been lost only to be recovered through the efforts of Champollion, a French Egyptologist, who is acknowledged as the father of modern Egyptology. He achieved many things during his short career, but he is best known for his work on the Rosetta Stone. It was his deciphering of the hieroglyphics contained on the Stone that laid the foundations for Egyptian archaeology and this paved the way to restoring not only this earliest salvation message of God to mankind as taught by the Egyptian Priesthoods but explains and reveals the background of the various "Jesus Stories" as collected down through history in the depictions of the many solar gods. So it is time to not only set the record straight regarding the Ancients' understanding of the Sun and its role in their "religions" but expose Christianity for what it is; namely, the literalization of the personified Sun in its path through the Heavens and Zodiac in the person of "Jesus Christ". It is to these issues we now turn.

THE ETERNAL CONFLICT OF LIGHT AND DARKNESS

Paul records for us in one of his epistles:

1 Cor 15:14-15 14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. 15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. (KJV)

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

It goes without saying that the above two verses often confuse the reader because it appears that one verse speaks of a historical Christ Jesus and the other a mystical concept and not a historical person?

Answer for yourself: Who was literally this "Jesus Christ" we read about from the pen of Paul? What does it mean that he is "risen"?

Let's closely examine the original, conceptual foundations of the Christian faith and then decide "...if Christ be not risen. " But for that to happen we have to understand an Ancient concept that generated the world's religions and that being primitive man's fear of the dark. You will understand after you read this article.

Let's travel back for a moment to about 20,000 B.C.E. or so and try to put ourselves into the place of Ancient mankind. It's early evening, and the Sun had just set. In this time before sidewalks, streetlights, headlights, and the glow of cities, the moonless night was truly dark, so dark that it was often dangerous to be outside at night. The blackness made it difficult to see the ground, and the dark gave cover to beasts and plunderers that prowled the night. At nighttime, it was very, very dark and until fire was discovered, it was man's most dangerous enemy and threatened his very survival. In the dark cold of night man realized his utter vulnerability to the elements. Each night, mankind was forced to wait for the "Rising of the Sun" to chase away the physical and mental insecurity brought on by the darkness. Therefore, the morning Sun focused man's attention on his heavenly dependence for his frail, short existence on Earth, and in doing so, you can see how the Sun became the appropriate symbol of the Creator's divine benevolence from Heaven. And as winter progressed Ancient man noticed that it became darker for longer and longer periods of time and much colder. It was inarguably, unremittingly, and unexplainably dark. Watching the Heavens primitive man saw the Sun was fading fast and receding at sunset on the horizon as it set. He feared that his source of "salvation" might stop shining altogether, and might never reappear. Ancient mankind saw the dark as his mortal enemy for it gave cover for all the bad things that could happen to him: attacks from other tribes, the capture of his family, attacks from predator animals, prey to poisonous snakes, injuries sustained by accidents that occur in the dark, etc. All the bad things seemed to happen in the dark. So until the discovery of fire which brought limited light into man's own little world of darkness, primitive man only had the "Great Fire of Day" which served the whole Earth with its heavenly presence.

Answer for yourself: Is this the reason that several thousand years ago mankind said and believed at it says in Deut 4:24, and Heb 12:29 that the God of the Bible was a "Consuming Fire" in heaven? It sure was.

All mankind quickly came to realize that he was attached and bound to a life on Earth, but it was the sky that brought to him his "salvation" and man reasoned that this was the home of his God and Creator. The Heavens above was to the Ancients God's dwelling place. Over time as man created and reasoned his various "theologies" and personified the Sun, the symbol of his God, and its movements in the Heavens it would be a short step to personify the Sun as the "Son" of the Sun and they further reasoned that God's Son/Sun would also reside with his Father "up there in Heaven". It was assumed that God's 'Sun was but a visible representative of the unseen Creator in heaven. So it was said, "When you have seen the Sun, you have seen the Father " or "The Father is glorified in his Sun".

As you can imagine Ancient man had no problem understanding that all life on Earth depended directly on life-giving energy from the Sun because the Sun not only caused the crops to grow and produce a harvest that guaranteed his life and longevity but the light and warmth that it gave mankind was the main factor in his safety and security as explained above. Consequently, all life was lost without the Sun. It followed that God's 'Sun' was nothing less than "mankind's Saviour".

One of the things that amazed me in my study of Egypt was their unbelievable knowledge of Science, Physics, and Astronomy. You have to read it for yourself to see how they understood these disciplines in the way that they did and how the ancients understood the intricacies of the atom and molecules. The Ancients understood energy and since life is energy, and energy from the Sun gave life, they then understood that their own existence was sustained by themselves taking energy into their bodies from the foods that they ate that was again sustained by the Sun. They again reasoned that Sun was giving up its life supporting energy in order that they could live.

Answer for yourself: Is this where we get the concept that God's Sun, or God personified in the Sun, gives His life for us in order that we might live? We sure do.

As you now clearly see the Ancients reasoned that their lives came from and were sustained each day by "Their Saviour... in the form of God's Sun". But this truism only worked as long as the Sun would return each morning to pour out his life for them. Primitive mankind's hope of salvation, both present and future, would be secure only if his "Savior, in the form of the Sun was 'Risen'". This might sound complicated but it is not. The Ancients tracked the Sun, their Savior, across the sky daily and yearly for thousands of years and little escaped their scrutiny. You only have to read the extent and depth of their Astronomy and their records to be amazed and flabbergasted at what they knew and the knowledge they possessed. They knew that if their Sun, their Savior did not rise from his grave of darkness in the dead of Winter then all would be lost for mankind. To understand this you need to understand the schematic that follows.

At the dead of Winter the Sun was noticed to set progressively southward in the horizon and the days progressively possessed less light and warmth. It appeared to the Ancients that the Sun was dying. Ancient mankind reasoned that light was dying; the Sun was dying just as he had seen others of his species die. It was the most scary time for the Ancients. As what we now call mid-December came closer, the days got shorter still. Then came December 21, what we call the Winter solstice, the longest night of the year -- which also meant the shortest day of the year, with Sunlight practically imperceptible after that harrowing dark night. Our prehistoric ancestors wondered how vegetation and animals would survive, how they would they survive without the Sun. Little wonder that in almost every nation and their recorded histories we find that traditions and ceremonies and customs evolved, some of them not so nice, to propitiate the dark and entice the Sun to come back strong. One element of this frenzy for light, once it was feasible, was bonfires. They kept the dark at bay and illuminated festivities aimed at winning back the Sun. All the world waited patiently for the Son's 'imminent return". They further reasoned that surely the Divine Father and Creator would never leave them at the mercy of this world of darkness. Over the centuries man, through his observations of the Sun and the pattern of its movement, was reassured that the Creator's Heavenly promise concerning his Sun was surely that..."He would come again"...to light their path, and save those lost in the darkness. He was reassured every morning and every year as the cycle of the Sun through the Heavens and the Zodiac seemed to repeat.

Logically, the Ancients reasoned that even if man himself died, as long as the Sun continued to dawn and set each day, life on Earth will continue forever. Therefore, it was said in the Ancient texts that "everlasting life was 'the gift' that the Father gives through his Sun.

Answer for yourself: We have mentioned that the Sun was personified as the "Son". Understanding that these Ancient and eternal and Divine concepts were captured for all time in legend and myth by the Ancients then when we read for example:

John 3:16 16 For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (KJV)

then is it too far of a stretch to see that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten SUN that we may have life everlasting"..on the Earth?

Early mankind not only feared the dark but the manifestations of evil and harm that lurked at every turn in the fearful dark of night. He further reasoned that all evil or harmful deeds were naturally, the..."works of darkness." Let us not forget that anthropomorphism or personification is the attribution of human characteristics to inanimate objects, animals, forces of nature, and others. Anthropomorphism in the form of personification consists of creating imaginary persons who are the embodiment of an abstraction such as Darkness, Death, Lust, or War. In our study we are concerned with the personification of Light and Darkness as man's greatest Savior and greatest Adversary. Early man simply personified these forces because it was extremely difficult for them to picture or discuss God or these forces that came from the Creator of all without an anthropomorphic framework. Thus we see the darkness personified as the "Devil":

- With the return of the Sun each morning, man felt more secure in his world and therefore, was at peace. Therefore, God's 'Sun' was with his warm rays of life and hope...The Great "Prince of Peace".
- Conversely the dark evil of night was ruled by none other than..."Prince of Darkness"

I want to show you something having understood now the personification of forces:

- The Dark was Evil
- Primitive mankind reasoned it as "Dark"-"Evil"
- "D"-"Evil"
- the "Devil"..get it?

You have just seen the origin of one of the biggest theologies known to man...the Devil which is nothing but darkness personified and we don't know it and we raise millions of dollars to fight an imaginary war in our Churches to fight this Devil and pray against him and fast and bind him over and over again as if he and God are in some mortal combat...which they are not. It seems we have learned nothing and find ourselves at the very same stages of development of primitive man thousands and thousands of years ago. At least the Egyptians understood this as allegory and Christians think it is real today.

Answer for yourself: Did you know that we get our English words 'Good' and 'God' from the German word 'Goth' as in 'Gothic'? Now we see God is Good, and Devil is Evil.

Hopefully you can now see that it is only a short step to see "The Light of God's Sun" equated with the light of truth - and evil equated with darkness. From then on, it was simple to understand... "Light was good and dark was bad".

Answer for yourself: Could this be behind all racism where people hate the darker skinned of mankind? You bet it is!

That being true, then that Great Orb of Day, God's Sun, can rightly say of itself,

John 9:5 5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. (KJV)

We now have before us two cosmic brothers - one very good, and one very evil.

Answer for yourself: Is the first story of this cosmic brotherhood and struggle found in the story of Osiris and Set and their conflict and struggle that ends with Osiris' death and resurrection (similar to the Sun being raised from the dead once a year)? You bet it is. This conflict between light and darkness is replayed in almost every religion of the world between its saviors and its adversaries. Christianity is not immune to this pattern as well.

One of these forces brings the "truth to light" with the "light of truth". The other is the opposite, or in opposition to the light - "The Opposer"... "The Adversary"..."The Devil"..."The God of this world"..."The Prince of this World of Darkness".

KNOWING THIS...THEN LETS EXAMINE THE "JESUS STORY"

It has been said that: "The Christian religion is a parody on the worship of the Sun, in which they put a man whom they call Christ, in the place of the Sun, and pay him the same adoration which was originally paid to the Sun."- Thomas Paine

Answer for yourself: Could this be true? How could this be true? How could the Ancients come to worship the Sun? Well you saw that they didn't but rather the Sun represented to them the Creator. But has the "Sun" or the personification of the Sun as the "Son" become part of the Christian sage and gospel and we not know it?

The above quote is a most serious charge against Christianity and if such a charge can be shown to have validity then one should be honest enough before God to begin a serious investigation in his religious beliefs in order to separate truth from fiction.

Well it is for certain most who read our articles don't wish to be in "sin". A small article of this size cannot possibly do justice to such a complex and verbose subject as we have at hand but I hope to "break the egg" so to speak to help our readers begin to scrutinize the subject matter at hand in more detail by their personal study. Let's closely examine the original, conceptual foundations of the Christian faith, and then decide what to do with the serious "charge" made in the above quote by Thomas Payne; that the Christian faith today is nothing but an evolution of "Sun" worship transfigured into "Son" worship. Again I wish to reiterate the seriousness of such a charge if it can be proven.

IN THE BEGINNING…

But in order to do that, we must go back not 2000 years to the birth of Christ, but 15 to 20,000 years to the birth of modern man. For when one seeks to establish foundations, one must begin at the beginning. We must begin with the Aryan peoples of the world.

Many thousands of years ago, in what we refer to as the "primordial world" of the ancients, human life was a far different experience from that which we enjoy today. While it is true that we have less documentation on that prehistoric world than we have on our own age, enough is known from the ancient writings, many in stone, to paint a rather clear picture of our remote ancestry. If we have learned anything at all, it is this: "That the more we change, the more we stay the same." And nowhere is this more clearly demonstrated than in the history of man's quest for "God", and the ancient religion we still keep holy.

According to the best understanding we have gleaned from the available records, life for our ancient forefathers was a mixture of wonder and fear. Each day, just finding food for one's family without becoming a meal oneself was a life-and-death struggle. It was from these meager, distressful conditions of the human race that our long history of the search for God and meaning of life has come.

Any evolution, at its most accelerated rate, is always agonizingly slow. But from the beginning, man's profound questions demanded answers. When no clear answers were forthcoming from the universe, man turned inward and developed his own. The study of this subject is termed "Astro-Theology" or the "worship of the heavens".

It did not take ancient man very long to decide that in this world the single greatest enemy to be feared was the darkness of night. Simply stated, man's first enemy was darkness.

With this one fact alone, one can readily understand why the greatest and most trustworthy friend the human race would ever have was heaven's greatest gift to the world . . . the Glorious Rising Orb of Day...the Sun. With this simple truth understood, we can now begin to unravel ascent of man and the origin of the "crucifixion of the Sun"; or should I say the "crucifixion of the Son". Notice the word-play and stay tuned!

Even before people understood the details of how the Sun worked, they were aware of its supreme importance in their lives. It is no accident that so many ancient religions had as their major god a personification of the Sun. To ancient peoples, it was extremely important to be able to track the motions of the Sun in the sky and predict the coming of the seasons. After all, planting seeds at the wrong time could lead to complete disaster.

WHAT LED TO THE PERSONIFICATION OF THE SUN AND THE ORIGINS OF RELIGIONS...THEOLOGY OUT OF ASTRONOMY

To understand the Sun's motions and their effects, it is easier to start by imagining the Earth entirely alone. Without the Sun, it would be night everywhere on the Earth at the same time. The stars would silently wheel by, east to west, as the Earth turned. Looking to the north, we would see the stars moving in slow circles around the circumpolar Pole Star, Polaris. Any particular star would always rise in the same location and set directly opposite. That is, if a star rose in the east at a point 30 degrees from due south, it would set in the west at a point 30 degrees from due south. And that would be it. Nothing else would happen. The stars would follow the same paths as seen from the Earth, over and over without change. If this were the case then today we would have no "theology" because as you will see the Ancients would interpret the movement of the Sun and stars in the Heavens and give the world not only Divine Truths written by the Creator in the blackboard of sky but over time theologies would develop that would translate these Divine Truths to mankind but also aberrations of them which nullified them as well. To say I have been disillusioned by what I have seen in about 20 years of scholarly study into the origins of my birth faith, Christianity, is an understatement but it is only finally coming to study Egypt thoroughly where I uncovered these Divine Truths in their simplest forms as these Ancient masters saw in the Heavens that I was able to rest and sort this whole "theological mess" out to my satisfaction. The final puzzle pieces were long in coming but they came finally and when one undertakes a study of our websites then he sees the progression from Ancient Divine Truths once understood "allegorically" in their purest form to the later "literalization" of them by Rome in which these earlier Divine Truths were so altered to not only lose their truest meanings but alternate erroneous meanings substituted for them. Then sadly the truth was lost for mankind and in is place a false revelation taught as the truths of God. Such comparative study will reveal this to the discerning and dedicated student of comparative religion, mythology, astronomy, astrology, Biblical texts and their alterations, Biblical languages, both Aramaic, Hebrew, and Greek coupled with a through study of the origin, manipulation, and corruption of the New Testament throughout its evolution over the earliest centuries of the antisemitic Gentile Church.

But back to the issue at hand, the way in which the stars appear to move in the sky, or "apparent motion," is a consequence of the rotation of the Earth. The stars seem to move, but of course it is the Earth that is moving.

But we are not immersed in total and perpetual darkness for the Sun does exist. Now imagine the Earth spinning on its axis, but with the Sun very far off to one side. Half of the Earth will be illuminated at any given time. This, of course, is day. Some of the stars will be hidden by the Sun and we will be unable to see them. As the Earth rotates, the Sun will appear to rise and set along with the unseen stars that it is in front of it.

Again if the Earth were stationary, this would be the whole story and we would have more than likely a "limited" theology but that is not the case. If the earth was stationary the same stars would be blocked all the time, and the Sun would simply rise and set in exactly the same way each day. But we know if we have ever watched the horizon that the Sun does not rise and set in exactly the same place on the horizon every day. We can see that very clearly when looking at the tri-part depiction of the Sun as it sets accordingly with the Summer solstice, Spring and Autumn equinoxes, and the Winter solstice pictured above.

The Earth moves around the Sun. As the Earth moves through the year, the Sun blocks different stars. You may have experienced this phenomenon at the movies when you move your head, and the head of a tall guy in front of you blocks a different part of the movie screen. This is why we see different constellations at different times of the year. Each day the Sun appears to move just a little bit relative to the stars. In a year, it goes completely around and comes back to the starting point. The path it takes is called the Ecliptic. If the Sun's path is observed from the Earth's reference frame, it appears to move around the Earth in a path which is tilted with respect to the spin axis at 23.5°. This path is called the ecliptic. It tells us that the Earth's spin axis is tilted with respect to the plane of the Earth's solar orbit by 23.5°. The significance of the ecliptic is evident if we examine the Earth's orbit around the Sun. That orbit lies in a plane, flat like a tabletop, called the plane of the ecliptic (or sometimes just "the ecliptic"). In one year, as the Earth completes a full circuit around the Sun (drawing above), the Earth-Sun line and its continuation past Earth sweep the entire plane. Planets seen in the sky are always near the ecliptic, which means that their orbits are never too far from the plane of the ecliptic. They all circle the Sun in sort of a group limited to a certain path and angle around the Sun as drawn out in the Heavens. This is astonishing when you think about this. In other words, the solar system is rather flat, with all its major parts moving in nearly the same plane. Even though the planets move on the celestial sphere, they do not wander all over it but are confined to a narrow strip, dividing it in half. Now we come to the stars.

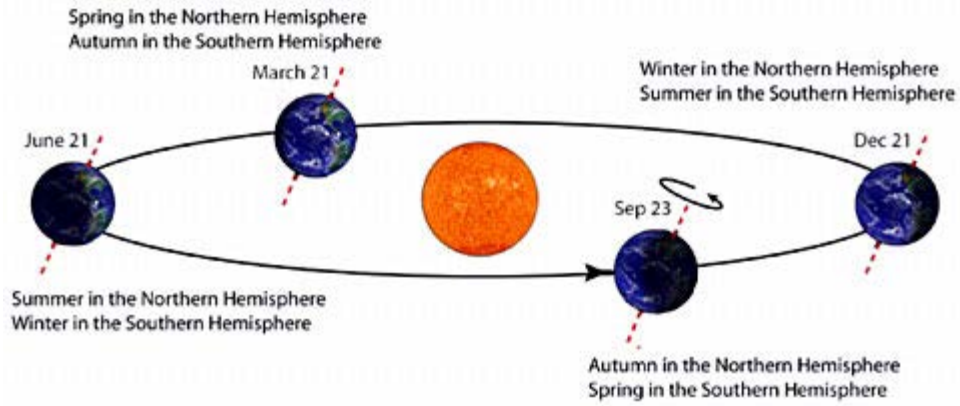
Stars along that same strip are traditionally divided into the 12 constellations of the zodiac. The name, related to "zoo," comes because most of these constellations are named for animals--Leo the lion, Aries the ram, Scorpio the scorpion, Cancer the crab, Pisces the fish, Capricorn the goat and Taurus the bull. At any time, the Sun is also somewhere on the celestial sphere, and as the Earth turns, it rises and sets the same way as stars do. Like the planets, the Sun, too, moves around the zodiac, making one complete circuit each year. Every month it covers a different constellation of the zodiac, which is the real reason why those constellations are 12 in number. Of course, during that month, this particular constellation is not seen, because the sky near the Sun is too bright for its stars to be seen (except, very briefly, during a total eclipse of the Sun). One can however figure out where the Sun is on the zodiac (as ancient astronomers have done) by noting which is the last constellation of the zodiac to rise ahead of the Sun, or the first to set after it. Obviously, the Sun is somewhere in between. In this manner each month-long period of the year was given its "sign of the zodiac."



Imagine standing in the center of a racetrack. As the cars go around they will appear to trace out a circle. The cars appear to go horizontally. They do not appear to be moving up in the direction of your head or down in the direction of your feet. If you tilt yourself a bit, the cars will appear to be sometimes up and sometimes down. This is exactly what happens with the Earth. The earth is tilted by 23.5 degrees compared to how it travels around the Sun. So, sometimes the Sun appears to be a bit north and sometimes a bit south. Thus, as the year progresses, the Sun appears to set in slightly different locations relative to the horizon. The winter and summer solstices mark the most southern and northern Sunrises respectively, while at the equinoxes the Sun rises and sets exactly in the east and west (see the picture at the top of the article once again).

As the Sun moves along the Ecliptic it appears higher and lower in the skies.

Answer for yourself: Why is this of major importance for us and all later "theologies", myths, and legends created by Ancient mankind?

This has had and still does have a tremendous and huge effect on life on the earth. In the winter, when the Sun is low in the sky, less solar energy falls on a given unit of area on the surface of the earth, and the weather is much colder and the days much darker. Some plants and animals become dormant. Food is not at plentiful and the encroaching darkness was the greatest threat to Ancient mankind as explained above. In the summer, when the Sun is high in the sky, a lot more solar energy falls on a unit of area on the earth, and the weather is much warmer and harvests are plentiful and Ancient mankind experienced his salvation because of the Sun pouring out is life for him in the form of light and heat and photosynthesis that fed him and his family (as well as the animals which was his food). Plants and animals do not have to compete as strongly for resources, and it is the best time to reproduce. In pre-historic times, summer was a joyous time of the year for those primitive people who lived in the northern latitudes. The snow had disappeared; the ground had thawed out; warm temperatures had returned; flowers were blooming; leaves had returned to the deciduous trees. Some herbs could be harvested, for medicinal and other uses. Food was easier to find. The crops had already been planted and would be harvested in the months to come. Although many months of warm/hot weather remained before the fall, they noticed that the days were beginning to shorten, so that the return of the cold season was inevitable.

The image to the left shows that the seasons are due to the tilt of the Earth, not due to a variation in distance to the Sun. In each of these seasons the Sun played a major role and this was understood by the Ancients during his evolution as a species on this planet. This balance between "light and darkness" was an eternal struggle that spelled either "life" or "death" for primitive mankind. The Sun was the driving force and energy behind all life on the earth and it was understood as such by primitive mankind. As the Sun waned man feared the oncoming darkness and the many threats it brought him and his family as their lives were actually threatened by the loss of the Sun and the daylight and warmth it provided. This onslaught of darkness following the Summer solstice as the Sun slid southwestward in the sky with its diminishing light and warmth was feared by primitive mankind. Over time this "darkness," mankind's greatest enemy, was captured in legend and myth that paralleled the path of the Sun in the sky. This whole event of the demise of the Sun in the winter with the Sun moving to its eventual shortest daylight and warmth of the year at the Winter solstice was immortalized by primitive mankind and the Ancients in myth and allegory which depicted this tension and battle between the forces of light and darkness. By now you understand that Ancient man saw the darkness as his mortal enemy. In so doing he understood that the darkness was evil. Our theology beings with his understanding of the connection between "evil" and "darkness".

The infatuation with this struggle with "Darkness" will go so far as to motivate men to change the Hebrew Scriptures as we find in the forgery of the Hebrew Scriptures where the word "Lucifer" (the light bringer) is later added when the original Hebrew texts never mention this word.

Of course as you now see the background for all of this was Astronomy and not "theology". It won't be long before "theology" will be birthed from Astronomy. And it does not end here! The battle of the Sun versus the darkness has been immortalized in every dualism known to man presently. Behind every religion in some form or another is this basic paradigm of the struggle of "light" versus "darkness". I want you to know that as long as these allegories and metaphors remained just that, allegories and metaphors of Divine truths witnessed in a "literal" sense by primitive mankind and the Ancients then we don't have a problem as I see it since all knew at one time that this was but allegory of forces of Nature.

THE SEPARATION OF MANKIND.....2 GROUPS EMERGE

But over time and with the development of various Priesthoods, there developed a diversification of this knowledge into two camps. Realizing that all mankind is not on the same evolutional level and with different capabilities of understanding there developed two different levels of understanding of this eternal struggle of "Darkness" against the "Light". The most highly evolved are far above the least evolved, both in intelligence and character; the capacity to understand and to act varies at every stage. The Priesthoods reasoned that it was useless to give to all the same religious teachings. Thus developed an "Inner Mystery"and "Outer Mystery" where the Sun was personified in all nations who were seeking after God who was pictured by them as the Sun (the savior of mankind). Those initiated into the "Inner Mysteries" came to know the truth of the personification of the Sun in the legends and myths that they had heard since childhood while those in the "Outer Mysteries" were content with the "literalized" stories of their culture and religion's heroes. It from these "Outer Mysteries" we find today the host of stories of men like Osiris, Attis, Dionysus, Mithra, etc., all solar personifications believed by those in the "Outer Mysteries" to have been real people in antiquity. But those in the "Inner Mysteries" knew better; they knew the truth behind the stories inherited about assumed people like Osiris and Jesus.

The existence of the Sun at the center of almost all world religions is verified by research into comparative religion and the findings indisputably proves that the religions of the world are markedly similar in their main teachings and the symbolism by which they express their leading beliefs. This similarity, amounting in many cases to indistinguishable identity, proves accordingly a common origin for all world religions. This of course is the Sun and its battle against darkness.

Actually, the connection between astronomy and mythology has not gone unnoticed by apologists. I have a few Christian sources that go to great lengths to "disprove" the connection between astrology and Christianity by steering their readers away from the traditional Sun cycle. To admit such a link would be fatal to the vainness of their faith. Now, we are not longer dependent upon the Ancients and their legacy which has come to light with the aid of archeology in these last 200 years for seeing the "Jesus Story" as an allegory of the Sun and its path through the sky but today, thanks to computer technology, we can simulate these biblical events for ourselves and see with positive proof that the Gospel narratives were derived from the stars and movements of the constellations in the sky. We can confirm that the Bible contains nothing more than a series of pagan myths with a different spin.

One quick example if we might. We all most likely know that Jesus' birthday is celebrated on December 25th but few know the actual reason behind it. If you were to study the Winter solstice you will find that it is at this time of the year that "Darkness" has triumphed over the light of the Sun in its annual path across the sky and the Heavens. Primitive man understood he had entered into the darkest and coldest days of the year which also provided the least light and he and his life and the lives of his family were threatened at every corner. His fear of his death was paramount in his mind and life. Coupled with that was his observation that the Sun had been receding the in the sky and he feared the Sun was dying or had died on those three days annually where it remained motionless in the Southwestern horizon as it set in the very same place 3 days in a row. Relieved on the next day, our December 25th, the Sun began to move again but this time backwards as it begins its climb in the sky and Heavens once again and in so doing bringing with it the promise of longer light, warmer temperatures, photosynthesis, and a bountiful harvest to come that ensure man's life and security and existence.

Understanding this scenario then understand the favorite rationale for why Jesus' birthday is celebrated on December 25th. It has been said that this date of December 25th the early Christian fathers chose as a way of attracting pagan followers. That's not the whole of it however although partly true. It was chosen because of the path of the Sun in relation to the seasons and the circuit of the Sun through the Zodiac. Upon study you can see for yourself that the entire nativity legend can be seen played out in the sky. Christian mythology is written as if the events that took place in the sky and the Heavens actually took place on earth (but they didn't). Unless one knows to even look for this astronomical and astrological evidence behind what we read in the New Testament then he will read the New Testament his whole life never aware that behind the stories he reads are Ancients stories told which originated in the stars and which were depicted in the lives of make-believe heroes. Sadly we don't know to look for the double meaning in the Bible's language and without it the astronomical connection can't be seen. But once you become aware of this hidden revelation behind the depiction of Jesus in the "Jesus Story" then you see that the Gospels are laid out according to the zodiacal motifs with Jesus, the personified Sun hero, passing through the four seasons as well as the whole of the 12 houses of the Zodiac:

Answer for yourself: Is this why the "Jesus Story" in the New Testament is called by both Ancient and modern scholars a "solar myth"? Yes it is.

The seasons of the year are caused by the 23.5º tilt of the earth's axis. Because the earth is rotating like a top or gyroscope, it points in a fixed direction continuously -- towards a point in space near the North Star. But the earth is also revolving around the Sun. During half of the year, the southern hemisphere is more exposed to the Sun than is the northern hemisphere. During the rest of the year, the reverse is true. At noontime in the Northern Hemisphere the Sun appears high in the sky during summertime and low in the sky during winter. The time of the year when the Sun reaches its maximum elevation occurs on the day with the greatest number of daylight hours. This is called the summer solstice, and is typically Jun. 21 -- the first day of summer. The lowest elevation occurs about Dec. 21 and is the winter solstice -- the first day of winter, when the night time hours are maximum. Almost exactly half-way between the winter and summer solstice is the time of the vernal or spring equinox. It is one of two times during the year when the daytime and nighttime are almost exactly 12 hours long, and very close to being equal to each other.

This personified Sungod, or Sungodman, is born every year on December 25, the Winter solstice, the first day when daylight hours start to increase. In the winter months, the darkness of evil is still in force. As the daylight hours start to increase, he is said to be increasing in strength.

- His mission starts on the first day of spring on the Spring equinox when daylight hours equal nighttime hours. Spring is the time of righteousness. Christianity and other religious associate three themes with the vernal equinox:
 - Conception and pregnancy leading to birth on the winter solstice.
 - Victory of a god of light (or life, rebirth, resurrection) over the powers of darkness (death). Some religious historians believe that the god-man's death and resurrection legends were first associated with Pagan deities many centuries before the birth of Jesus. They were simply grafted onto stories of Jesus' life in order to make Christian theology more acceptable to Pagans in the Roman Empire.
 - Ancient Christians and Church Fathers, when confronted with their plagiarism of solar gods, had an alternate explanation; they claimed that Satan had created counterfeit Pagan deities with many of the same life experiences as Jesus had. Satan and his demons had done this, in advance of the coming of Christ, in order to confuse humanity.
 - The descent of the goddess or god into the underworld for a period of three days. This is such a popular theme among religions that mythologists refer to it as "the harrowing of Hell."
- He, the personified Sun, is at full strength at the Summer solstice when the Sun is at its highest position in the sky. As the Sun passes over the solstice it descends through the summer months, the dark forces of evil are said to be sapping his strength. The opposition and conflict between the Darkness and the Light only intensify.
- When the Sun passes through the Autumnal equinox, the evil forces of darkness are said to be ruling and the Sun continues it decline in the sky onward to its soon coming death at the Winter solstice.
- On the three darkest days of the year, the Winter solstice, the Sun is dead from December 21 to 24. His resurrection restarts on December 25, when the Sun starts to ascend again. This Jesus hath God raised [ascended] up, whereof we all are witnesses. (Acts 2:32)

Well that sounds simple but I assure you it is not as simple as it looks. As we gain steam in our study you will be convinced that the "Jesus Story" in the New Testament is the personification of the Sun and its path through the Zodiac as well as the relationship of other constellations and the Sun as they both move in the sky. Understand that Christianity is not immune to this syncretism. After all is said and done we have these troublesome questions:

- What are we do do with Jesus?
- Was he a real person? Can we interpret him "literally" or should he be understood only "allegorically"?
- Was he an expression of an allegory of the path of the Sun and constellations which were later "literalized as a historical person" and given a historical timeline and placed on the pages of the New Testament as a real person?
- If it can be proven that the depiction of Jesus as found in the New Testament is little more than the personification of the Sun in its path in the Heavens and the Zodiac as understood originally as only allegory by the Ancients and primitive mankind but later "literalized" as a historical person by Rome in their creation of the New Testament then how are we to then understand "the Christ"?
- Has the depiction of Jesus as a historical person in the New Testament and his later identification as God by Constantine and the Council of Nicea (accepted by Christianity) rendered us as idolators? What can we do about this if we come to a place in our studies that we are convinced that the "Jesus Story" is Astronomical allegory later "literalized"?

All of these questions can be answered in the light of modern scholarship but not without a price. This means you must learn and possess the necessary knowledge of this dualism of light versus darkness as understood by the Ancients and which is bequeathed to us today in their oral traditions and writings in order to see how these Ancient undestandings of the workings of the Cosmos were understood by primitive mankind and how they created stories and personified the Sun and forces in the Cosmos in order to explain this working of God within His Universe. The majority of mankind got this knowledge conveyed to them in simple stories but others were privy to the actual Divine revelation behind the story. These of course were initiates into the Inner Mysteries. Coupled with this is need to understand how these primitive understandings of the Cosmos by Egypt and other nations were understood originally only as allegory and how they were over time "literalized" and how these earlier Divine Truths were lost when they were later "literalized". In so doing then we can clearly see how people, having lost the allegorical understanding of these star-stories, strayed from proper worship and began to worship the "creation instead of the Creator". This has always been man's problem; failing to distinguish the object of his worship. And then we find much, much later how these prior personifications of the Cosmos and forces in Nature were continually "literalized" and incorporated onto the pages of our New Testaments as the "Jesus Story". Only in so doing can we then come to the final answers concerning the complicated truths behind the "Jesus Story" as contained in the New Testament.

"All Indo-Germanic nations have worshipped crucified Saviors and overwhelming proof was obtained that the sun-myths of the ancient Aryans were the origin of the religion in all the countries which were peopled by the Aryans"...Charles Morris. PERSECUTION OF JEWS BY CHRISTIANS...A SHORT SUMMARY

- 306: The church Synod of Elvira banned marriages, sexual intercourse and community contacts between Christians and Jews. 3,4 315: Constantine published the Edict of Milan which extended religious tolerance to Christians. Jews lost many rights with this edict. They were no longer permitted to live in Jerusalem, or to proselytize.
- 325: The Council of Nicea decided to separate the celebration of Easter from the Jewish Passover. They stated: "For it is unbecoming beyond measure that on this holiest of festivals we should follow the customs of the Jews. Henceforth let us have nothing in common with this odious people...We ought not, therefore, to have anything in common with the Jews...our worship follows a...more convenient course...we desire dearest brethren, to separate ourselves from the detestable company of the Jews...How, then, could we follow these Jews, who are almost certainly blinded."
- 337: Christian Emperor Constantius created a law which made the marriage of a Jewish man to a Christian punishable by death. 339: Converting to Judaism became a criminal offense.
- 343-381: The Laodicean Synod approved Cannon XXXVIII: "It is not lawful [for Christians] to receive unleavened bread from the Jews, nor to be partakers of their impiety." 5
- 367 - 376: St. Hilary of Poitiers referred to Jews as a perverse people who God has cursed forever. St. Ephroem refers to synagogues as brothels. 379-395: Emperor Theodosius the Great permitted the destruction of synagogues if it served a religious purpose. Christianity became the state religion of the Roman Empire at this time.
- 380: The bishop of Milan was responsible for the burning of a synagogue; he referred to it as "an act pleasing to God."
- 415: The Bishop of Alexandria, St. Cyril, expelled the Jews from that Egyptian city.
- 415: St. Augustine wrote "The true image of the Hebrew is Judas Iscariot, who sells the Lord for silver. The Jew can never understand the Scriptures and forever will bear the guilt for the death of Jesus."
- 418: St. Jerome, who created the Vulgate translation of the Bible wrote of a synagogue: "If you call it a brothel, a den of vice, the Devil's refuge, Satan's fortress, a place to deprave the soul, an abyss of every conceivable disaster or whatever you will, you are still saying less than it deserves."
- 489 - 519: Christian mobs destroyed the synagogues in Antioch, Daphne (near Antioch) and Ravenna.
- 528: Emperor Justinian (527-564) passed the Justinian Code. It prohibited Jews from building synagogues, reading the Bible in Hebrew, assemble in public, celebrate Passover before Easter, and testify against Christians in court (Fritz B. Voll, "A Short Review of a Troubled History"). No longer on the Internet.
- 535: The "Synod of Claremont decreed that Jews could not hold public office or have authority over Christians" (Fritz B. Voll, "A Short Review of a Troubled History").
- 538: The 3rd and 4th Councils of Orleans prohibited Jews from appearing in public during the Easter season. Canon XXX decreed that "From the Thursday before Easter for four days, Jews may not appear in the company of Christians" (Max Solbrekken, "The Jews & Jesus: Mistreatment of Jews: Christian shame," at: http://www.mswm.org/jews.htm). Marriages between Christians and Jews were prohibited. Christians were prohibited from converting to Judaism ("Classical and Christian Anti-Semitism").
- 561: The bishop of Uzes expelled Jews from his diocese in France.

- 612: Jews were not allowed to own land, to be farmers or enter certain trades.
- 613: Very serious persecution began in Spain. Jews were given the options of either leaving Spain or converting to Christianity. Jewish children over 6 years of age were taken from their parents and given a Christian education
- 692: Cannnon II of the Quinisext Council stated: "Let no one in the priestly order nor any layman eat the unleavened bread of the Jews, nor have any familiar intercourse with them, nor summon them in illness, nor receive medicines from them, nor bathe with them; but if anyone shall take in hand to do so, if he is a cleric, let him be deposed, but if a layman, let him be cut off" (Max Solbrekken, "The Jews & Jesus: Mistreatment of Jews: Christian shame," at: http://www.mswm.org/jews.htm).
- 694: The 17th Church Council of Toledo, Spain defined Jews as the serfs of the prince. This was based, in part, on the beliefs by Chrysostom, Origen, Jerome, and other Church Fathers that God punished the Jews with perpetual slavery because of their responsibility for the execution of Jesus (Max Solbrekken, "The Jews & Jesus: Mistreatment of Jews: Christian shame," at: http://www.mswm.org/jews.htm).
- 722: Leo III outlawed Judaism. Jews were baptized against their will.
- 855: Jews were exiled from Italy
- 1050: The Synod of Narbonne prohibited Christians from living in the homes of Jews.
- 1078: "Pope Gregory VII decreed that Jews could not hold office or be superiors to Christians" (Fritz B. Voll, "A Short Review of a Troubled History").
- 1078: The Synod of Gerona forced Jews to pay church taxes
- 1096: The First Crusade was launched in this year. Although the prime goal of the crusades was to liberate Jerusalem from the Muslims, Jews were a second target. As the soldiers passed through Europe on the way to the Holy Land, large numbers of Jews were challenged: "Christ-killers, embrace the Cross or die!" 12,000 Jews in the Rhine Valley alone were killed in the first Crusade. This behavior continued for 8 additional crusades until the 9th in 1272.
- 1099: The Crusaders forced all of the Jews of Jerusalem into a central synagogue and set it on fire. Those who tried to escape were forced back into the burning building.
- 1121: Jews were exiled from Flanders (now part of present-day Belgium) 1130: Some Jews in London allegedly killed a sick man. The Jewish people in the city were required to pay 1 million marks as compensation.
- 1146: The Second Crusade began. A French Monk, Rudolf, called for the destruction of the Jews.
- 1179: Canon 24 of the Third Lateran Council stated: "Jews should be slaves to Christians and at the same time treated kindly due of humanitarian considerations." Canon 26 stated that "the testimony of Christians against Jews is to be preferred in all causes where they use their own witnesses against Christians" (Bob Michael, "Jews as Serfs,").
- 1180: The French King of France, Philip Augustus, arbitrarily seized all Jewish property and expelled the Jews from the country. There was no legal justification for this action. They were allowed to sell all movable possessions, but their land and houses were stolen by the king.
- 1189: Jews were persecuted in England. The Crown claimed all Jewish possessions. Most of their houses were burned.

THE CHANING OF THE POLE STAR

Because of the Precession of the Earth, over the period of a Great Year the north Pole Star changes. This is not because the stars are changing, but because our Viewpoint of the stars changes very slowly because of Precession. Precession can be thought of as the slow movement of the Earth's axis with respect to the stars. Hence, as the axis is moving, with time it points to different places in the heavens. The dotted circle on the figure below shows all the places that the axis will point to over a complete Great Year. Back in 2700 BC the axis pointed to the star Thuban, the Snake; now it points to Polaris

The Changing Pole Star How to understand this star map: Have a look bottom left, that's the date in years. It starts in 3000 BC, [the BC years have a minus sign in front] when astrology was just beginning amongst the Mesopotamian culture, and goes through to 8000 AD. As the years change the figure is showing you a picture of the night sky at the time. It stops momentarily at 2000 AD to show you the sky as it looks now. Next, have a look at the spot marked Zenith in the center of the star map. That spot marks the point in the night sky where - over the centuries - the North Celestial Pole lies. You can see that as the centuries pass, different stars are the star at the Zenith. [A dotted circular line has been drawn on the figure so you can see which stars will become the Pole Star as the centuries pass.] Currently, the star Polaris, ? Ursae Minoris is the Pole Star. Back in 2700 BC the star Thuban, ? Draconis, in the constellation of the Dragon, was be the Pole Star. This is one of the faintest stars in the sky to have a name, doubtless because it was of such importance to our astrological ancestors.

THE ORDER TO BE PUT TO DEATH ...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

One would expect that an extraordinary circumstance as the birth of a God into the world must be marked with unusual incidents and fanfare. This was first exhibited by angels, shepherds, prophets, magi or "wise men," flocking around their cradles.

Besides that, one would expect the unusual display of divine power and providential care on the part of the great Father God, who was still left in heaven to save the young saviors through their infancy. But such power is threatening to the powers that be. Something had to be done to ensure the status quo. So the powers at be, not being resourceful, decide to kill the infant Savior/god-man. There is nothing new under the sun. This same story is repeated in various renditons from pagan nation to nation.

It is certainly a remarkable circumstance that so many of the infant Saviors should have been threatened with the most imminent danger of destruction, and yet in every case miraculously preserved, and thus were the Saviors saved. All of the myths of a Sun (Son) god describe some kind of threat to the life of the child god at birth. Also mentioned, is the governon or king, that sees the child as a thread to his sovereignty.

Answer for yourself: Is the same story told about Jesus only conincidence?

A jealousy seems to have existed in several instances in the mind of the tyrant king or ruler of the country that the young Saviors and prospective spiritual rulers (who were mostly of royal descent) would ultimately acquire such favor with the people, by such a display of superior power and greatness of mind, as to endanger his retaining peaceable possession of the secular throne; to express it in brief, he feared the young God would prove a rival king, and hence took measures to destroy him.

Therefore, in common with almost all of the Sun-gods, they are fated to bring ruin upon their parents or the "reigning monarch." Perseus, Oidipous, Romulus and Cyrus are doomed to bring ruin on their parents. They are exposed in their infancy on the hillside, and rescued by a shepherd. "All the solar heroes begin life in this way." Whether, like Apollo, born of the dark night (Leto), or like Oidipous, of the violet dawn (Iokaste), they are alike destined to bring destruction on their parents, as the Night and the Dawn are both destroyed by the Sun (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

ASTROLOGICAL BACKGROUND

These "destruction myths" find their origin, like most Christian doctrine, in the stars. The new Son (Son) is born in the winter as we have seen. The astrological sign of Capricorn represents the lord of Hades. This is the Cardinal sign of Winter (opposition, Satan, Saturn). Winter takes control (at the Winter Solstice on Dec. 22), and within three days of mounting his throne, he is challenged by the Sun (Son) of the Father (Sun) that he, or some other ruffians captured (at the autumnal equinox) and has finally slain at the winter solstice. So now the king (Winter, Darkness) is worried and knows that he must murder the Sun (Son) before he gains the strength of his Father (Sun). The guardians of the Sun (Son) know that he can not withstand the power of the Winter

(Satan, Herod), so they shield him (Son) and hide him till his time of glory approaches (he reaches maturity) (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 34).

The Sun(Son) will be mature enough to withstand the powers of Satan after he reaches the age of thirty. This Thirty does not mean years, it means degrees of arc. The Sun is born right after the King of Darkness takes his throne, in the sign of Capricorn. This king (Herod) is determined to kill all opposition to his power within the nether world. But Capricorn (Herod) will die after thirty years(degrees), because each zodiacal sign is limited to thirty degrees of arc. Therefore after the death of Herod (Capricorn), the Sun(Son) comes out from hiding to begin his mission, he is thirty years (degrees) old. But even though the chief rival (Herod/Capricorn) of the Sun(Son) has died, the Sun is yet within the domain of Satan, under the equinoxes. He, the Sun, must face more struggles and temptations as he climbs and fights his way to his glory, at the vernal equinox (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 35).

The Sun scatters the Darkness; and so the phrase went that the child was to be the destroyer of the reigning monarch, or his parent, Night. The oracles and the Magi, is was said, warned the latter of the doom which would overtake him. The newly-born babe is therefore ordered to be put to death by the sword, or exposed on the bare hilltops, as the Sun seems to rest on the Earth (Ida), at its rising. The exposure of the child in infancy represents the long rays of the morning sun resting on the hill-side (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

The Sun-hero Paris is exposed on the slopes of Ida, Oidipous on the slopes of Kithairon, and AEsculapius on that of the mountain of Myrtles. This is the rays of the newly-born sun resting on the mountain-side (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i, pp. 64, 80).

In Sanskrit Ida is the Earth, and so we have the mythical phrase, the Sun at its birth is exposed on Ida-the hill-side. The light of the sun must rest on the hill-side long before it reaches the dells beneath (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 221; Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 114).

In oriental mythology, the destroying principle is generally represented as a serpent or dragon. Now, the position of the sphere on Christmas-day, the birthday of the Sun, shows the Serpent all but touching, and certainly aiming at the woman; that is, the figure of the constellation Virgo (who suckles the child Iessus in here arms). Thus we have it illustrated in the story of the snake who was sent to kill Hercules while he was yet an infant in his cradle. The history of the Savior Hercules is so similar to that of the Savior Christ Jesus, that the learned Dr. Parkhurst was forced to say:

"The labors of Hercules seem to have been originally designed as emblematic memorials of what the REAL Son of God, the Savior of the world, was to do and suffer for our sakes, bringing a cure for all our ills, as the Orphic hymn speaks of Hercules"

The "same" story can be found in Typhon, who sought the life of the infant Savior Horus.

Again, it illustrated in the story of the virgin mother Astrea, with here babe beset by Orion, and of Latona, the mother of Apollo, when pursued by the monster (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 158, 166, 168).

And last, that of the virgin mother Mary, with her babe beset by Herod. But like Hercules, Horus, Apollo, Theseus, Romulus, Cyrus, and other solar heroes, Christ Jesus has yet a long course before him. Like them, he grows up both wise and strong, and the "old Serpent" is discomfited by him, just as the sphynx and the dragon are put to flight by others.

IT IS NO DIFFERENT WHEN WE COME TO THE "CHRIST STORY"

In the case of the Christian Savior we are told that an angel, or "the angel," warned Joseph (the assumed father) to take the young Savior and God and flee with him into Egypt, because "Herod the king sought to destroy the young child's life," and had, in order to effect this end, decreed the destruction of all the children under two years old. And Joseph heeded the divine warning, and fled as directed. An angel and a dream, then, it will be observed, were the instrumentalities used to save the young Judean Savior from massacre.

And strange as it may seem, we find the same agencies had been previously employed to effect the rescue of other Saviors likewise and similarly threatened.

CHRISHNA OR CHRIST...?

In the case of Chrishna of India, in particular, the similitude is very striking in nearly every feature of the whole story.

In the first place there is the angel warning. In the Christian story we are not specifically informed how the tyrant Herod first became apprised of the birth of the Judean Savior. The Hindu story is fuller, and indicates that the angel was not only sufficiently thoughtful to warn the parents to flee from a danger which threatened to dispossess them of a divine child, and the world of a Savior, but was condescending enough to apprise the tyrant ruler (Cansa) of his danger likewise -- as we are told he heard an angel voice announcing that a rival ruler was born in his kingdom.

And hence, like Herod, he set about concocting measures to destroy him without a direct attack. Why either of them should have taken such a circuitous or roundabout way of killing an infant, when the life of the strongest man, and every man in their kingdoms, was at their instant disposal, "divine inspiration" does not inform us.

But so it was. And we must not seek to "become wise above what is written" in their bibles. Herod's decree required the destruction of all infants under two years of age (see Matt. 2:16) -- first ordering, however, "Go, and search diligently for the young child" (Matt. 2: 8).

Cansa's decree ran thus: "Let active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth, and let every boy in whom there may be found signs of unusual greatness be slain without remorse."

Now, let it be specially noticed that there is to this day in the cave temple at Elephants, in India, the sculptured likeness of a king represented with a drawn sword, and surrounded with slaughtered infants -- admitted by all writers to be much older than Christianity. Mr Forbes, in his Oriental Memories, vol. iii. p. 447, says, "The figures of the slaughtered infants in the cave of Elephanta represent them as being all boys, who are surrounded by groups of figures of men and women in the act, apparently, of supplicating for those children." And Mr. Higgins, in his Anacalypsis, testifies relative to the case, that Chrishna was carried away by night, and concealed in a region remote from his natal place, for fear of a tyrant whose destroyer it had been foretold he would become, who, for that reason, had ordered all the male children born at that time to be slain. Sculptures in Elephanta attest the story where the tyrant is represented as destroying the children. The date of this sculpture is of the most remote antiquity. "He who hath ears to hear, let him hear," and deduce the pregnant inference, Joseph and Mary fled with the young Judean God into Egypt; Chrishna's parents likewise fled with the young Hindoo Savior to Gokul.

STEP BY STEP

Now, let us observe for a moment the chain or category or resemblance.

1. There was an angel warning in each case relative to the impending danger.
2. The governor or ruler was hostile in each case to the mission of the young Savior.
3. A bloody decree was issued in both cases, having for its object the destruction of these infant Messiahs.
4. The hurried flight of the parents takes place in each case.
5. And it may be remarked further, that the "Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus," once believed by the Christian world to be "inspired," and which for hundreds of years passed current as divine authority, relates that Christ and his parents sojourned for a time at a place called Matarea, or Mathura, as Sir William Jones spells it, who says it was the birth place of Chrishna.

It is further related in the case of Chrishna, that as he and his parents approached the River Jumna in their flight, the waters "parted hither and thither," so that they passed over "dry shod," like Moses and the Israelites in crossing the Red Sea. And here let it be noted that the representation of this flight, which is said to have occurred at midnight, is like that of the massacre perpetuated and attested by imperishable monuments of stone bearing evidence of being now several thousand years old.

Sir William Jones says: --

The Indian incarnate God Chrishna, the Hindus believe, had a virgin mother of the royal race, who was sought to be destroyed in his infancy about nine hundred years before Christ. It appears that he passed his life in working miracles, and preaching, and was so humble as to wash his friends' feet; at length, dying, but rising from the dead, he ascended into heaven in the presence of a multitude." The Cingalese relate nearly the same things of their Budha." And several authors of Egyptian history refer to a story perpetuated in the Egyptian legends concerning the God Osiris, who was threatened with destruction by the tyrant Amulins, to save whom his parents fled and concealed him in an arm of the River Nile, as Christ was concealed in the same country, and, for aught that appears to the contrary, in the same locality. The mother of another and older Savior of Egypt fled by a timely warning to Epidamis before the birth of the divine child, and was there delivered of "our Lord and Savior," Horus. And the earthly or adopted father of the Grecian Savior, and God, Alcides, had to flee with him and his mother to Galem for protection from threatening danger.

In the ninth and tenth volumes of the Asiatic Researches, we find the story of the "only begotten" or "first begotten son of God," Salvahana, of Cape Comorin, son of a virgin mother (as were all the other Saviors referred to), and a carpenter by the name of Taishnea. Note with me the remembered to Joseph, "foster-father of Jesus," who was himself a carpenter. The story of this "Son of God" presents several features very similar to that relating to Jesus. Sir William Jones, Colonel Wilford, and the Rev. Mr. Maurice all confess to the antiquity of this story, as originating before the birth of Christ. Speaking of Zoroaster of Persia (another case), 600 B.C., an author remarks, "Tradition reports that his mother had alarming dreams of evil spirits seeking to destroy the child to whom she was about to give birth. But a good spirit came to rescue him, and consoled her by saying, 'Fear not; God Ormuzd will protect the infant, who has sent him as a prophet to the people and the world who are waiting for him.'" China, too, presents us with a case of the threatened destruction of a Savior in infancy, evidently recorded more than two thousand five hundred years ago. It is the case of the God Yu, who was concealed in a manner similar to that of Moses -- a commemoration of the story of which is perpetuated by an image or picture of the virgin mother with a babe upon her knee -- sometimes in her arms. Now, let it be noted that these virgin-born Gods, who, we are told, came "to save the world," could not save themselves, but had to be protected and saved by other Gods.

Without pursuing the subject further in detail, we may mention by way of recapitulation, that Chrishna, Alcides, Zoraster, Salvahana, Yu, to which list we may add Bacchus, Romulus, Moses and Cyrus, according to their reputed history, were threatened with death and destruction, but were providentially and miraculously preserved. The case of Augustus is related by Suetonius, that of Romulus by Livy, and that of Cyrus by Herodotus. It will be recollected that Pharaoh, like Herod, in order to reach the infant Moses, ordered the massacre of all the male infants (Herod making no distinction of sex), in order that he might, by this singular and circuitous method, reach the object of his jealousy and malignity without passing a direct sentence of death upon him.

The whole story of Herod's slaughter edict, with the familiar history of its execution, like nearly every other miraculous incident related in "The Holy Scriptures," which detail their histories, are traceable in the skies. Herod, we are told, literally means hero of the skin -- a term applied also to Hercules, a personification of the sun -- because the sun, on entering the constellation of the Zodiac in July, was supposed or assumed to invest himself with the skin of the lion, and this became "the hero of the skin," or a hero with a new skin. Now this solar Herod, passing through the astronomical twins and young infants of May, was said to destroy them, though the word destroy is in the Greek anairean, which any person, on turning to the Greek lexicon, will observe means also to take away, pass through, or withdraw from, so that Pharaoh more properly passed through the infants than destroyed them.

The text, "In Rama there was a voice heard," "Rachel weeping for her children," etc., is quoted by a writer (Strauss) as referring to the children slaughtered by Pharaoh. Let two things be noticed here: 1. Rama is the Indian and Phenican name for the zodiac. 2. Rachel had but two children to weep for -- Joseph and Benjamin -- just the number found in the fifth sign, or May sign, of the zodiac. And Venus, among the ancient Assyrians and Phenicans, was in tears when the sun, in his annual cross through the heavens, passed through or over the astronomical Twins (Gemini), doubtless fearfully apprehending their destruction.

The case of the massacre is an illustration and example of the manner in which all the miraculous stories related in the Christian Scriptures, as having been practically exemplified in the life of Jesus Christ, are traceable to older sources, frequently terminating among the stars.

TRACING THE HEBREW PHARAOHS OF EGYPT...WHO WAS THIS KING SOLOMON?

I assume that the reader of this article has previously read articles #1 and #2 in this series. If you have read article #2 dealing with the Biblical King David we saw a preponderance of evidence that teaches us that King David of the Old Testament is the historical Pharaoh Thutmose III.

Answer for yourself: If King David is to be properly identified as an adaptation of the Pharaoh Thutmose III, then should we not expect that from through his loins, one way or the other, would come one whom we know today as King Solomon? Should we expect that he should also be a Pharaoh and also be found in Egypt?

Our study will focus on the most important Pharaohs of the 18th dynasty:

- Ahmose
- Amenhotep I
- Thutmose I
- Thutmose II
- Hatshepsut
- Thutmose III (King David)
- Amenhotep II
- Thutmose IV
- Amenhotep III (King Solomon)
- Amenhotep IV (Akhenaten-Moses)
- Neferneferuaten
- Tutankhamen
- Ay
- Horemheb

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that out beside three names of these 18th Dynasty Pharaohs are the more familiar Biblical names of familiar Jewish heroes and Kings? What could we possibly mean by that? Have we lost our mind at Bet Emet Ministries? Are we insinuating that the real identities of these Biblical characters are possibly Egyptian Pharaohs? Yes that is exactly what we are saying and we have the evidence to prove such an identification as you will see if you continue to study.

You should have noticed one other thing that is quite startling considering what we have been taught by the Old Testament. It must be said at the beginning that the chronology of the Bible represents Solomon as the son of King David. However when we get to Egypt we see that the Biblical chronology is questionable due to highly detailed and accurate Egyptian records and as you study you will see this for yourself. As our study progresses and the evidence mounts that the King Solomon of the Bible is in reality Amenhotep III; the great-grandson of King David (Tuthmose III). We will also begin to notice that unlike what we have led to believe; for example, that King Solomon is the son of King David, such is not the truth. We will find that King Solomon is not the son but rather the great-grandson of Tuthmose III (King David of the Bible).

Answer for yourself: So what is the truth? Well let us do our study and examine the historical evidence and and assorted historical facts we find outside the Old Testament and then you will see quite clearly which is true and let me give you a hint...it is not the Biblical account. Now on with the study. What we will find is that by marrying Tiye, the daughter of Yuya (the Biblical Joseph) and his wife who was the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis, we see that Tiye was half Hebrew. Amenhotep III, the Biblical King Solomon, by marrying Tiye thus "re-establishes the connection of the Jews with the Egyptian line when Sarah and Abraham has left Egypt and when Sarah gave birth to Isaac, the son of Tuthmose III (the Biblical King David). Tiye's father, Yuya, the Biblical Joseph, had been commander of the chariotry under Tuthmose IV (Cyril Aldred, Cyril, Akhenaten: King of Egypt, 1987). Tiye's features and dark skin as represented in artwork from the time indicate African origins and attest to the the racial color of the Egyptians whom the Biblical Joseph marries. This begins the "black skinned" Jewish race which many historians are amiss to attest. To inherit the throne, however, Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) had to have a royal Egyptian wife. Thus he also marries his sister Sitamun, (thus explaining the Bible's reference to his marrying an Egyptian princess, whereas as King of Israel, it would have been impossible). By Amenhotep III, Tiye had at least six children. She had two sons (Tuthmose V and Amenhotep IV, the second of whom went on to become pharaoh and is better known today as the Biblical Moses. Let us not forget that Tiye, as seen in the above picture with her husband Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) was a girl of common birth from her Hebrew father Joseph (Yuya) but yet history records here as a person of very strong character. Evident from records, she was a beautiful young Black queen. A woman of great intellect, ability, and a powerful influence. She shared the crown with her husband Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) as though she had been its lineal heiress. Queen Tiye had such an important part in the affairs of Egypt, that foreign diplomats often appealed directly to her in matters affecting certain international relations. Make no mistake about it; Queen Tiye was a full-blooded African. Her son, Akhenaton (the Biblical Moses) and his wife, Nefertiti are the parents of King Tutankhamen, who is also known as "King Tut." From Akhenaton on down to the end of the 18 Dynasty we find the Hebrew Pharaohs that came from the marriage of Amenhotep III and the daughter of Joseph:

- Akhenaton (the Biblical Moses)
- Smenkhkare (the brother of Moses)
- Tutankhamen (the son of Moses)
- Ay (the Biblical Ephraim)

The Hebrew Old Testament contains a lot of information about King Solomon. Much of it is true and some is not. In the Hebrew Scriptures it is said of King Solomon:

- Solomon inherited a enormous empire conquered by his father King David that extended from the Nile in Egypt to the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia;

I Kings 4:21 21 And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If we can prove that King Solomon is a Pharaoh then what does that say about about the same promise made earlier to the Hebrew "Patriarchs"; for example the one which we find in Gen 15:18 which was made to Abraham?

Gen. 15: 18 18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Could Abraham have been a Pharaoh and we not know it? Would this explain why Josephus writes that Abraham had 318 "officers" indicating an vast army of legions when the inherited Hebrew Texts given us by Ezra says "318 servants"? Did Ezra cover this up? I again refer you to article #2 to begin to see the truth about Ezra. Now let us look at more of the "same" promises in the Hebrew Texts and to "whom" they were made.

Deut 1:6-7 6 The LORD our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount: 7 Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south, and by the sea side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did Moses get the authority to promise this land which was owned by Egypt to these "fleeing" Hebrews? Could it have been that Moses was a Pharaoh and we not know it?

Josh 1:1-4 1 Now after the death of Moses the servant of the LORD it came to pass, that the LORD spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, 2 Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. 3 Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses. 4 From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did Joshua get the authority to promise this land which was owned by Egypt to these "fleeing" Hebrews? Could it have been that Joshua also was a Pharaoh and we not know it?

2 Sam 8:1-3 1 And after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Metheg'ammah out of the hand of the Philistines. 2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. And so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts. 3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where did King David get the ownership of this Egyptian land? Could King David have been a Pharaoh? Well we saw that he was in article #2. That determination is not hard for you now once reading article #2. We will deal with these other Patriarchs in future articles. Now let us get back to Solomon.

The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon accumulated great wealth and wisdom.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and in wisdom. (1917 Tanakh)

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon administered his kingdom through a system of 12 districts (1 Kings 4:7).

7 And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, who provided victuals for the king and his household: each man had to make provision for a month in the year.

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon possessed a large harem, which included "the daughter of Pharaoh"

1 ¶ And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh king of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of the LORD, and the wall of Jerusalem round about (I Kings 3:1)

1 ¶ Now king Solomon loved many foreign women, besides the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites; (I Kings. 11:1)

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart. (I Kings 11:3)

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon honored other gods in his old age:

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his heart was not whole with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father. 5 For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the detestation of the Ammonites. (I Kings 11:4-5).

- The Hebrew Scriptures teach us that King Solomon was a master builder who created buildings of royal proportions like the Egyptians. He built "the house of the Lord, and his own house as we know. devoted his reign to great building projects;

15 ¶ And this is the account of the levy which king Solomon raised; to build the house of the LORD, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer. (1 Kings 9:15).

17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether, 18 and Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness, in the land, 19 and all the store-cities that Solomon had, and the cities for his chariots, and the cities for his horsemen, and that which Solomon desired to build for his pleasure in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion. (I Kings 9:17-19).

Answer for yourself: What were some of these building accomplishments:

- The Temple (I Kings 6)
- The Royal Palace (I Kings 7:2-12)
- The walls of Jerusalem
- The millo (an eastern fill made to enlarge Jerusalem (I Kings 11:27)
- The Royal Cities of Megiddo, Hazor, and Gezer,
- Many garrisons and fortifications
- The store cities, the cities for his horsemen and the cities for his chariots throughout his empire.

I must address the building of the Temple. Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, embarked on massive building campaigns which are partly confirmed in the list in I Kings but there is a problem. This temple was built in the 14th century B.C.E. and not in the 10th century as the Bible states. The problem we find is that the palace he is supposed to have built in Jerusalem cannot be found by archeologists, but the description tallies exactly with the Amenhotep III's palace in Thebes which was built in the 14th century.

Also of importance is the fact that Amenhotep III is responsible for what we call the "12 Tribes" of Israel. Let me explain. It was he who organized Egypt into twelve administrative districts ("12 tribes"); the organization which was taken from the pattern of the Zodiac.

Answer for yourself: In reading a book entitled Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times by Redford he asks a good question so let me paraphrase it: Since archeology and history testifies to a pattern where other great Bronze and Iron Age cultures in the ancient Near East (Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, and Hittite) left as a legacy numerous documents, art, and inscriptions on buildings or public monuments would should we not expect to have such testimony left by such a great king and master builder let alone by the descendants and admirers of King Solomon in order to honor him? Of course we would expect this to occur yet the hard facts of archeology and history hits us right between the eyes. No article of any king bearing the name of "King Solomon" has ever been found as of today (Ibid. p. 309) anywhere!

The cities of Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer, which as we have seen were built by King Solomon, have now been extensively excavated and all artifacts discovered examined and categorized. Hazor was a large Canaanite city state in Upper Galilee and has been identified as modern Tell el-Qedah only 14 kilometers north of the Sea of Galilee. It was one of the major commercial centres in the Fertile Cresent and we find references to it in both Egyptian and Mesopotamian texts going as far back as the eighteenth century B.C.E. Megiddo, which has been identified as modern Tell el-Mutesellim, was the largest of he ancient fortified city states in Canaan, overlooking the Jezreel Valley of Central Palestine, while Gezar, located in the foothills of the Judean Rang east of Jerusalem, was another important fortified city. A stratum containing large palaces, temples and strong fortifications was found in each of these cities. The name of Solomon, however, was not found.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that all three of these cities were conquered by Tuthmose III (King David) in the middle of the fifteenth century B.C.E.? This has been confirmed by archeological digging , which has produced evidence of the cities' destruction in the right strata for this period (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 212).

Answer for yourself: Now since King Solomon is King David's grandson, and we know that King David is really Thutmose III, then should we not expect to find compelling evidence and parallels between the lives of the Biblical King Solomon and Thutmose III's grandson named Amenhotep III? We should and we do.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in all three cases evidence has been found of large-scale reconstruction work 50 years later during the reign of Amenhotep III (the Biblical Solomon) who was Tuthmose III's (David's) grandson?

Answer for yourself: Can you guess what of earth shattering proportions was also found in the excavations of these three cities? A cartouche containing the name not of Solomon but Amenhotep III. A Cartouche is an oval band symbolizing continuity which enclosed a god's or Pharaoh's name (nomen and prenomen) similar to a modern logo, and which was the symbol of an Egyptian name in hieroglyphics. A cartouche of the 18th Dynasty Pharaoh Amenhotep III, Thutmose III's grandson (King David) was found in the strata belonging to this period and nothing was found indicating a "King Solomon" had been connected with any of these 3 cities in any way whatsoever. (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 212).

In Jerusalem, it has not been possible to excavate the temple mount, however, extensive excavations in the city, including the areas adjacent to the temple mount have not revealed the existence of a Solomaic palace complex (Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 216). Moreover, excavation of the Millo has revealed (due to pottery found in the Millo) that its original construction was also contemporary with the Egyptian 18th Dynasty of Amenhotep III (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 200-201; Rohl, Pharaohs and Kings, p. 181).

Amenhotep III of Egypt, Pharaoh of the Egypt's glorious 18th Dynasty, was known in ancient times as the "King of Kings" and "Ruler of Ruler's" (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 35). He, like the Biblical Solomon, inherited a vast empire whose influence extended quite literally from the Nile to the Euphrates (Osman, House of Messiah, p. 202).

Answer for yourself: Does it stand to reason that any Jewish king would ever inherit the Nile in Egypt? (THINK).

In contrast to the empire of Solomon, which we can find no trace outside of the inherited adulterated Hebrew texts bequeathed to us by Ezra, the empire of Amenhotep is indisputable (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43). The buildings, monuments, documents, art, and numerous other vestiges of his reign are universal and unparalleled (with the possible exception being those left by the 19th Dynasty Pharaoh, Ramses II).

The entire reign of Amenhotep III was devoted to monumental construction throughout Egypt, Canaan, and Syria (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 147). In addition to the ancient world's most glorious temple at Luxor (Osman, The House of Messiah, p. 216), he built many other temples of similar design throughout Egypt and in the rest of his empire (Ibid. p. 217), including the Canaanite garrison cities of Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer (Ibid, p. 212), Lachish and Beth-shean (Ibid., p. 218).

According to Egyptian records, Amenhotep's father Thutmose IV and grandfather Amenhotep II deported over 80,000 Canaanites. The Canaanite inhabitants of Gezer were specifically included in this deportation (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 165, 208). It was during Amenhotep III's reign (King Solomon) that Gezer and other major Palestine cities were refortified as royal Egyptian garrisons, and endowed with fine temples and palaces.

The Bible states that in Solomon's day, the Pharaoh of Egypt captured the Canaanite city of Gezer and presented it to his daughter as a dowry upon her marriage to Solomon (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 205; Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 310).

16 Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a portion unto his daughter, Solomon's wife. 17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether,

We made mention in earlier articles that sons of Pharaohs inherited the throne by marrying their "sisters". And we saw in the case of Tuthmose III, being of mixed blood, distanced from the throne of Egypt by failing to marry the daughter of Pharaoh thus necessitating his "adoption" by Amun in Psalm 2:6. Here we find again this example but now it applies to King Solomon. It stands to reason, if we recall, that if Tuthmose III, the grandfather of Amenhotep III, was of mixed blood then his grandson, be it Amenhotep III or Solomon would be of mixed blood and it would again be necessary to marry "the throne" by marring a daughter of a Pharaoh and this is exactly what the Hebrew Scriptures tell us Solomon did. Thus we now better understand why it was customary and obligatory for Amenhotep III to marry "the daughter of Pharaoh" in order to secure the throne (Osman, House of Messiah, p. 204-205). This is precisely what was done when he was married to Sitamun, the daughter of his father, Pharaoh Thutmose IV.

The network of Egyptian 18th Dynasty garrison cities also included the most important city of all.

Answer for yourself: Can you guess which city I am speaking about?

I bet most of you guessed it as I am speaking concerning Jerusalem. If construction by Amenhotep III at Gezer, Hazor, Megiddo and other garrison cities is any indication, then a magnificent temple undoubtedly was also built by Amenhotep II on Jerusalem's venerated Temple Mount (Osman, The House of Messiah, p. 218; Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 310).

Answer for yourself: Should we not be surprised to learn that the structure adjacent to Jerusalem's Temple Mount, known traditionally as "Solomon's stables," is consistent with the architecture of Amenhotep's garrison cities according to Osman? (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 218). Archaeology has also confirmed that chariots were kept in these cities during his reign in groups of between thirty to one hundred and fifty each (Ibid., p. 207).

Answer for yourself: Was Israel or Egypt known for their chariots? They both were! Is this a link between Solomon and Amenhotep III?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the ancient mining operations at Timna in the Negev desert, known as "Solomon's mines," "are much earlier than the Biblical dating for King Solomon by some three hundred years [in the conventional chronology]? This little know fact, given to us by Mazar, Archaeology of the Land of the Bible, is but one more piece of puzzle that is showing us that Amenhotep III is the Biblical Solomon.

Answer for yourself: This should expect and do we find that the date and times of Amenhotep III correspond exactly to the Biblical dating for "Solomon's mines? Yes we do!

Copper from Timna, gold from the Sudan, other precious metals, jewels and high quality stone were used in great abundance in Amenhotep's temples, just as they were in Solomon's (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 217). A stela from Amenhotep's mortuary temple boasts that the temple was "embellished with gold throughout, its floor shining with silver ... with royal statues of granite, of quartzite and precious stones." The list of materials used in another temple built by Amenhotep is also "staggering: 3.25 tons of electrum [an alloy of silver and gold], 2.5 tons of gold, 944 tons of copper..." (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 45, quoted by Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 217).

The Hebrew Scriptures, in Ecclesiastes 2:4-11), teach us that the Biblical Solomon's greatest satisfaction is said to have been the challenge of completing grand projects.

Answer for yourself: Can the same be said for Amenhotep III? Yes. A royal Egyptian text of the period reads, "Lo, His Majesty's heart was satisfied with making very great monuments, the like of which had never come into being since the primeval age of the Two Lands" (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 43).

Only an enormously wealthy king of a long established empire could have built so splendidly and in so many widely distributed locations in the ancient world. Amenhotep III was arguably the ancient world's wealthiest king. The completion of such magnificent projects required management of a considerable and constant source of labor and revenue extending over a period of many decades.

Earlier we mentioned that the Biblical Solomon had, I Kings 4:7:

7 And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, who provided victuals for the king and his household: each man had to make provision for a month in the year.

Answer for yourself: Should we expect and do we find that Amenhotep III had a similar if not exact administration and taxation system with 12 districts as did King Solomon as described in the Bible? Yes we should and we find the exact system in Egypt under Amenhotep III.

Amenhotep III also dedicated himself to rediscovering the wisdom, mysteries and traditions of earlier Egyptian Dynasties (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 151, 162, 164; Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 52).

Answer for yourself: If Solomon is Amenhotep III as were are seeing then does this explain his strong admonition to get knowledge and wisdom as we see in Proverbs and as was exhibited by Amenhotep III when studying intensely to rediscover ancient wisdom and the hidden mysteries of earlier Egyptian dynasties?

Answer for yourself: Do you recall in an earlier article that I mentioned when taking Proverbs in Seminary I ran across the connection between Solomon and Amenhotep III in the Anchor Bible Commentary on Proverbs? That being the case then this explains the strong relationship has been established between the "Proverbs of Solomon" in the Bible and the "Maxims of Amenhotep III" found in Egypt (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 222; quoting from Bright, A History of Israel, p. 199).

In addition to the projects already mentioned, Amenhotep III also built a completely new palace complex in Thebes.

Answer for yourself: Should we be surprised by now to find that this new royal residence included all of the elements contained in the palace complex of Solomon which are described in the Bible in 1 Kings 7:2-12)? Not at all really; at least not by now having previously read the article on Tuthmose III and having read this far into the article on Amenhotep III

Answer for yourself: What were these elements? Osman, in his House of the Messiah, p. 214-216, states that they were:

- a house made almost entirely out of cedars of Lebanon (built for Amenhotep's Jubilee festival);
- a colonnade (hall of columns) fronted by a portico (porch) and surrounded by a column-lined courtyard;
- a throne room built with many wooden columns and whose floor was a painted lake scene (identical to the one crossed in wonder by the Queen of Sheba when she approached the throne of Solomon, as described in the Koran);
- a separate palace built for Sitamun, "the daughter of Pharaoh;"
- a royal palace (consisting of his own residence, the residence of his Great Wife, Tiye, and a residence for the royal harem).

Answer for yourself: Should we be surprised any longer that Amenhotep III, like Solomon, were relentless in their pursuit of women for their harem, especially beautiful foreign women of both royal and common backgrounds alike (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 37). No; not really.

Amenhotep III's harem included two princesses from Babylon, two princesses from Syria, two princesses from Mitanni, and like Solomon's harem.

Answer for yourself: Should be any longer surprised that Amenhotep III's harem included a princess from each of the seven nations listed in 1 Kings 11:1 which is mentioned for King Solomon as well? (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 204). As the mightiest king of the Middle East, Amenhotep did not send any of his own daughters to other kings in exchange, nor did any other Pharaoh of this dynasty (or likely any other throughout Egypt's history). He specifically denied a request by the king of Babylon for an Egyptian wife (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 37). Importantly, the Bible emphasizes Solomon's Egyptian bride, but does not mention that Solomon had any Hebrew wives (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 204-205). Rehoboam, who is said to have succeeded Solomon, was the son of an Ammonite princess and not a Hebrew wife (Ibid., p. 2040205).

The court of Amenhotep III was an extremely liberal one, and reflected every possible excess of an affluent and secure kingdom (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 46). Eroticism in art and court life reached its height during the reign of Amenhotep III (Aldred, Akhenaten King of Egypt, p. 132). The famous "nude dancing girls" mural dates to Amenhotep's reign (Aldred, Egyptian Art, p. 176; Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 131-132).

As with Solomon, Amenhotep III denied himself nothing "his eyes desired" and "refused his heart no pleasure" (Ecclesiastes 2:10).

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy, for my heart had joy of all my labour; and this was my portion from all my labour

However, the last years of Amenhotep III's thirty-eight year reign were not pleasant ones. The long years of indulgence had taken their toll and he had many ailments.

Answer for yourself: What have we seen?

The "inescapable conclusion" to any "thinking believer" is that the story of Solomon was patterned specifically after the life of Amenhotep III. The name Solomon itself, which literally means "peace" or "safety" points to Amenhotep III whose long and pervasive reign in the 14th Century B.C. did not include any major military campaigns, but was characterized by unprecedented stability throughout the Near East (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 202). After the Egyptian 18th Dynasty, the region between the two great rivers was not controlled by a single power again until the Assyrian empire of Ashurbanipal (the grandson of Sennacherib) who invaded Egypt and pillaged Thebes in the 7th Century B.C. (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, p. 364), and the 6th Century B.C. empire of Cyrus, who also conquered Egypt and made it a Persian province (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 88). There is no evidence of any empire at any time controlling this region whose capital was Jerusalem.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH TUTANKHAMUN

It is assumed that the reader of this article has previously read the article entitled "What Lays Behind The Traditional Moses Story". As we have seen in this prior article once Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, decides to flee and leaves Goshen and sets out for Palestine/Canaan his co-regent Semenkhare was left in power in Egypt, but in less than a year he died or was killed (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 293). Semenkhare was succeeded by the now famous Tutankhamun (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 149). Aldred, in his book Akhenaten, makes mention of the fact that because of the very close similarity of their skulls and their identical blood types that Tutankhamun and Semenkhare are considered to have been brothers. The DNA studies of these remains tells us a lot and we expect more revelations in the future.

It is very important that we pay attention to what comes next. With Akhenaten in exile, the line of the Biblical David (the Pharaoh Thuthmose III) became divided.

- One Pharaoh lived on in the Sinai....Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses)
- The other "Branch" (Isaiah 4:2, 11:1; Jeremiah 23:5) now "sitting on the throne of his father (Amenhotep III or Akhenaten)," was the young Tutankhamun.

Isa 4:2 2 In that day shall the branch of the LORD be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "escaped"? Escaped from what? Could this have been the persecution of Akhenaten's followers and fellow Hebrew Atenists in the wake of Akhenaten's absence when he fled to Sinai? You might need to read the previous article on "What Lies Behind The Traditional Moses Story In The Old Testament" to get a proper understanding of the historical surroundings of such a verse.

Isa 11:1 1 And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: (KJV)

Jer 23:5 5 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. (KJV)

Now please pay attention. When first reading these "Messianic" verses one is struck by their traditional "Judeo-Christian" interpretations which we have grown familiar with our whole lives growing up in the Christian church but in light of what we have uncovered and learned up to now as to the true identities of the Biblical King David as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III then these verses and corresponding identities of those involved in these verses must take on an entirely new meaning. Having conclusively seen that the Biblical King David is none other than the Pharaoh Tuthmose III then it seems that this "stem of Jesse" and this "righteous branch" would be a successor in the lineage of Pharaohs and not some itinerant Jewish preacher some 1300 or so years later. Egyptian history bears out that this "righteous" one promised to David whose real identity is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III had adouble fulfillment in both Akhenaten and his son Tutankhamun.

I don't expect the "uneducated" reader to understand the next statement but the evidence demands such a statement being made in light of thousands of years of deception to hide this truth. If you spend some time in serious study of Egypt, the Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty, and Egyptian religion and its "Messianism" then all the evidence points to the identification of Tutankhamun as the real "historical Joshua/Jesus" that serves as the "prototype" for all later "Jesus Stories". This, I realize, is a challenging statement and will, for many people, be a terribly disturbing statement. Yet after you see the evidence it is the only logical conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence. But you have to see this evidence to understand such a statement. It appears without question that Tutankhamun is the "prototype" for all later "historical Jesus Stories".

Let us not forget if you have been diligent to keep up with these studies on your own that we have already made conclusive identification of King David of the Bible as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III and the Biblical Solomon as Amenhotep III. We have also seen the Biblical Moses is the Pharaoh Akhenaten. The identification of King David as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III is all the more important in light of Luke's description of the forthcoming birth of "Jesus" in the following terms:

Luke 1:32-33 32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: 33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. (KJV)

Having seen the Egyptian identities for King David, King Solomon, and Moses then it is clearly evident that this "throne of his father David" is none other than the Throne of Egypt held by a Pharaoh. That means that this "Jesus" referred to by Luke is "a Pharaoh" born long before the supposed time of a first century "historical Jesus". In fact scrutiny of Egyptian history reveals that this "Joshua/Jesus" is none other than the successor to the Biblical Moses (Akhenaten).

Answer for yourself: Whom does history identify as the historical successor of the Biblical Moses? It identifies one as "Joshua/Jesus".

Answer for yourself: Whom does history identify as the historical successor of Akhenaten? It identifies such a one as Tutankhamun.

Answer for yourself: Then does this mean that the Biblical "Joshua/Jesus" is none other than Tutankhamun? It sure does.

This simple reasoning reveals to us that there is nobody apart from Tutankhamun of whom it can be said that these conditions in Luke (Son of the Highest, seated upon the Throne of his father David (the Pharaoh Tuthmose III) was fulfilled.

We now, for obvious reasons, turn our focus on Moses' successor whom the Bible identifies as a person named "Joshua" whom we have strong reason to believe is not only Tutankhamun but the "historical Joshua" and the "historical Jesus" that have fed legends for thousands of years.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there is actually two names for the successor to Moses?

- One is the Biblical Joshua which we are all familiar with from the Biblical account
- The other one, in light of the fact that the Biblical Moses is Akhenaten because his successor was Tutankhamun

In was in the same article referenced above that we saw that after his coronation, or perhaps as part of the coronation itself, Tutankhamun's name was changed. His birth name had been Tut-ankh-aten. Scholars today teach us that there cannot by any doubt that Tutankhamun belonged to the Tuthmosside royal family of which Tuthmose III (the Biblical King David) had been the head only a short 4 generations earlier. A text on a lion of red granite in the British Museum states that "He restored the monuments of his father (again ancestry is meant) Amenhotep III (the Biblical King Solomon) who was also connected with the worship of the Aten (The Journal of British Archeology, 1928, vol. 14, p. 74). A. Osman, in his House Of The Messiah, on page 149-150, relates that Professor R.G. Harrison, the late Professor of Anatomy at the University of Liverpool, who examined the king's mummy in 1963, found a striking similarity with artistic impressions of Akhenaten. Scholarly debate has ensued concerning the question whether Tutankhamun was the "son" or "brother" of Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses). These matters are difficult to resolve but many scholars are of the opinion that Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) was the father of Tutankhamun and I concur having done the studies myself in these areas.

Answer for yourself: What should we learn from this? Simply that the Biblical Moses was at the minimum related to Tutankhamun and were close relations in the Tuthmosside royal family and connected with the "Throne of David" (remember that David is the historical Tuthmose III, the Napoleon of Ancient Egypt and great military conqueror that extended the boarders of Egypt to include Canaan and Palestine which will later become the home for the Hebrews and fellow Atenists following the religious split in Egypt otherwise known as "the Exodus". But more probable Tutankhamun was the biological son of Akhenaten.

The change in his name from Tut-Ankh-Aten to Tut-ankh-Amun is believed to be due to a compromise with the priests of Amun-Ra in Thebes in his father's absence. As I have shown elsewhere, "Aten" in Egyptian is the equivalent of Adonai, "the Lord", in Hebrew. Because Tutankhamun was only a child of seven to ten years old at his ascension, the change of his name from "Aten" to "Amun" could hardly have been a deliberate decision on his own part in contrast to the name change of his father (the Biblical Moses, from Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten). Both the birth name of Tutankh-aten as well as the change of name of Amenhotep IV to Akhen-aten indicate that their worship of God stressed the worship of their God as "the Aten"! Under the supervision of the elderly prime minister, Aye (second son of Yuya and identified with Ephraim, the second and more favored son of the Biblical Joseph), Tutankhamun continued to rule Egypt from the city of Akhenaten until the third or fourth year of his reign when he was persuaded to change the royal residence as well from the city of Akhenaten to Memphis. In his tomb it is written that "he spent his life in making images of the gods" (Aldred, Akhenaten, 295, 208-210, and Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, 208-210).

The monument known as the "Restoration Stele" found at Karnak recorded that Tutankhamun devoted his entire reign to the healing and restoration of Egypt from the schism created between his father Akhenaten and the Amen-Ra Priesthood at Thebes. It read, "The good ruler, performing benefactions for his father [Amun] and all the gods, for he has made what was ruined to endure as a monument for the ages ... the temples ... [had] gone to pieces. Their shrines had become desolate ... overgrown with weeds ... as if they had never been. The land was topsy-turvy ... If one prayed to a god ... he would never come ... (Schulman, "Military Background of the Amarna Period," p. 67, quoted by Osman,Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, 131). Although his main agenda was restoring the status quo of Amun and other Egyptian gods (netroo), he also maintained loyal to Aten and his fathers' legacy and even added to Akhenaten's temples to the Aten at Karnak (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King). In such a way he was seen to be a "peacemaker" which is one tasks of God's Messiah! In such a capacity he was seen by the faithful in Egypt as "their Mesheh" or "their Messiah"; one who will bring peace to their land and their lives. In such a capacity then one can easily see how the life and death of the young Pharaoh Tutankhamun was decidedly "Messianic."

The literal meaning of the name Tutankhamun is "Living Image of the Lord":

- Tut - meaning likeness or image;
- Ankh - meaning life and symbolized by a cross; and
- amun - the god Amun)" (Osman, House of the Messiah, 151)

Answer for yourself: What is the significance of this Egyptian Messiah being connected to a "cross"? More on that later.

M. Gadalla, in his Tut-Ankh-Amen, The Living Image Of The Lord, states that the Biblical Jesus and Tutankhamun share many similarities, including their variety of names. To the unlearned in Egyptian religion this seems impossible; impossible until you gather some much needed information that make you no longer see through a glass darkly. M. Gadalla writes in his Tut-Ankh-Amen, The Living Image Of The Lord that Tutankhamun shares the same names with the Biblical Jesus. This needs explanation is at tedious at times so we need to pay close attention to what comes next.

Tut's birth name was Tut-Ankh-Aton or Tut-Ankh-Aten (both meaning the same). Tut-Ankh means "the Living Image".

Answer for yourself: What is meant by "Aton" or "Aten"?

Aton/Aten signified the Egyptian neter (god/Lord) who has no image. The Lord of the Jews, who likewise has no image, is called Adon.

Answer for yourself: Is there a link between the Egyptian "Aton, Aten" and the Jewish "Adon"? Yes.

The Egyptian "Aton/Aten" is equivalent to the Hebrew "Adon". What we find is that the Egyptian "t" becomes "d" in Hebrew. In other words the Egyptian "Aton/Aten" is identical to the Hebrew "Adon" or "Adonai".

That should give the reader cause to think just whom this Jewish God really is!

Adon-ai in Hebrew is "my Lord".

The last two letters "ai" of the word is a Hebrew pronoun meaning "my or mine" and signifies possession. As such, Tut's birth name (Tutankh-Aten/Aten [the Hebrew Adon] likewise means "the image of the Lord").

Tutankhamun is described in his tomb with the same words used of his father, the Biblical Moses: 'The Beautiful God, beloved, dazzling of face like the Aten (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.58, 69).

Let us look at Exodus 34 for a just a second to an interesting parallel to the inscription from the tomb of Tutankhamun.

Exod 34:29 29 And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence that the same wording is used to describe both (Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and worshipper of the Aten and Tutankhamun who was named after the Aten (the Sun disk)?

Now hold onto the seat of your pants for what comes next. With the name change from Tutankh-aten to Tutank-amun the very "Lord" that Tutankhamun's name now acknowledged was no longer the Aten (the God of his birthright and the center of all Mosaic reform in Egypt), but Amun (the God or neteru emphasized by the Thebes Priesthood).

Answer for yourself: How is this related to Isa. 7:14?

Assuredly, my Lord will give you a sign of His own accord! Look, the young woman is with child and about to give birth to a son. Let her name him Immanuel.

Already conceded by a host of scholars is the fact that nowhere in the New Testament is there to be made any connection between the New Testament Jesus and the name "Immanuel". But that cannot be said for Tutankhamun. The name "Immanuel" is encoded by Isaiah 7:14, "the Lord (Adon/Aten is used here) himself shall give you a sign ... His name shall be called Immanuel."

Answer for yourself: If we transliterated Immanuel back into Egyptian do you know what we get? We get Amun-u-el meaning "his (u) god (el) is Amun." (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.166).

Many scholars have noticed that the words used by Isaiah here in this verse, Isaiah 7:14, makes it clear that the birth of this Immanuel had already taken place at the time of his writing. In other words "the Messiah" had already been conceived and had been born and died before Isaiah's writings. This verse in the Hebrew is not prophetic as many erroneously think today. As such, behind this verse is the hidden story of the first "historical Biblical Jesus" and that this "Jesus/Joshua" occurred several centuries before the Roman era and only later transported to the first century by Rome in their writing of the New Testament (M. Gadalla, Tutankhamun, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35). Let us keep reading to see how this is possible.

The writer of the Gospel of Matthew regarded Immanuel as another name for this Jesus and misquotes the verse intentionally to give it a future tense when in fact the Hebrew does not carry such a meaning: Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us (Matt 1:23 KJV). Lost from the misquotation and mistranslation from the quote from the Hebrew is the fact that it has occurred already.

Immanuel could be interpreted in two different ways, by dividing the word into its basic elements:

- Imma-nu (with us) and El (Elohim God) i.e. God with Us
- Imman-u (his Amun) and El (is God) i.e. His Amun is God

The Hebrew "ayain", the first letter of Immanuel, is equivalent to the Egyptian "aleph", which is the first letter of Amun. The reader needs to understand that writing the name Amen/Amon/Amun means the same thing. The first interpretation of Immanuel was intentionally highlighted in Red color above in order to hide the fact that it is the second interpretation that was intended, i.e. His Amen is God.

Answer for yourself: Where have we heard this before? This later interpretation is echoed in King Tut's changing of his name from Tut-Ankh-Aten to Tut-Ankh-Amun four years after he became the boy Pharaoh. His new name signified his allegiance to Amen/Amun due to the influence of the Amen-Ra Priesthood (M. Gadalla, Tutankhamun, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35).

Answer for yourself: Ever heard of the Shema? The Shema is an affirmation of Judaism and a declaration of faith in one God. The obligation to recite the Shema is separate from the obligation to pray and a Jew is obligated to say Shema in the morning and at night. The first line of the Shema, "Hear O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One" (Shema Yisrael Adonai eloheinu Adonai ehad) (Deuteronomy 6:4) is repeated throughout the prayer services. It is said in the morning blessings, in the musaf Amidah of Shabbat and holidays, when the Torah is taken out of the Ark on Shabbat and holidays, as a bedtime prayer, as part of the deathbed confessional, and at various other times.

It can be said that the "Shema" which is the Jewish confession of faith, in Deuteronomy 6:4-9: "Shema Yisroel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Echod" or "Shema Israel Adonay Elohenu, Adonay Ehad" (Adonay replaces the unspeakable YHWH). The proper English translation of which seems to be: "Hear Israel, our Lord is Adonay, only Adonay". If the uncanny similarity of the Egyptian Aten/Aton and the Hebrew Adonay, and the Greek Adonis is not pure chance, and something which originates from a common root or a common identity in the prehistory, then replacing "Adonay" with "Aton" gives us the following confession of faith:

"Shema Israel Aten elohenu, Aten ehad." The English translation of which is "Hear Israel our God is Aton, only Aton."

So we have seen a lot already and you cannot brush these facts aside as inconsequential as you will come to see that they lay at the very heart of our "Jesus Stories" we have inherited along with the "crucified Messiah" motif expressed in the New Testament. This fact become ever more important especially in light of the vacuum and lack of any verifiable and "unforged" evidence for a historical Jesus in the first century.

We need to see more evidence and it is available but so far in this article the reader needs to begin to see that there exists a very strong connection between Tutankhamun and the later "Jesus" story since both were "crucified Messiahs". So we are beginning to see that it is possible that it was Moses's successor, the "Image of the Living Lord", the "Lord of Salvation", the historical Tutankhamun who served as the prototype for the later "Joshua/Jesus" stories and "crucified messiah story" we read about in the New Testament today. Let us move on.

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that the word "Messiah" is of Egyptian origin? Well it is.

The English word "Christ" comes from the Greek "Kristos", which is the equivalent of the Hebrew and Aramaic "Mashih". The English word "Messiah" originated from the Hebrew and Aramaic "Mashish", which in its form as a verb "Mesheh", a verb meaning "to anoint". This word is Egyptian in origin, where "Mesheh" signified the ritual of anointing ancient Egyptian Kings (including Akhenaten and Tutankhamun) with the fat of crocodiles as was the tradition with all kings in ancient Egypt since 2700 B.C.E. (M. Gadalla, Tutankamen, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 33-34). Thus Messianic beliefs originated in Egypt and not with the Hebrews. The basis of Messianic beliefs was the divine nature that Egyptians attributed to their kings and Pharaohs, whose authority came from God. From the start of their history, even earlier than thirty centuries B.C.E., they identified their king as being the same person as Horus, the falcon god. They he developed into an incarnate version of the god, who appeared "on the throne of Horus". This concept placed the king between god and man as the necessary "intermediate".

Another important development took place from the time of the Fourth Dynasty (2700 B.C.E.), the era of the builders of the pyramids, when the king ceased to be identified with Horus and became the "human Son of Ra, the cosmic god" The king's actions were seen as merely fulfillment of his father's commands. This special relationship between god, Ra, and the king was manifested in the three principal events in the ruler's life:

- His holy birth
- His anointing at the time of his coronation
- His resurrection after his death

Answer for yourself: Does this not sound remotely familiar with the pattern for the "Jesus Story" in our New Testament?

Thus we see that "the word 'Messiah' comes from the Hebrew verb 'to anoint', which itself is derived from the Egyptian word messeh, 'the holy crocodile'. This is the original source of the word "Messiah".

It was with the fat of the messeh that the Pharaoh's sister-brides anointed their husbands on marriage where these Pharaohs became the rightful heir and ruler of Egypt (Sir Laurence Gardner, "The Hidden History of Jesus and the Holy Grail" (from a lecture given at the Ranch, Yelm, Washington, 30 April 1997).

As the letter "s" in Egyptian is equivalent to "sh" in Hebrew and Aramaic, it becomes evident that the Biblical word "Messiah" originated from "Mesheeh", the ancient Egyptian word signifying the ritual of anointing Egyptian Kings and Pharaohs. Thus "the Christ/Messiah" means "the anointed one, who is the king". As such Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and his successor Tutankhamun was also Christ, the Messiah (M.Gadalla, Tutankhamen, The Living Image Of The Lord, p. 33-34).

The final decisive event in the Pharaohs' life was his death and resurrection: "just as coronation enabled a man to enter the world of the divine, so upon his death he ceased to belong to the human world" (Morenz, Egyptian Religion, p. 38). From then on the king was believed to have been united with the gods with whom he shared eternal spiritual existence: "Evidence of this belief is afforded by 'becoming Osiris' whereby the king entered the eternal nature of this god and, instead of just acting analogously as at first, acquired an identity of existence with him" (Ibid., p. 39). Thus we read in the Old Testament about the Israelites waiting for their "anointed Messiah", this could mean only that they were waiting for a king to rule them, unite them, and defeat their enemies. The Messiah, like Osiris, had to die before he could be a Redeemer, and it is the hope that the king, Son of God, met his death but was resurrected and could give his followers the prospect of eternal life with him. This Egyptian idea, alien to the early Israelites, cold not have been accepted by them before their kingly Messiah had lived and met his death (Tutankhamun). It was the prophet Isaiah who first introduced the idea of the Messiah as a Redeemer in the character of the Servant, who thus became a Savior of the world; the precise concept used in the later Gospels for the role of "Jesus/Joshua" which was taken from Tutankhamun. The very idea of Christ being the Redeemer confirms that he had already lived his historical life and died (A. Osman, The House of the Messiah, p. 152-153).

It follows that the word "Essa" is the Arabic name for "Jesus" and the only one used in the Koran. "Essa" was also the name used for Jesus by the early Egyptian Christians in the Coptic Egpyptian language in the first century A.D. The first followers of Essa (Jesus) were called the Essenes (the owners of the found Dead Sea Scrolls). Philo Judaeus, who wrote the earliest account of this Jewish sect around 30 A.D., called them "Essaeans" from the Greek "Essaios" but stated that the word was of non-Greek origin. It was recognized that the word "Essene" must have had a Semitic origin, which is "Essa". "Essaioi" would therefore mean "a follower of Essa". Now the meaning of "Essa" and the "Essenes" were intentionally concealed because the Essenes, as the followers of Essa (Jesus) existed before the time allotted to the assumed historical Jesus during the Roman time period. This is very problematic if this "Essa" or this "Jesus" had existed long before the time he was supposed to have lived in the first century (M.Gadalla, Tutankhamen, The Living Image Of The Lord, p. 34).

Now again pay close attention. The names "Joshua" (Ye-ho-shua in Hebrew) and "Jesus" (Ye-shua) in its short form", have the SAME MEANING, which is: Yahweh (the Lord) is salvation or "the Lord is salvation".

Answer for yourself: Who is this "Lord"?

Now when we get to the Greek text of the Bible it gets confusing because the Greek reports both names as "Jesus". The KJV Bible and many of the early Church Fathers of the second and third centuries A.D. refer to "Joshua" and "Jesus" as one and the same person!

Answer for yourself: Were they historically the same person? Have we forgotten this knowledge today? Was this "Joshua/Jesus" known in Egypt as the "Lord who is salvation" and was he known as a historical person known as the Egyptian Messiah who was both identified as both Akhen-aten and Tutankh-aten, his successor?

Wow...time to set down and catch your breath.

Answer for yourself: Was the death of Tutankhamun where he was pieced in the side and hung on a tree at the bottom of Sinai the prototype for all other "Jesus/Joshua" stories as they traveled down through history? Did this story become a "prototype" or "motif" for all other "hoped-for" messiahs and "Lords of salvation" and find its culmination in the "Jesus Story" of the New Testament following the death of the Essenes' Teacher of Righteousness who was their "Joshua/Jesus" as well? Have we finally found the "historical Jesus/Joshua" but in a different time than expected?

No wonder the first prophecy of a "savior" given to Israel, the Hebrew offspring of Egypt and the followers of Akhenaten and worshipers of Adonai/Aten who later became their incorporeal YHWH was through Egypt as chronicled by Isaiah in chapter 19 verse 20:

Isa 19:20 20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them. (KJV)

There have been many "Joshua/Jesus" down through history. In some Talmudic passages, Jesus is named "Ben Pandira" (the son of Pandira). Since the Jews do not agree that the New Testament depiction of Jesus is the Son of God, they have historically suggested that Pandira was a lover, not the husband, of Mary.

Answer for yourself: What lies behind the "Ben Pandi-ra" story? Ever heard of Ra, the God of Egypt? Should we expect to find again an Egyptian meaning behind this Jewish story of Pandi-ra? Yes and are not disappointed.

Pandira is a corrupt Hebrew form of an Egyptian royal term. The Hebrew "Pa-ndi-ra", in its original form, is "Pa-ntr-ra" (pronounced Pa-neter-ra). Here again we are confronted with the Egyptian word "Neter" which was the Egyptian way to express their Divine Concepts concerning God the Creator. It appears that behind so much of Judeo-Christianity we have Egyptian origins for the religious concepts we read today. We know "Ben" means "son". Then Ben Pandira, as such, means "Son of God" or "Son of the neter (god) Ra). All Egyptian Kings and Pharaohs since 3000 B.C.E. had the title, Son of Ra including Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses and his relative and successor Tutankhamun. (M. Gadalla, Tutankamen, the Living Image Of The Lord, p. 35-36).

Answer for yourself: Then if, for example, Tutankh-aten, the relative and successor of the Biblical Moses, as seen from his name was the "Image of the Living Lord" and understanding the efforts at reconciliation he initiated during his rule then is it a stretch to see that he was in reality the "Joshua" (or Jesus) or "Lord of salvation" hoped for by all of Egypt? Then was Tutankhamun the very essence of what the words "Joshua/Jesus" have come to mean today? Yes he is.

Then, Ben Pandira (Son of Ra) identifies our Egyptian "Joshua/Jesus" as an Egyptian Pharaoh and King. The title "Son of Ra" is engraved on Tutankamen's stele, which was found in the Karnak Temple in 1905 (Ibid).

As seen the word messiah is not only from Egyptian origin but derives from the ritual anointing of a Pharaoh that was an essential part of the coronation ceremony (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 152-155). In the wake of his father's self-imposed exile when he fled attempts on his life we find that historically that Tutankhamun was indeed the messiah of those followers who had gone with Akhenaten into exile, and their main source of protection and provision in the Sinai desert as well as their hope for peace and reconciliation with other religious factions in Egypt. He also was their only hope of being able to eventually return to their homes in Egypt. In such a regard Tutankhamun was their "deliverer" and "savior".

This hope ended with the unexpected death of Tutankhamun when he was at most twenty years old.

Interestingly in the Bible, the father of Joshua is named as Nun. This is the only person having this name in the Bible.

Answer for yourself: Who is this "Nun"?

Not surprising if you have studied Egyptian religion one finds that Nun was among the most ancient of Egyptian deities and was associated with the primordial waters of chaos of both the Egyptian and Hebrew creation stories (Pinch, Magic in Ancient Egypt, 26).

Answer for yourself: Is this Nun connected in any way with the New Testament Christ Jesus? Yes it is. Nun later came to be a symbol of Christ, i.e., the fish, which is the traditional symbol of Christianity and the age of Pisces when the religion of Jesus Christ arose (Osman, House of the Messiah, p.56).

Earlier in this article we dealt with the similarities between the words "Joshua" and "Jesus". More needs to be said about this.

Answer for yourself: Is Tutankhamun associated also with the "Old Testament Jesus" whose name can be read as "Joshua"? Yes as we saw above but there is more.

Let us not forget that it is Joshua who is said to have been Moses' "aide since his youth" (Numbers 11:28). When Moses fled with his followers to the Sinai, it is Joshua who suddenly appears to support him. It is Joshua who is summoned to take men and fight on Moses' behalf as stated in Exodus 33:12-17 (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 56). It is Joshua who ascends Mount Sinai with Moses to receive the commandments of God (Ibid., p. 57). It is Joshua who enters and remains in the "tent of meeting" where Moses goes to speak with "the Lord" as recorded in Exodus 33:7-11 (Ibid., 58, 68). And "the day on which Moses came down from Mount Sinai," (Ibid., p. 58).

That an Israelite leader was killed at Sinai runs throughout Israelite history. The identity of the victim has been obscured, however, by an elaborate attempt to hide the true facts that such a one was King Tutankhamun.

Answer for yourself: How can we be sure of this effort to deceive us as to the identity of this slain one at Sinai?

This is particularly clear from a chapter in the Book of Numbers. The story in Numbers follows an account of how Israel was locked in combat with Moab and Midian (tribes living to the south and east of the Dead Sea and in Sinai) and Balaam's prediction of a victory over the Moabites. It goes on to relate how a number of Israelites began "to commit whoredom" (Numbers 25:1) with Moabite women, who invited them to "the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods" (Numbers 25:2). This, it is said, angered the Lord (Numbers 25:3). Then "one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand; And he went after the man of Israel into the tent (Tabernacle), and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman" (Numbers 25:6-8).

For these actions, Phinehas is presented to us as a hero. As a result, a "plague" that had cost the lives of twenty-four thousand people was brought to an end, and the Lord spoke to Moses, saying: "Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them, that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy. Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace; And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel" (Numbers 25:11-13). A few verses later the victims are identified as minor figures - Zimri and Cozbi, the son and daughter respectively of two chief houses.

Answer for yourself: Did you see any problems with the above verse? Are there signs that this verse has been subjected to some priestly sleight-of-hand in the editing in order to cover up what had actually happened? Well there are 4 problems as I see it.

- First of all an ordinary Israelite would not have taken a foreign woman into the inner room of the Tabernacle, where only a king or high priest was allowed;
- There is no mention of the man in this case worshipping another god;
- Making love to a woman was not punishable by death;
- Moses, the Israelite leader, did not give any orders for action against the man, and, if the male victim was a minor figure, why would it require revenge in the form of the death of twenty-four thousand innocent people?

Scholars over time have commented that despite the efforts of the priests to suppress the sordid story, it nevertheless lived on in prophetic circles. It is clear that, as what is described as a plague is mentioned only after Phinehas had committed his killing, it was a punishment for the assassination, not for consorting with foreign women. Paul had this in mind when, after indicating that Christ was present with the Israelites in Sinai, he went on to say: "But with many of them God was not well pleased. . . and fell in one day three and twenty thousand" (I Corinthians, 10:5,8). Not only that but this very understanding is reinforced by the evidence available from the Dead Sea Scrolls. The Commentary on Habakkuk, one of the Qumran texts, which tells us that, after the Wicked Priest had killed the Teacher of Righteousness, the (the Teacher) appeared before them to swallow them up.

Answer for yourself: Was this "wicked priest" a reference to to the original Phinehas who was known for a killing at Sinai?

Answer for yourself: Was this a "literal resurrection" or a "spiritual revelation" or "unveiling" of the slain Teacher by others?

Answer for yourself: Was this wicked Priest the historical Phinehas?

Answer for yourself: Who was then this historical "Teacher of Righteousness" in Egypt that later provided the "prototype" for the later Essene Teacher of Righteousness?

Answer for yourself: What does "swallow up" mean? It is a Hebrew metaphor for "do away with" or "kill". As for the appearance of the Teacher after death, "the Hebrew verb used here may also be translated as 'he revealed himself to them'; thus indicating a spiritual rather than a historical experience.

Ernest Sellin, a German biblical scholar, had found textual evidence to suggest that an Israelite leader was murdered in Sinai, and Sigmund Freud thought this leader was Moses. The Israelites, he thought, killed Moses as they resented his strict teachings. Now hold onto your seats. Scholars have been able, however, to identify the assassinated leader as Joshua the son of Nun, successor of Moses and we have identified historically once knowing the true identity of Moses as Akhenaten that "this follower" was his successor Tutankhamun. It was Phinehas, the priest of Moses, whom scholars have identified with Pa-Nehesy the high priest of Akhenaten, who killed Joshua. While the Israelites were still in the land of Goshen in Egypt, Pa-Nehesy killed Tutankhamun at the foot of Mount Sinai, as he regarded him as a heretic who allowed paganism's return by reversing many of the religious reforms of Akhenaten in his absence from Egypt.

Further support for the theory that the "plague" which followed the Sinai assassination was a form of punishment for the murder of Tutankhamun is also to be found in the Book of Hosea, where this punishment is said to have been carried out by Ephraim (the Egyptian Aye):

When Ephraim spake trembling" - the sense here, given in other translations, is that "he caused others to tremble" and that "he exalted himself in Israel" (Hosea 13:1).

There is another problem. It is also rather curious that Phinehas should have been rewarded with "the covenant of a perpetual priesthood to him and his descendants after him" when we know from the previous book in the pentateuch, Leviticus, that this promise had already been made to Aaron and his descendants.

These events occurred before the Exodus and Moses was not himself killed until two decades later. He was thirty-four or thirty-five when he fled to the safety of Sinai after his abdication in 1361 B.C.E. There, according to the Old Testament, he formed an alliance with the Midianites, who are to be identified in Egyptian history as the Shasu, the nomadic bedouin tribes of Sinai, some of whom were converted to worship of the Aten. So the death of this slain one at Sinai occurs before the Exodus.

Before we discuss the identity of this slain one in detail and the connection between "Joshua/Jesus" let us set the stage for what is going on back in Egypt at the time of these events at Sinai.

Back in Egypt in the meantime, Horemheb, the Pharaoh of the Oppression, had turned the area around the fortified frontier city of Zarw, where Moses had been born, into a prison. There Horemheb gathered the mass of Akhenaten's followers, including the Israelites, who were related to Akhenaten and many of which were his followers and worshippers of the Aten and whom had embraced his monotheistic beliefs, and a variety of criminals, who lived in villages outside the city walls. Horemheb appointed Pa-Ramses, the head of his army, as mayor of Zarw as well as giving him responsibility for the local military garrison. It was Pa-Ramses, on Horemheb's orders, who inflicted harsh labour on the Israelites and other prisoners by forcing them to rebuild Zarw as well as a new residence for himself, known later as Pi-Ramses, the starting point of the Exodus, according to the Old Testament. Pi-Ramses also became the main residence in the Eastern Delta for Pharaohs of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Egyptian Dynasties.

The death of Horemheb left Egypt without a legitimate heir to the Eighteenth Dynasty. Pa-Ramses, by now an old man, therefore prepared to claim the throne for himself as the first ruler of a new dynasty, the 19th Dynasty. Moses, long after the death of this "slain one", had been in hiding in the wilderness for slightly more than a quarter of a century, decided to try to reclaim his throne from Pa-Ramses, who is described in the Old Testament as "the king who knew not Joseph" or "who disregarded Joseph". He made his way to Zarw where his challenge as the rightful ruler had to be decided by Egyptian priests and elders. With the aid of his sceptre topped by a brass serpent, the symbol of pharaonic authority, Moses was able to establish his identity as the son of Amenhotep III, and the Egyptian priests and elders, who are called "magicians" in the Bible, accepted his claim. However, Ramses, because of his military authority, was too powerful to be overthrown and became the first ruler of the Nineteenth Dynasty by a kind of coup d'etat. At this point, realizing that his life was at stake, Moses fled again to the safety of Sinai, taking his followers with him, including the Israelite tribes, from the villages outside the walls of Zarw. This was the biblical Exodus.

Moses and his followers made their way to Sinai via the marshy area to the south of Zarw and north of Lake Temsah and present-day Ismailia. This watery route was chosen to hinder pursuit: Egyptian chariots would become stuck in the mud whereas the Israelites, travelling on foot, would be able to cross safely. This is the possible time and location for the biblical account of the pursuing Pharaoh who was drowned. Egyptian sources provide no evidence of this event, but it is certain that the short reign of Ramses I (c. 1335-1333 B.C.) came to an end upon his death at this very time.

News of the death of his father quickly reached Seti I and Seti I, the son and successor of Ramses I, did not even wait for his late father's mummification, a process that took seventy days, before marching against Moses, the Israelites and the Shasu. He met and defeated them at many locations on the Horns road as well as in central Sinai. There was great slaughter among the Shasu, large numbers of whom were also captured and taken back to Egypt to be sacrificed at the feet of the god Amun-Ra at the Karnak temple. It is likely that Moses was killed by Seti himself in the course of these military operations.

The introduction of Ephraim, whom many Egyptian scholars today identified as Aye, into the story of the slaughter that followed the assassination of the Israelite leader in Sinai, is a further indication that these events took place between the flight of Akhenaten (Moses) to the safety of Sinai after his abdication and his return to Egypt a quarter of a century later in a vain attempt to reclaim his throne. Aye disappeared from the Egyptian scene in 1348 B.C.E., thirteen years before Ramses I came to the throne. During the reign of the young king Tutankhamun, when he was the king's vizier and Master of the King's Horses, Commander of the Chariots and Chief of the Bowmen, and again during his own reign, he was the most powerful man in Egypt, and thus in a position to inflict heavy punishment on those responsible for the death of this slain one at Sinai (the Joshua/Jesus) (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 64-66).

Answer for yourself: Who was this "slain one" at Sinai?

Taking a closer look at some of the events described in the Book of Exodus we find further indications of the true identity of the Israelite leader who met his death at the foot of Mount Sinai. At the time that Moses made his first journey, accompanied by Joshua (remember the name Joshua is interchangeable with the name Jesus), up the mountain to receive the Ten Commandments, there is an indication that a measure of discord existed as a result of the behavior of the occupants of the Israelite camp below. The Lord is quoted as saying to Moses: "I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiffnecked people" (Exodus 32:9).

Answer for yourself: What is suspiciously absent from the account of Moses' second visit to the mountain to replace the broken tablets from his first visit? There is no mention of the name of Joshua (Jesus) accompanying Moses. This is all the more problematic considering that we also have the suggestion that Moses met and talked with the Lord on the mountain. Osman states that this is a "somewhat clumsy attempt to remove Joshua from the scene, although we are at the same time assured that 'Joshua. . . did not depart from the tent (Tabernacle)'".

Answer for yourself: When did this occur? The admonition to Moses by the Lord on this occasion that "seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread" also echoes the story both in the Bible and the Talmud that this slain one, this "Joshua/Jesus" met his death on the eve of the Passover (the Jewish day lasted from one sunset to the next).

Once Moses returned to the foot of Mount Sinai, the attempt to remove Joshua (Jesus) from the scene breakdowns. Moses, whose face shone and was "vailed" when he spoke to the Israelites, is depicted as acting as a go-between, talking to the Israelites outside the Tabernacle, wearing his veil, but removing the veil when he enters the Tabernacle.

Answer for yourself: Who was he talking to inside this sacred shrine? We have already been told that Joshua (Jesus) "did not depart from the tent (Tabernacle)". Yet it is clear from the sequence of events that the person within the Tabernacle at these times had a higher authority than that of Moses, otherwise Moses would not have been acting as a go-between. In Osman's opinion, as well as many others, when Moses was the acknowledged leader of the Israelites, who could the person in the Tabernacle have been other than the "Joshua/Jesus" otherwise known as the reigning Egyptian Messiah, the Pharaoh Tutankhamun in his father's absence

Finally, it is also strange that, from this point, both Joshua and Phinehas disappear from the Exodus account, despite the promise to the latter that he and his descendants would enjoy the covenant of an everlasting priesthood. Yet both surface again later as part of the elaborate priestly attempt to conceal what actually happened at the foot of Mount Sinai in the fourteenth century B.C. The Messiah had been killed and hung on a tree at the foot of Sinai for his attempts at reconciliation between his father and the Amen-Ra Priesthood (reversing the restrictions imposed upon the Amen-Ra Priesthood and reinstating the worship of the neteru in Egypt in his father's absence).

Well it becomes rather plain now having the historical facts from Egyptian history, seeing the deceptions in the Biblical text, and the hidden meanings behind the names of Tutankhamun, Joshua, and Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware now in light of the archeological evidence that the story of the conquering of the Promised Land by Joshua is pure fiction that that the true Biblical Joshua is said to have been slain at Sinai? Startling at it might appear at first it is Joshua, not Zimri, whom the Talmud says was slain by Phineas in that same tent of meeting (Numbers 25:6-8), not for adultery with a foreign woman, but for spiritual adultery with forbidden gods (Ibid., 64-65).

Answer for yourself: And what was this "spiritual adultery" that was responsible for the death of "Joshua/Jesus/Tutankhamun"? Was it a reference to Tutankhamen's reversal of the religious reforms instituted by his father Akhenaten after Akhenaten's absence from Egypt in Tutankhamun's efforts at religious reconciliation between the Atenists and the Amen-Ra Priesthood?

The name of Akhenaten's "Chief Servitor" and "Second Priest of the Aten" was Panehasy (Redford, Akhenaten the Heretic King, p. 48, 148) which is the Egyptian equivalent of Phineas which this Talmud states killed "Jesus/Joshua" at Sinai (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 63). Excavation of Panehasy's house in the city of Akhenaten has revealed that he and Akhenaten were close friends as well as being completely devoted to the cult of the Aten (Aldred, Akhenaten). Osman, in his books, suggests that the 24,000 Israelites who were said to have died on the day of Phineas' zealous deed, did not die of a plague, but perished at the hands of Aye (Ephraim) who came for the body of his slain Pharaoh and "Son of God", Tutankhamun, and to meet out swift retribution for his murder (Osman, House of the Messiah, 65-66). As we see it was because of compromising the true faith of Aten that in reality both Akhenaten and Tutankhamun (the Joshua/Jesus) was killed.

In the book of Isaiah (literally the book of Jesus), the Messiah is spoken of in both past and future tenses (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 44-56). A straightforward interpretation is that the Messiah had already lived, was killed, but was expected to return to reclaim his rightful place on the throne of David (Thutmose III). The followers of Moses (Akhenaten) and their descendants were divided over the killing of Tutankhamun (Joshua/Jesus). Those represented by the author(s) of the book of Isaiah believed that the murder of the Messiah was the cause of God's punishment, and the reason for their being exiled from Israel to Babylon as they had previously been expelled from Egypt. In contrast, the compilers of the Talmud state that the killing of "Jesus (the Nazarene)" was justified because he "practiced magic and led Israel astray" (A. Osman, The House Of The Messiah, p. 26, 34). Statements in the Talmud also confirm that Jesus had lived and died in more ancient times, and more specifically in the time of Moses, himself. The Talmud states that it was not the priest Caiaphas who was responsible for the death of Jesus (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 25), but that the priest "Pinhas (Osman, Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, p. 172, 185) killed him [Balaam/Jesus]" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 34, 26-29). In the Talmud the names "Jesus and Balaam" are sometimes synonymous (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 35). Let us not lose sight of the fact that Balaam was also recognized in the Talmud as having been a true prophet sent by God for the benefit of the Gentiles (Cohen, Everyman's Talmud). The Talmud relates that Balaam, himself "a descendant of rulers and princes" and a contemporary of Moses, was appointed to oversee the king's affairs while he was away, but had usurped the throne after the king's departure (Osman, Moses: Pharaoh of Egypt, 22-23). This is identical to the historical events surrounding Akhenaten and Tutankhamun. Although Tutankhamun (Balaam of the Talmud story) still worshiped the Aten, he was seen as ruling illegitimately in Akhenaten's place. Furthermore he was regarded by the loyal followers of Akhenaten that he had committed blasphemy by restoring the very gods of Egypt that Akhenaten (Moses) had prohibited when he restored the Amen-Ra priesthood and reopened Egypt's temples and by condoning the ancient forms of magic and mythology associated with their cults (Osman, House of the Messiah, 177).

Answer for yourself: Why is so important? Because according to the Laws of Moses this was a crime punishable by death and despite the status of Balaam/Jesus, he was not to be "spared" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 35) A fracture that penetrated Tutankhamun's skull, and the bone chip found inside the skull itself, indicates that Tutankhamun did die from an injury caused by a spear or arrow (The Complete Tutankhamun, p. 33, 114, 117-118). The mummified skull of Tutankhamun was found completely shaved, but with a short amount of stubble. It has been interpreted that his head may have been shaved as a "preliminary treatment" for the head wound, and that Tutankhamun survived long enough after the injury to grow a short stubble. However, another interpretation is that his head was already shaved at the time of the injury. Ritual shaving of the head was a traditional and mandatory practice among Egyptian priests of that time.

As Pharaoh, Tutankhamun officiated as a priest of the highest rank. Centuries later, the apostle Paul had a vision of Jesus the Nazarene (not Jesus of Nazareth as it is commonly mistranslated in the Book of Acts (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 31).

Acts 22:8 8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. (KJV)

Paul also had his own head shaved (Acts 21:24-26) after which he was arrested and accused of being a leader of the "sect of the Nazarenes" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 30-31). This was a charge that he did not deny (Acts 24:5-6,14).

After the untimely death of Tutankhamun, Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) buried Tutankhamun in the tomb he was having prepared for himself (Aldred, Akhenaten, p. 299).

Answer for yourself: Does this sound vaguely familiar as related to the "Jesus/Joshua Story"?

This is the source of the statement about the Messiah in the Book of Isaiah, "he was assigned a grave with the wicked, but with the rich in his death" (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 162).

This is also the source for the account of the burial of "Joshua/Jesus" in the New Testament account:

Matt 27:59-60 59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. (KJV)

Aside from the Pharaoh, Aye (the Biblical Ephraim) was the wealthiest and most powerful person in Egypt as was his father Yuya (Joseph) before him. After three days, and according to Egyptian tradition, Aye returned to the tomb and presided at the "opening of the mouth" ceremony at which Tutankhamun was believed (as were all Pharaohs) to be resurrected to eternal life in the afterworld. The identification of Tutankhamun as one source of the Biblical story of Joshua (and archetype for Jesus of Nazareth) is even more clear when passages in the New Testament are re-read in that light. It explains the apparently literal meeting of Jesus (Joshua) with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 36-37, 57, 172).

Matt 17:2-3 2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. 3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. (KJV)

It explains the necessity of Jesus' titles of Messiah and Son of God (Ibid., p. 151, 170). It explains the story of the rich burial given to Jesus by Joseph of Arimathaea. It explains why Jesus had to remain in the tomb for parts of three days before his "resurrection." It explains why Jesus raised Lazarus (derived from Osiris) (Osman, House of the Messiah) from the dead in order to demonstrate his identification with Osiris and belief in the after-life. It explains the necessity of Jesus' holy birth (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 151-152, 158) through

Mary (Merit) and the Holy Spirit, and a host of other events and symbolism in the life of Jesus as described in the New Testament. Tutankhamun was revered as a god both in life and in death. Although he was tragically killed, the Israelite prophets proclaimed that he would one day return and retake his rightful place on the throne of his father David (Thutmose III). This throne had formerly been sacrificed in his attempt to reconcile a divided nation. Osman's theory is that when the Messianic Hope was all but extinguished, the meaning of Tutankhamun's sacrificial death and resurrection was given a new context for a new era in the 1st Century A.D. story of Jesus of Nazareth (Osman, House of the Messiah, p. 72-73). After all it was the beginning of a new age of Pisces and the closing of the earlier age of Aries. In this form, it would come to represent a sacrificial atonement not only for Israel, but for the sins of the whole world. The tomb of the tragic figure of Tutankhamun, the last of his line, and source of the Messianic hope, came to light in 1922. The art and contents of the tomb included many items which would later become associated with Catholic ritual and symbolism (Ibid., p. 71, 172-174). Other material found in the tomb confirms that his death was in the spring (with burial 70 days later in early summer), the traditional time of the Jewish Passover (Ibid.). He is the only Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty whose mummy still remains in the Valley of the Kings. Today, over one million people file through his crumbling tomb (Romer, The Rape of Tutankhamun) and past his divested and decaying mummy each year. It is now possible to more fully appreciate the legacy that he and his forefathers have left us.

One more thing needs to be said before we close. In the tomb of Tutankhamun there is a unique scene, not found in any other Egyptian burial, representing the Trinity of Christ. The profound significance of the wall-painting cannot be underestimated in its importance linking Tutankhamun with the later "Jesus" portrayed in the New Testament; especially in the light that they are both called "the Son of God". In this tomb there is a painting of the burial chamber on the north wall which is the strongest pictorial evidence linking Tutankhamun and Christ. The painting is divided into three separate scenes:

- The first scene on the right shows Aye, already crowned as the king's successor, but nevertheless officiating as a priest dressed in the leopard skin, performing the ritual of "the opening of the mouth" for resuscitation of the dead Tutankhamun, who is shown as a risen Osiris
- The middle scene shows Tutankhamun entering the heavenly realm of the gods and being welcomed there by the sky goddess Nut.
- The scene on the left of the north wall shows three different representations of Tutankhamun linked as one person. On the left of the scene stood Tutankhamun as the risen Osiris, with a second Tutankhamun facing him as the ruling king, Horus. Behind him is a third Tutankhamun depicted as his Ka. The most remarkable feature of this scene is the fact that the risen Osiris, although shown in the conventional mummified form with his hands folded across his chest, is reaching out to touch Horus, as is his Ka.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? What I have just described is that Tutankhamun is depicted as father, son and spirit-the same relationship that we find in the Christian Trinity of the three persons in one God-Father, Son and Holy Spirit which is associated in the New Testament with "Jesus/Joshua" whom as we have seen Egyptian history defines as Tutankhamun. This belief in the Trinity is finally established as a Christian orthodox belief after much acrimonious debate during the first four centuries of the Christian era but it finds it origin with Egypt as does most of all religions today.

GENESIS 31:12...SHEEP VS CATTLE

Have you ever looked at Genesis 31:12 and thought about it for a while?

This passage if often distorted from the original import of the text. Genesis 31:12 states:

Gen 31:12 12 And he said, Lift up now thine eyes, and see, all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ringstraked, speckled, and grisled: for I have seen all that Laban doeth unto thee. (KJV)

This at first light appears to be utter nonsense to most readers and that being the case many translations change the passage to read "goats mating with the flocks."

We all understand that sheep do not mate with cattle.

Answer for yourself: Is there something here that we are missing?

Our lack of understanding of Egyptian religion causes us to stumble and alter the true meaning of these texts. The original story was not one of real sheep and cattle - it was of stellar constellations of Aries and Taurus, the stellar sheep and cattle. The original text does make sense if you have the keys of knowledge to unlock the hidden meaning in this passage and interpret it correctly.

This passage opens for us a unbelievable picture of Egyptian religion dealing with the precession of the equinoxes and the movement of constellations which figured not only so prominently in Egyptian religion and their understanding of God but was the later impetus for the Exodus.

Thus you can see that many of the allusions to sheep and cattle are not agricultural, but astrological (Taurus [bull] vs Aires [lamb/ram]). Surprisingly enough, after this understanding becomes evident to the reader of these ancient texts, many of the texts make much more sense than they did before. It is my contention that these astrological connotations within the Bible were an essential part of the story. The Egyptian heritage of these religions dictated that there would be many such allusions; astrology and astronomy were central to the Egyptian faith. As the centuries rolled by such things will lose their importance. Egypt had become a distant and embarrassing memory to the Jews in Jerusalem, the story had to be changed and the constellations in the heavens were not translated into "real animals." It was a small change, but one that suited the climate of the times very well. Lost for more than 3000 years is the truth behind the reason for the Exodus and the theological disagreements among Egyptian Priesthoods and Pharaohs on their understanding of God and how He was to be worshiped. Ironically, Moses (Akhenaton) would lose this theological war but win in the long run as his understanding of God being "ONE" will reshape the world. More on that later after we build some more foundations first.

THE HYSKOS SHEPHERD KINGS AND JUDAISM

The Ancient Egyptians were the Founders and Masters of Religious and mythological Symbolism. The Semites became intimately acquainted with this esoteric knowledge during the reign of the Hyksos over the Egyptian people. The Hyksos(known as the Shepherd Kings) conquered Egypt sometime after 2000 BC. These people were the precursors to the latter day Hebrews , who founded Judaism.

The Hyksos were actually the beginning of the Semitic(Jewish) era and we trace this in reality to Abraham and his influence. These Shepherd Kings conquered Egypt after the commencement of the Aries' era , 2286 BC. Some historians put the time of their conquest at circa 17th Century BC. They ruled Egypt for two centuries and were assimilated into Egyptian customs. They were expelled after 200 years of schooling in the ancient Wisdom, and obviously after their expulsion, commenced to formulate their own theology, depicting themselves as the chosen (vernal equinox) and all other races as the gentiles. History shows, that when the Egyptians revolted and expelled the Hyksos rulers from their land, that they, the Hyksos fled and resettled in the vicinity of the city, which later became known as Jerusalem.

Thus we find the link between Judaism and Egyptian religion; both in religious doctrines as well as Monotheism.

EZRA AND HIS INFLUENCE UPON THE REWRITING OF THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES AND JEWISH HISTORY

Scholars will tell you today that Judaism was created by the Persians in the fifth century.

Answer for yourself: Then what was the religious roots of the Jewish people before the influence of Ezra and Persia upon the Jewish nation and this creation of Judaism in the fifth century? Well get ready for the shock of your life.

TIME FOR SOME BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Colonistswere deported into Palestine under the influence of Ezra and Nehemiah; both members of Cyrus court. Their reward was to have control of a temple state which collected taxes for Persia and served as a buffer state between Persia and Egypt who often were at war. Only priests of the temple state were Jews—a nation of priests. The history of the Jews was reinterpreted and even "invented" by Ezra from Assyrian records and imagination in order to energize a people who were taught that they were former apostates who had to obey God diligently to atone for their past failings.

The Persian religion, founded by Zoroaster (or Zarathrustra) and whose priests came to be called the Magi, has had an influence on the world which today is unrecognized.

- The Neo-Pythagoreans owed much to Persian religious belief. Indeed Pythagoras himself was said to have learnt from both the Magi of Babylon as well as the Priests of Egypt.
- The apocryphal Book of Tobit seems to contain a lot of Persian religious teaching.
- There seem to be links between the Jewish philosopher, Philo of Alexandria, and Zoroastrianism (Persian religious beliefs).
- The Neo-Platonist leader, Appolonius, came from Tyana, a Cappadocian city where Persian influence was strong.
- Gnosticism was also indebted to Persian religion.
- Plainly the Dead Sea Scrolls of the Qumran Community had an astonishing flavor of Persian religion, and
- so does Christianity.

The appearance of the Wise Men of the East, considered to be Magi, in the gospel of Matthew offering gifts to the infant god seems to be a symbolic assertion that this new Christian god was superior to those of the Persian religion. This account mentioning the Persian Magi certainly implies that the writer of the Gospel of Matthew was aware of this Persian link with the Persian religious belief and needed to demonstrate to others who might notice it that his "Jesus" story was not indebted to Persian religion but rose above it.

Zoroaster was the driving force behind the Persian Religion and a real person but when he lived is unsure, not because there is doubt that he did but, because the evidence of the date is contradictory. It could have been any time between 1400 and 700 BC. Thus Zoroaster either preceded or was a contemporary of the prophets of Israel, Buddha, Confucius and Lao-Tse. Probably about 1000 BC is the best guess because the Gathas of Zoroaster (eighteen hymns composed by the great poet-prophet Zarathustra around 1200 B.C.) have certain things in common with the Vedas of India which are dated about then.

Before anyone other than the Pharaoh Akhenaton (the Biblical Moses), Zoroaster introduced monotheism; but understand that Monotheism began with Egypt and not Persia. We need to understand right from the beginning that Ormuzd was one of the highest gods in Egyptian belief, he being the personification of spiritual goodness, and the deadly enemy of Ahriman (the adversary). The closest that Egyptian mythology comes to the Devil, Ahriman was regarded as the antithesis of the gods of Egypt, the personification of darkness and evil, and the eternal enemy of the highest and most exalted Egyptian god, Ormuzd. These two are, in fact, not so much considered as gods, but as pure spiritual beings, perhaps the fathers of the Egyptian gods that followed. In Persian mythology, too, Ahriman is seen as the personification of evil, he leading the dark forces against the hosts of Spenta Mainya, the holy spirit, who assisted Ahura Mazdah, the wise lord, and final victor of the cosmic conflict (dualism).

Understand as well that all world religions were influenced one way or the other by Egyptian religion. Some nations kept these original Divine ideas concerning God intact as taught by Egypt; others however made changes. Over time mankind fell away from this simple understanding of God which Egypt understood and left recorded for us in the oldest religious documents known to mankind. The various tribes of Persia worshipped a pantheon of lesser gods and spirits, called Ahuras, but Zoroaster declared Ormuzd or Ahura Mazda, the Lord of Light, to be the single true God above all others as Moses (Akhenaton) had done previously in Egypt in declaring Aten the Supreme God over all others. Ormuzd is the same as Varuna of the Vedas. Like Varuna, he has a surrounding court of ministering spirits. Ormuzd was "Lord", "The Wise Lord", "The First and the Last", "The Father of the Good Thought". He created Right. He promised eternal life to good people:

In eternity shall the souls of the righteous be joyful.

To follow goodness or evil was one's personal choice. In the later development of the Persian Religion, Ahriman, the Devil, becomes identified with the Evil Spirit, but in the Gathas of Zoroaster the Evil Spirit is actually one of the two aspects of Ormuzd himself, the other being the Holy Spirit. We have nothing new here when you stop to consider that the concept of evil and the origin of evil has perplexed mankind's greatest thinkers since time immemorial. Attempts have been made to explain the origin of evil by attributing this origin of evil to a secondary entity at war with God and in so doing protecting the integrity and picture of an all-loving God. Even the Jewish sages were perplexed with this problem as seen in laying the blame of the census taken by David which resulted in God's punishment of Israel upon Satan when the other corresponding passage records that it was God Himself which moved David to take the census. Persian Religions was no different than the Judaism influenced by it in coming up with an alternate way of explaining how good and evil both come from the God of all things. When Ahriman became identified with the Evil Spirit, Ormuzd became a purely Holy Spirit. But man had free will to refuse evil in both stages of the religion. Thus we have the underpinnings of the development of an Ethical Monotheism.

Bliss shall flee from them that despise Righteousness. In such wise do you destroy for yourselves the spiritual life.

Either Zoroaster was a High Priest or "Zoroaster" later became a title meaning High Priest for he is sometimes referred to as the best or highest "Zoroaster" suggesting a hierarchy of priests or possibly a group of them at community level led by a "pontifex maximus". Later the Persian priestly caste were called the Magi (like the Brahmins of India) whose leader was considered a direct successor to Zoroaster. They introduced new elements into the Persian religion and revived some old ones.

Zoroaster, like Christians, wanted to convert everyone: he sent missionaries as far as Hindustan. It has been said that Zoroaster taught nothing about God which a Christian would not endorse and much that a Christian should add:

- He was threatened with death by a king as a baby
- Started his ministry at 30
- Underwent a period of temptation
- Had a healing ministry
- Had a teaching ministry
- He championed the oppressed
- Lived an ascetic life
- He was murdered.

Alexander's conquests (330 BC) led to the destruction of many Egyptian and Zoroastrian texts. According to Diodorus, the historian, the Persian archives were held at Persepolis yet Alexander burnt the city and murdered many of Persia's leading scholars. In the second century BC a king called Valkash collected the remaining scattered manuscripts and the oral tradition and tried to reconstruct the holy works. Fortunately Zoroaster's Gathas, seventeen hymns composed by the great poet-prophet Zarathrustra around 1200 BC., being particularly sacred, seem to have survived essentially unaltered.

Other than Pharaoh Akhenaton (the Biblical Moses) whose efforts were primary in the influence upon the Hebrews toward monotheism we need look to Zoroaster who many scholars see as also influencing the introduction of monotheism to the Jewish people after their exile in Babylon and Persia. It has been said that the concept of Ormuzd is closer to that of the Jewish God than that of any other eastern religion. Yet prior to exile the Jewish god was a tribal god—one of many Semitic tribal gods and few Christians are aware of this fact.

WHY DID ISRAEL NEED TO BE TAUGHT MONOTHEISM?

The Israelites were not monotheists. At this time the Jewish nation captive in Persia worshipped primarily a tribal god. This, of necessity, implies polytheism since there are other tribes. The idea of the covenant with one tribe, the Israelites, implies polytheism. In it God commands:

Thou shalt have no other gods before me (Exodus 20:3), admitting there were other gods which these people worshipped when previously in Egypt. Monotheism for Israel came later (Isaiah 43:10-13, Jer 10:1-16).

Isa 40:10-13 10 Behold, the Lord GOD will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. 11 He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young. 12 Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance? 13 Who hath directed the Spirit of the LORD, or being his counsellor hath taught him? (KJV)

Jer 10:1-10 1 Hear ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, O house of Israel: 2 Thus saith the LORD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them. 3 For the customs of the people are vain: for one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the axe. 4 They deck it with silver and with gold; they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not. 5 They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not: they must needs be borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good. 6 Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O LORD; thou art great, and thy name is great in might. 7 Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee. 8 But they are altogether brutish and foolish: the stock is a doctrine of vanities. 9 Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing: they are all the work of cunning men. 10 But the LORD is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. (KJV)

After the return from the exile (following Persia's conquering of Babylon), when the sages wrote down the holy books, they introduced ideas from Zoroastrianism. The Jew's tribal god became a universal God but one which still favored his Chosen People. Deutero-Isaiah contains the first monotheistic declarations in the Bible; the first expression of universalism which has no antecedent in the Bible. In ancient Persia, Ahura ("Lord") is the title of gods, and the name for gods and spirits. The name was used to make a clear distinction between the Ahuras and the Daevas, who originally belonged to the same classification of godlike entities. The Daevas were in later religion degraded to the lesser beings, demons or devils, they are now.

At the time of the Jewish exile in Babylonia, much Zoroastrian thought had the chance to enter Judaism and surely did. Scholars once took this for granted. Thus, in Jeremiah, Rab-Mag was the chief of the Magi. 2 Chronicles, Ezra and Deutero-Isaiah show how close Persian and Jewish thought was. Darius Hystaspes, the Persian King of about 550 BC, worshipped Ormuzd. He was probably a Zoroastrian, as was his father Cyrus. Jewish history is dated from the reign of Persian kings and the Persian king Cyrus is seen as a Deliverer. He rebuilt the Jerusalem Temple as we know from inscriptions as well as the Old Testament and was much admired by the prophet, Isaiah. Herodotus confirms that he was a noble king.

The Jews, as well as Christianity today, derive most of their modern doctrines from Persian religion, the religion founded by Zoroaster. Persia gave Judaism its angelology, the immortality of the soul, the doctrine of the millennia , the heavenly book in which human actions are inscribed, a Last Judgment, rewards or punishments after death, paradise on earth or in heaven, hell, the final transformation of the earth and resurrection. Satan first appeared in Judaism as God's servant, His prosecutor, but with Persian influence he evolved into a Jewish Ahriman, God's enemy. The Messiah, conceived as a human warrior King who would save his people from oppression like king David of old, evolved into a cosmic saviour very similar to the Persian Saoshyant.

Ancient Judaism knew of no Last Judgement but they did in Egypt where the Hebrews once lived. This is just one example where the earliest Divine Revelations of mankind as held by the Egyptians were later altered by later nations. Before the exile the Jewish concept of death was Sheol, a dark and dismal place with no memory of God. After it the concepts of Heaven and Hell had emerged and the Jews had a doctrine of resurrection and Judgement for all. Ironically Persian religion restored this religious belief to the Jewish people which they had encountered before in Egypt. The "dry bones" of Ezekiel seems to be based on the Persian custom of leaving the dead to be picked by birds in towers, so that they do not defile the earth, after which they could be resurrected. The Persians, like the post-exilic Jews, believed the soul remained with the body for three days—a dead person was not really dead until the fourth day when the soul had departed. This explains why Jesus was to rise on the third day. It also shows that the raising of Lazarus was an afterthought. The greatness of the miracle of raising Lazarus in the fourth gospel is that he had been dead for four days. His soul had departed and he was beyond recall. Such is the influence of Persian Religious beliefs upon the Jewish nation.

Before the exile, the Jews conceived of their anthropomorphic tribal God as a vengeful, bloodthirsty and jealous God of fear. The priests returning from captivity had seen an image of a much nicer god. They wanted a good, perfect, remote and universal God of love—just like Ormuzd, the Persian Most High God. But they had to persuade the men of the land, the ordinary untaught and unskilled Jews who had never been in captivity, that the change was what they wanted. This would not be easy as the Old Testament testifies.

WHO WERE NEHEMIAH AND EZRA? WERE THEY JEWS?

By the order of Artaxerxes I (Ardeshir I) (465-424 B.C.) the walls of Jerusalem were built, and two of the royal court officials, Nehemiah and Ezra were commissioned to compile the Judaic dispensation (445-393 B.C.). Most Jews in Palestine did not want to change their religion and their concepts of God and resisted the Persian influence brought to them in the return of the captive Jewish nation from Persia. Nehemiah and Ezra came from Persia to make the Jews adopt this new image of god molded in this Persian way.

Because of the Persian protection and favorable attitude of the Achaemenid Kings, the Jews entertained warm feelings thereafter for the Persians and this made them more receptive to their influence. The vast difference between the preexilic and postexilic Judaic scriptures is so discernible that even Sigmund Freud contended that there could have been two Moses. We shall see upon study that innovative teachings of Zarathrustra-Zoroaster had been intermingled with the concepts of the Jew's earlier faith and some of his doctrinal views had been expanded and even altered beyond their originality as we find in Judeo-Christianity today.

- The new Zoroastrianism at this era, believed in one universal God, Ahura Mazda. But the six divine attributes were often envisioned as separate entities, perhaps in the form of archangels that with Ahura Mazda at the center, at times illogically were called seven Amesha Spenta.
- There was battle between the forces of good and evil, with the ultimate victory of good over evil. Those who sided with the forces of good, were supporting the Divine cause. The evil forces were regarded as anger, envy, lies and environmental pollution, etc. In effect the Zoroastrian followers had developed a form of angelology and demonology.
- The Persians believed in liberty and freedom of choice, as reflected in the Gathas and the texts of later Avesta.
- Another Zoroastrian concept was The Kingdom of God or chosen government, wherein all the virtuous men and women reside freely and choose leaders for their righteousness, and the oppressed will be rehabilitated. The goal was for everyone to work toward establishing the "chosen government" where good overcomes the evil.
- They believed in immortality of soul, life after death, that the souls of the dead will be judged for their deeds of the past on the bridge of judgement (Chinovat), where they were guided by their conscience and judged by three angels (Mithra, Rashn, Sraosha), who were to differentiate them and determine the eternal dwellings of the two groups in heaven or hell.
- Resurrection (Rastakhiz) or the end of the world, when the dead revive and the new world will have a fresh life and new beginning (Farsho Kerat or fresh act).
- In the Gathas, Saoshyant is a general term and means benefactor. There are benefactors of the past, present and future, but no reference is made to any promised person who shall advent. The concept of future benefactors however at this time had been transformed into the savior of future who will perform the task of resurrection.
- The Israelites on the other hand, based on the preexilic writings had not developed eschatology. They rather believed in Sheol or an underground and desolate world where the good and bad after death will equally end up. Therefore the notions of judgement after death and reward of heaven and retribution of hell, were nonexistent in their tenets.
- Yahweh was the covenant god of Israelites and did not have a universal status, the dualistic forces of good and evil, angelology and demonology were absent in their beliefs as reflected in the books of preexilic Judaism.

Now we come to Ezra and his influence in the creation of Judaism (pseudo-Persian religion). In 397 BC Ezra was sent from Babylon by Artaxerxes, the Persian king, to teach in Israel statutes and ordinances (Ezra 7:10)

Ezra 7:10 10 For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments. (KJV) and to see if the people of Judaea were agreeable to the law of God. They were not teaching any religion that the people of Judaea could understand. Ezra is described in Nehemiah 8, reading from a book of law which neither Hebrew speakers nor Aramaic speakers could understand—the words had to be translated by the then Persian priests.

Neh 8:1-12 1 And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the LORD had commanded to Israel. 2 And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. 3 And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate from the morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law....7 Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place. 8 So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the people did not understand what Ezra was saying and had to be instructed by men sent among the crowds as Ezra taught? What language was this? What book of law was it? Why were these people not familiar with what Ezra was teaching if this was their faith? And how come that they did not know anything about the festival which Ezra proclaims?

Neh 8:10-11 So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the people had to be "stilled" [told to be silent] since they were in an uproar about what was being taught to them? If this was their prior faith then what could have been the problem? Or was this their prior faith as taught and understood by Moses? Was their faith being changed? (THINK).

The books of Ezra and Nehemiah indicate that they were successful in achieving widespread religious conversion in Ezra 6:19-21 and Nehemiah 10:28-29.

Answer for yourself: What were these people converting to? Simply a new Persian spin on their existing religious faith or a great divergence from Mosaic faith?

THE INFLUENCE OF EZRA...THE COVERUP OF THE EGYPTIAN ROOTS OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE

Zoroasterhad subjected the Aryan tribal gods to the one Most High God, Ormuzd. It is plain that Ezra, at the behest of the Persian king, was trying to do the same.

What I will say next will be hard for many to accept and I can only say you need to study. Much happened with the history of the Jewish people since leaving Egypt under Moses. Much happened to the earlier concepts of God which the Jewish people were exposed to while in Egypt. Some they retained and some they did not. Since leaving Egypt the influence of monotheism under Akhenaton had not taken hold as hoped as much of the Old Testament records; the oscillation between polytheism and monotheism by the Jewish nation continued and we see the result of this in the repeated judgments of God upon them because of such idolatry. This pattern of oscillation continued up until about 400 BC when Jerusalem comes under the power of the Persians. It is at this time that Ezra and Nehemiah formulated the Jewish scriptures as we have them today. In so doing however much of the tradition and history of the Jewish people were changed at the whim of Ezra; especially the links and legacy of Egypt owing to the fact that Persian and Egypt were often at war. In so doing Ezra changed the identities of the heroes of the Jewish people from Pharaohs to Patriarchs. Likewise anything concerning Egypt was portrayed in a negative light and the true reasons for the Exodus were obscured in order to cloud or conceal the Egyptian roots of these Jewish people. Ezra wrote out much of the Jewish mythology and altered many of the identities of the "Patriarchs;" incorporating a multitude of laws intended to make the Jewish gods into a single monotheistic god akin to Ormuzd, and the Jews into a civilized people. Let us understand that much of what Ezra did accomplished much good for the Jewish nation as it instilled an Ethical Monotheism into this people who had failed to adopt such an understanding of God when first introduced to it by Egypt and Akhenaton (Moses). Yet in so doing many of the earlier understandings of God, uniquely from an Egyptian viewpoint, were lost along with important information that comes from the Jewish Nation being influenced by Egypt. Where any Persian concepts appear in the Jewish scriptures at a time before the captivity, they have been written anachronistically into the account by the post-exilic priesthood. The writing of these religious documents by Ezra from the Persian religious persuasion was necessary if the Jewish people were to be sent back to their land and become a "buffer" nation separating Persia and Egypt with the hope of maintaining pro-Persian allegiances. In order for that to happen the Jewish people and their religion had to become Persian in many aspects and so it would.

One of Ezra's major reform was the prohibition of foreign wives. Marrying foreign wives had been Hebrew practice. The land of Canaan had not so much been conquered as the legend of Joshua makes out, as infiltrated by marriage of Hebrew men to Canaanite women. But inter-racial marriages were disapproved in Zoroastrian law. The distinction between clean and unclean animals in Leviticus and Ezekiel was from the Vendidad, a Zoroastrian holy book, which explains it. The purification rituals are identical in the Pentateuch and the older Vendidad. Ezra also introduced the new festival of booths in the seventh month, the Zoroastrian holiday of Ayathrem.

The Jews resisted the imposition of Zoroastrianism as Judaism. They opposed the building of a new temple with a vast treasure given by Cyrus. The native Israelites built their own temple on Mount Gerizim and wrote Jerusalem out of their Pentateuch. The Persian governors and priests in Jerusalem caused a great schism in the name of Judaism. The Sadducees, stood by the older traditions and believed in no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit (Acts 23:8)—no Persian innovations for them. The Pharisees or Persian faction—Pharisee, Parsee, Farsi—never numbered very high, not more than 6,000, although only Pharisaism survived the fall of Jerusalem in 70 AD.

THE ESSENES AND PERSIA

Zoroastrian parallels with the Qumran and Essene documents are huge. The Damascus Document condemns those who enter the New Covenant but then leave to join the Liar. The Habakkuk Commentary enlarges on the theme of the Liar, telling of trouble within the community when the Liar secedes from the order and comes into conflict with the Teacher of Righteousness. In 2 Corinthians 11:31, Paul is insistent that he "does not lie" apparently answering an unpleasant criticism of him. The choice of language in these instances stems from Zoroaster. For Zoroaster the enemy was within, the Druj or the Lie.

The Qumran Community was an apocalyptic sect. They were expecting the end of the world. The apocalyptic movement arose with the death of classical Jewish prophecy when the Israelites were carried off to Babylon which soon became absorbed into the empire of the Persians. The Enoch-Essene Literature is Persian of about the fourth century BC. Apocalypticism seems to owe a great deal to Persia and the influence of Persian religion on Judaism stems partly from the apocalyptic writers. The Qumran library proves that Apocalypticism was a considerable movement in Judaism not merely a fringe interest. Christian theologians used to believe that the anticipation of God's kingdom to come was uniquely Jesus's message. Now we see it was hundreds of years old, had come out of Persia with the exiles and had been perpetuated by the Essenes.

THE MESSIAH AND PERSIA

In the preexilic period, Messiah was only a title of honor granted to important people, and generally the holder of the title was regarded as a person close to Yahweh. During the postexilic era however, it became an especial title for the Lord's Messiah. Fohrer (Fohrer G., Geschichte der Israel) after a careful analysis concludes that all the sections relevant to the advent of Messiah have entered the holy book during the postexilic era, and 2nd Isaiah is the prophet who in particular refers to the end of the world and coming of the Messiah (Ashtiyani J., A Research in Judaism, p. 366, in Persian). It is generally accepted that the prophets of Israel after liberation from the Babylonian captivity, in order to generate hope and confidence among the demoralized Jews, introduced the Persian concepts of future hopes such as victory of good over evil, resurgence of Israel, resurrection, future life, heaven and hell and the Kingdom of God. Particularly as the Israelites in this era longed for the reestablishment of Kingdom of David, they developed the notion of Messiah and in effect envisioned the Kingdom of Yahweh in the form of the promised Messiah that was different from the earthly Kingdoms (Ashtiyani J., A Research in Judaism, p. 465-366, in Persian). In other words the political hope of restored Jewish Kingdom headed by a "Meshiach Yahweh" came to be associated with the prophetic and apocalyptic vision of a Kingdom of God in the End of Days (Encyclopedia of Religion, Edited by Vergilius Ferm, Philosophical Library, 1981, p. 485). The prophets Haggai and Zechariah saw in Zerubbabel the possible fulfillment of this hope (Encyclopedia of Religion, Edited by Vergilius Ferm, Philosophical Library, 1981, p. 485). Thus, the concept of Kingdom of God, originally professed by Zarathrustra as "the chosen government", was eventually transferred through Judaism to Christianity and transformed into the "Kingdom of God". In Isaiah 42: 1-4, "the savior has the spirit of God and will not rest until he has established justice all over the world". Isaiah 11:6 after discussing the above adds after the coming of the Savior "world will live in peace, wolves will live in peace with lambs, and leopards will lie down to rest with goats". This notion is also reflected in Isaiah 62:25. Zechariah 4:14 even speaks of two saviors who are standing before Yahweh. Von Gall suggests that the writers of the book should have had the knowledge of two Zoroastrian saviors, of the later Avesta. Hoshidar and Hoshidar-mah (Von Gall A., quoted from A Research in Judaism, p. 367 in Persian by J. Ashtiyani). Some Authors contend that the three Magi who visited Jesus Christ at birth, were following the call for the future Saoshyant. The Jewish messianic ideal of a Deliverer as you can see came from Persia.

Another new development in the postexilic Judaism is belief in angels. Mills mentions that "the angelology of the oldest scriptures which was nearly as dim as their Sheol, became occupied with such figures as Michael and Gabriel (Michael (Daniel 10:21), Gabriel (David 9:21) while the number seven attached to them is as conspicuous as is significant" (Mills L. H.: Zarathrustra, Philo, The Achaemenids and Israel, A.M.S. Press, New York, 1977, p. 436). The seven postexilic angels (Gabriel, Michael, Raphael, Israfil, Israel, Uhiel and Uriel) are vividly reminiscent of the seven Amesha Spenta of the later Avesta. Another striking finding is "the person of devil as Satan ceased to remain a general term and became a proper names" (Mills L. H.: Zarathrustra, Philo, The Achaemenids and Israel, A.M.S. Press, New York, 1977, p. 436) and demonology began to develop. The struggle between the forces of good and evil, or light and darkness as reflected in the scrolls of Dead Sea reflects the Persian influence.

In Persian religion Ahriman (Satan) and his angels rose out of the Abyss to attack the Good spirit and the Angels of Light. Neither good nor evil was victorious but eventually Ahriman will be defeated by a Deliverer sent by god, the Saoshyant (Messiah). The Saoshyant, of the line of Zoroaster or perhaps the prophet himself reincarnated, heralds the beginning of a new age. There follows a "Day of the Lord" and trial by ordeal for mankind when the earth will be flooded with molten metal which burns up the wicked but allows the righteous to bathe in it as in warm milk. The earth would be levelled into a great plain just as it is in Isaiah 40. Finally Ahriman will be cast back into the Abyss and mankind will ascend to the realm of light to dwell with Ormuzd. There will be no repentance or pardon—in life, evil deeds can only be cancelled out by good deeds, and judgement is on this balance.

THE ESSENES AND THE SCROLLS OF QUMRAN...MORE PERSIAN RELIGION

Such a dualistic doctrine was unknown to the ancient Hebrews. But the Qumran documents speak of Good and Evil; Light and Dark, the Way of Darkness and the Way of Light, the Spirit of Darkness and the Spirit of Light, The Children of Darkness and the Children of Light, Truth is Light, Falsehood is Darkness. The Teacher of Righteousness is opposed by Belial, the Demon of Evil. The Way of Good leads to salvation, the Way of Evil leads to torment. Of the four gospels, John reflects this terminology most accurately showing its Essene links. In 2 Corinthians 11:12-15, Paul criticizes the Archapostles as disguising themselves as "Servants of Righteousness" and uses the sentence "Satan disguises himself as an Angel of Light" both betraying Qumran influence and apparently deliberately used against the upholders of the Community tradition.

The discovery of Khirbet Qumran-Essene scrolls in the caves of Dead Sea in 1947, shed light on the Essenes' tenets and practices. A French author, named Dupont Sommer, after reviewing the text of the scrolls, found many evidences of Zoroastrian influence. The common beliefs of the Essenes and Zoroastrians have been analyzed by different authors and reported (Ashtiyani J., A Research in Christianity, in Persian. p. 124-126) as:

- Prohibition of sacrifices in the rituals: In the sect's chapter of worship, one finds that they had substituted the ritual of dedicating meat and fat to the fire, with the expression of devotion to God by genuine prayers of the lips, to tread the path of justice and perfection to receive the divine blessings.
- The appealing Zoroastrian doctrine that light stood for goodness and darkness for evil, had apparently spread to Palestine before the age of Qumran texts and had been accepted by all the sects (Golb N., Who Wrote the Dead Sea Scrolls?, Simon and Schuster, 1995, p. 81). The review of the Qumran Scrolls also reveals that the Essenes believed in a constant struggle between the forces of good and evil. One of the texts is conspicuously close to the teachings of Zarathrustra: "God created man to rule the world and granted him two spirits of evil and righteousness that are with him to the moment of judgement. From the fountain of light the righteous generation, and from the source of darkness the malicious and wicked men will come to existence. The ruler of the light is in control of the realm of righteous sons who proceed in the illumined path, and the other Kingdom is governed by the angel of darkness, where the sons of evil tread the dim path. All men originate from these two spirits and tread their paths. But God in His wisdom has determined the day when the followers of untruth are destroyed and righteousness prevails in the world". The above passage is reminiscent of Yasna 30, and in particular, the last two sentences that reflect the "freedom of choice" and "hope for the victory of righteousness" have striking resemblance to the pristine teachings of Zarathrustra in the Gathas.
- Belief in righteousness, justice and order and prohibition of lies which form the foundation of the Zoroastrian doctrine.
- The Essenes believed in freedom of choice as Zoroastrians did, and they professed everyone should choose his path freely. This concept reflects the Zoroastrian influence, as in the original Judaism, it was Yahweh who would choose his people and grant them the blessing of being the chosen.
- In contrast to a common belief that wisdom belongs to God, they believed in wisdom of man as well, and expressed interest in philosophy. In the Zoroastrian doctrine, wisdom is the source of all good deeds and only the wise will choose aright.
- Contrary to the original Judaism, the scrolls do not superscribe vengeance, instead they emphasize love, good deeds and justice. The Essenes believed in three principles of love of beneficence, love of mankind and love of justice.
- Particular attention was given to cleanness and general sanitation. The Essenes took a daily bath in cold water and like the Zoroastrians wore a clean white attire.

The Judeans did not believe in the immortality of soul and the concepts of eschatology generally were not accepted by them even after Christianity. But the Essenes believed in the immortality of body and soul and they regarded the body as the prison house where the soul was confined temporarily, and finally when departed would ascend high. The sect of Qumran also held as an opinion that the souls of righteous will have eternal life, likewise in the new Zoroastrianism Fravashi (the Divine essence) of all men belonged to God and after death returned to the Source.

- The Essenes also believed in the final day of Judgement, rewards and retributions.
- Their belief in the advent of Messiah resembles the concept of Saoshyant in the new Zoroastrianism.
- In the morning prayer, the Qumran sect revered the dawn, sun and light which illustrates the Persian influence. Josephus even goes further by suggesting that the Essenes engaged in some form of sun worship (Golb N., Who Wrote the Dead Sea Scrolls?, Simon and Schuster, 1995, p. 81).

CONTRIBUTIONS TO CHRISTIANITY

Let us never underestimate the enormous role played by Ezra in reformulating the Jewish Scriptures which laid the foundation for the latter influence of Judaism upon other world religions; especially Christianity. The permanent contribution of Zoroastrianism to European life and culture has come to us through its enormous influence upon the New Testament via the Essenes.

During the five centuries contact, interaction between the two traditions took place. The Jews under the Persian influence developed eschatology, angelology and demonology, and renewed hope for future in terms of victory of good over evil, advent of Messiah and establishing the Kingdom of Yahweh. Many of these doctrinal concepts, later were transferred to Christianity and Islam and were actually expanded them.

Essentially immortality of the soul, judgement and rewards and punishments after death were not recognized by the preexilic Judeans. Zaehner notes that the preexilic view of Sheol, a shadowy and depersonalized existence that is the lot of men regardless of their actions during life, was suddenly abandoned and replaced by the notions of heaven and hell, rewards and punishments when the exiled Jews came in contact with the Persians which later entered Christianity.

The Zoroastrians believed that the soul rises from the dead body and for three nights after death resides in the material world and then proceeds to the other world. This may be termed individual resurrection. Jesus Christ is also said to have risen from his sepulcher three days after crucifixion. The later Zoroastrianism also predicates a collective resurrection (Rastakhiz) when all the dead will rise. The concept of resurrection that was imbedded in parts of the early Hebrew scriptures as Exodus and Deuteronomy became vivid in writings of the postexilic prophets. Daniel 12:2-13 refers to rising after death and receiving rewards. In Isaiah 26:19, the dead will rise again from the graves, the ground will give birth to the dead.

Among the basic elements which the Synoptics obtained from Zoroastrianism we may mention the following: the intensely personal and vivid concepts of hell and heaven; the use of water for baptism and spiritual purification; the savior born of a true virgin-mother; the belief in demons who make human beings impure and who must be exorcised; the Messiah of moral justice; the universal judgment, based upon good and evil works; the personal immortality and the single life of every human soul; the apocalyptic vision and prophecy; and the final tribulation before the Parousia.

In addition, Paul, Revelation, and the Fourth Gospel drew heavily upon Zoroastrianism for elements which are absent from the Synoptics:

- the doctrine of absolute metaphysical dualism,
- the Logos concept,
- transformation into celestial spirits,

- the millennial kingdom, Armageddon,
- the final conflagration,
- the defeat of Satan,
- the renovation of the universe,
- and the celestial city to be lowered from the Supreme Heaven to the earth.

In Revelation, as in Zoroastrianism, seven is a holy and mystical number. Furthermore, we may note that until the middle of the third century, the Catholic Church shared with the Zoroastrians their horror for all idols, images, and altars. In the fifth century, the Church began accepting the doctrine of purgatory and early in the seventh this became established dogma.

And there were at least three other elements which Catholic Christianity drew from or shared with Zoroastrianism:

- first, an utter intolerance toward all other religions and the conviction that these were devil-cults;
- second, the demand on the part of the priesthood to be civil lawgivers as well as the masters of religious ritual and ceremonial; and,
- third, adoption of the Zoroastrian Ahriman and his creatures as the Christian devil and his imps, wizards, witches, and werewolves.

The Church took this infernal character to its heart and made of him the cornerstone of its speculative system.

CONCLUSION

Needless to say not all of the above contributions to Judeo-Christianity have proven good nor are they correct when compared to the earliest understanding of God and Ethical Monotheism on this planet as held by those who coined these concepts in the beginning; the Egyptians. I find without a doubt that after study of this Persian faith as it evolved into Judeo-Christianity that if one wants to get to the original concepts held by the earliest civilization concerning much of the religious beliefs that Persia adopted and later changed then one must begin his study with Egypt and their understanding of this Ethical Monotheism in its earliest form. Only then as one notes these beliefs in their inception and follows them in their transmutation over time can one come to understand for himself how the earliest and simplest messages of God were altered beyond recognition by successive conquering nations. I will leave that up to you...the reader.

WERE THERE HEBREW PHARAOHS OF EGYPT?

Over the many years of my study into the "Jewish Roots" of Christianity I kept finding that almost all roads of investigation led eventually to Egypt. Let me give you some examples:

We are more than likely familiar with the following Psalm

"How many are your works, O LORD! In wisdom you made them all; the earth is full of your creatures." - Psalm 104:24

Answer for yourself: But are you aware that we find in Egypt the following Psalm?

"How manifold are thy works! They are hidden before men Oh sole God, beside whom there is no other. Thou didst create earth according to thy heart." -Amenhotep IV (Akhenaton) from Rosicrucian Question and Answers, p. 55

This is not the only similarity I assure you. Now for something absolutely incredible. Egypt was familiar with "the Word of God" long before there were ever a Jewish people. "The idea of messages materializing out of marks on stone amazed ordinary people and the scribes who could make 'stone talk' were considered to be holders of great magic. This is easily appreciated when one realizes that the Egyptians called hieroglyphics 'the Words of the God', a term that would often be repeated throughout the Bible." - Christopher Knight & Robert Lomas, The Hiram Key: Pharaohs, Freemasons and the Discovery of the Secret Scrolls of Jesus.

The more I began to study Egypt the more my eyes were opened to the Egyptian influence upon the later Jewish nation and the ever evolving Judeo-Christianity that we are familiar with today. Everyone knows that Egypt existed long before the Abraham of the Bible and his family. This make my following discovery all the more significant for the Egyptian religious influence upon Abraham and the Jewish nation is undeniable.

Five of the Ten Commandments which would be later delivered from Mount Sinai to Moses can be found in the ancient Egyptian Book of the Dead.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain....Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery...Thou shalt not bear false witness against they neighbor..." - Exodus 20: 7-16

But look at this:

'Not have I despised god...Not have I killed...Not have I fornicated...Not have I despoiled the thing of the god...not have I defiled the wife of a man...Not have I cursed god...Not have I borne false witness'. - Egyptian Book of the Dead

"...Chapter CXXV of the ancient Egyptian Book of the Dead...consisted on a series of negative confessions that the soul of the deceased was obliged to make before Thoth in his capacity as divine judge and scribe. A rubric to one part of the Book of the Dead...stated: This chapter (the expression of negative commandments and laws similar to the later Jewish Torah) was found on an alabaster brick, under the feet of the Majesty of this venerable place, the God Thoth, and it was written by the God himself'...The Ark of the Covenant (which contained similar laws and commandments) had frequently been referred to in the Bible as the 'footstool of God' (e.g. I Chronicles 28:2) and...it contained the stone Tablets of the Law written by Yahweh's own finger." - Graham Hancock, The Sign and the Seal.

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence? Could the Ark of the Covenant be a copy from Egyptian religion? In fact if you study you find that it is.

You are beginning to see as I did that the more one studies the more one sees that there is a "hidden link" between the Jewish race and Egypt that lays beneath the conventional accounts of the Bible and the Judeo-Christian faith. It would take me several years to find these "links" and put the whole puzzle together regarding the hidden relationship between Egypt and the Hebrews which lays hidden both in history and the texts of the Old Testament. It would be during the 5 years of study devoted to Egypt that this information would come forth and I would find the true identity of the "Biblical Jews" which most Jews and African American people today are unaware. This is especially important for the Jewish nation for the Biblical Jews were black skinned and the children of Egypt. Today we have the proselytes from Europe and the Eastern Hemisphere which occupy the nation of Palestine while the "black Jew" is found in Africa and Ethiopia. This revelation and knowledge and implications to me was nothing short of astounding and you, the reader, will certainly agree if you continue to study the articles in this series.

My first class in Seminary that beginning summer of 1985 was a class devoted to the study of the Book of Proverbs. It was in that class that I learned that though Solomon's name is traditionally attached to the entire book, it is clear from 22:17; 24:23; 30:1 that unidentified wise men, as well as two who are identified as Agur and Lemuel, also shared in the composition of the book. There I discovered that there are three Solomonic collections in the book (1:1, 10:1, 25:1). Since Solomon authored most of the book, the attachment of his name to it is warranted by most Christian scholars. That of course is what I was taught by the good Baptist folks but that was before I began to study Egypt on my own and find that the Biblical Solomon is indeed a Pharaoh named Amenhotep III. This will be the beginning of my Exodus from Christianity ironically when I just began my Seminary training but I did not recognize it as of yet. That would come later when I would discover the "truth" behind the Religion I inherited.

I came to understand that Egyptian Proverbs were a very important part of the Ancient religion of Egypt, one of the main religious concepts the Egyptians had was "know thyself." Their spiritual aspect of this concept held that within man is the divine essence of the Creator and the Heavens. And this finds expression in their teaching: "The kingdom of heaven is within you; and whosoever shall know himself shall find it.". Proverbs were held as a teaching method for a man to understand the universe, thus they were inscribed in temples and tombs of Egypt, these inscriptions might be the first "Holy Book" known by man.

Before we close this introduction I wish to provoke your thinking a little. David and Solomon are portrayed in the Bible as two of the greatest kings of the ancient world.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that no trace of their empire has ever been found in Palestine? Let that sink in.

The David and Solomon eras are periods curiously missing from the archaeological record of the region where one should expect to find archeological evidence as to its existence! Quoting from the book, Archaeology of the Land of the Bible, "The Bible is the only written source concerning the United Monarchy, and it is therefore the basis of any historical presentation of the period" (Mazar, Archaeology of the Land of the Bible, 369). There is such a complete void of external sources that the archaeologist, author and leading authority on the era, Donald Redford, writes in frustration that "such topics as the foreign policy of David and Solomon, Solomon's trade in horses or his marriage to Pharaoh's daughter must remain themes for midrash and fictional treatment" (Redford, Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times, 310).

Answer for yourself: Don't you find it rather interesting and a matter of concern that archaeology has confirmed the reigns of all other great kings of the ancient world mentioned in the Bible, and some of the later, lesser kings of of Judah and Israel (namely, Omri, Ahab, Jehu, Pekah, Hosea, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Mannasseh, and Uzziah) but cannot confirm the Kingship of David or Solomon?

Of course when questioned about this inconsistency typical Christian and Jewish responses vary around the conservative response that it is only a matter of time before concrete evidence of the reigns of David and Solomon will be found as well.

I am here to inform the reader that such evidence does already exits but as you will find it won't be found in Palestine but in Egypt and in a different era. Concrete evidence for David and Solomon already exists, and comes from the very place one would least expect to find it; namely Egypt. Of course we don't find the names "David" or "Solomon" but we do find the same exploits described in the Hebrew texts accredited to Thutmose III and Amenhotep III. Now we will find that that neither this "King David" or "King Solomon" were Hebrews for they were Egyptian Pharoahs but the son of this "King Solomon/Amenhotep III" with the daugher of Joseph (Tiye) will have Hebrew blood in him. This son will later be Pharoah of Egypt and lead this great Exodus. We will see that in time.

You can now imagine how I was startled in Seminary when reading the Anchor Bible Commentary - Proverbs when they mentioned that these proverbs in the Hebrew Bible were believed to be attributed to Solomon whose real name was Amenhotep III of Egypt! That was the beginning of my "critical thinking" and no longer could I just "accept" what I had been told since being a child in my Christian Church. I had to have the truth I was determined to get it at all costs because I did not want to believe lies about God and my relationship with Him and if my religious literature was less than reliable then I would find out why and get to the bottom of it. This took me years but today I have plumed the depth of it and continue to study to seek out every elusive truths concerning the Creator which remain hidden in antiquity buried beneath the sands and time of Egypt.

The story of Egyptian religion and the hidden Egyptian influence upon Judaism and later Christianity is absolutely fascinating and challenging to the very core and it is to this uncovering of the Hebrew Pharaohs of Egypt that we now turn.

BET EMET MINISTRIES.....THE "CD" AND HOW TO USE IT PROPERLY IN YOUR STUDIES

Greetings...from one "truth seeker" to another.

I want to personally thank you for requesting our CD, the collection of our studies at Bet Emet Ministries into the origins of Christianity and the hidden truths behind "the Christ" which are not taught today but have been with mankind since the beginning of time. I wish to personally thank your for your support of our ministry and your prayers for our endeavors in trying to restore this hidden wisdom to mankind which has been deprived from us today by Christian censorship down through Church History.

I know this amount of information and knowledge can be overwhelming at times but remember this is a collection of my studies into the origins of Christianity and "the Christ" totaling almost twenty years. What you must keep in focus in such a study is that when ALL of the present knowledge is sifted looking for truth using as unbiased "scientific method" as possible then we find that down through history the spiritual masters of our race have understood "this Christ" that dwells within us as the manifestation of God and Creator in 2 basic ways:

- The Mystical Christ...every nation has had a different "name" for this same Spiritual Concept that dwells within man (Horus, Osiris, Dionysus, Krishna, Attis, Adonis, Mithra, Quetzalcoatl, Jesus, etc).
- The Mythical Christ...these above Metaphysical concepts were expressed by the Spiritual Masters of antiquity in allegories, metaphors, myths, and legends handed down since time began. We see the same idea of the transfer of this Spiritual information being transferred to mankind in both the "lesser" and "greater" mysteries of the priesthoods of the ancient religions; even the Jesus' example shows us this type of instruction as seen in the "parables" for the common folk and then the disciples being taken into the "mountains" for a "higher consciousness" and understanding of these Metaphysical ideas of Spirit and its "impregnation" into "matter" and its "indwelling" within humanity. This again we must remember all occurs "within the human being" and that the "Kingdom of God" is within humanity not outside humanity. This is the core of the ideas of God incarnated within all humanity; not limited to but one person as Rome will later devise.

Over time we find that from these above two methods of interpretation of God and His Christ, His Divine Mind "within us", all of which were allegorical for Divine Metaphysical concepts, that there developed a 3rd interpretation of "the Christ" at the hands of Rome during the 2nd through the 5th century:

- The "Historical" and "Literal" Christ as confined to but one person.

No matter how far you go back in time and no matter in what nation you look you find that the first, and in my opinion, the most correct understanding of God and His relationship to "matter", ie., mankind, is found with ancient Egypt and the nations that learned of the Creator from them. It is here we find "the Mystical Krst/Karest/Christ" and the "Mythical Krst/Karest/Christ" and when correctly understood and this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom correctly interpreted, once these "keys" are restored, one comes to see that these most ancient religious beliefs and understandings of the Divine and the Deific Mind of the Universe as taught by ancient Egypt, the fathers of the later Jewish nation, hold the greatest understanding and secrets of "God" Deific that exist on our planet even yet today. Opinions on Egypt are divided today but there are scholars emerging today that challenge the current mistaken understanding of Egypt expressed by such current voices as Mark Lerher and Z. Hawass and these modern scholars are restoring the greatness and understanding of Egypt as the world's first monotheistic nation which we see when correctly these "keys" to the understanding the Ancient concepts of God and the Egyptian "Karast" and "Christ" are restored. This ancient Egyptian "Krst" we call "the Christ" today and this "Divine Spiritual Allegory" is the prototype for all later "Christ stories" and "Sungod stories" which are only "allegorical" for the indwelling God and Divine Mind (Christ) within the whole of humanity awaiting "awakening from the dead". Thus the first Bible of mankind was called the Egyptian Book of the Dead; mankind being dead to his true Self and Divinity. You will come to see in time that all of these prior Spiritual Allegories of the Decent of the Soul, the Deific Mind of God into "matter/flesh" were in 2nd through the 5th century "radically reinterpreted" by Rome into a supposed "literal-historical" personage called "Jesus" and to which Rome attached the supposed "only way of Salvation" for mankind and then created a Sacred Book we call the Bible to espouse their false concepts and altered Spiritual Wisdom of the ancients.

Well, we begin our study of this story of the Divine "Krst in mankind" over 15,000 years ago and archeology today is overturning the erroneous understandings we have inherited handed down from that time and and erroneous religious beliefs today which are largely due to Roman religious "reinterpretation" of this Ancient Divine Wisdom and their censorship of this prior "Spiritual Truth" down through church history. It even exists today but is weakening in this Information Age which is beginning to shine the "light of truth" upon the religious deception of Rome over the last 1,800 years. As your studies grow in these areas and as you begin the studies of our Websites you will see progressively why such studies and undeniable facts and information challenge to our very core our traditional Christian dogmas and "religious beliefs". The light of truth once again shines and the student can now see how these Ancient Spiritual Fathers understood God and His Cosmos and His Christ for over 10,000 years in an unbroken succession of "beliefs" and then knowing this then contrast it with Rome's "radical reinterpretation" of it all aided by the burning of all of the world's major libraries to cover up their deception. You will, now being equipped with the "first Divine Truth" see for yourself how what we have been taught today about the "historical Christ" and the "historical Jesus" from Rome with their Second New Testament cannot hold up to scrutiny in light of the prior unbroken understanding of the nation's "Christ Stories" which parallel our "Jesus Story"; all of these stories again now being seen as they were understood by all....Divine Allegories never taken by anyone to be "historical" and "literal". They described "mankind's condition" that is unique not to one but to all of humanity. This limitation of the Divine Mind and "Christ" to but one person is the great Roman lie to which they tied the whole of salvation of mankind and of course in so doing made sure that such salvation only comes through the doors of the Roman Church. Through fear, ignorance, and a complete "radical reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom the mind-control of humanity under the influence of Rome was now complete.

Being born into Christianity we inherited a "Literalistic" interpretation of almost everything we read in the Bible never knowing without serious study that this book was at best as an allegory placed in the historical development of the Jewish people (the biological children of Egypt). We, not knowing this, read this book with "literal glasses" never realizing that what we were reading were at best "blurred" religious concepts of the Ancients which they never interpreted "literally" but only "allegorically" or "metaphorically" but yet even at that when understood as "allegories" they expressed a "literal" Divine Truth which has come to be almost burred beyond recognition today in this "literalistic" understanding which is forced upon the texts; a radical "reinterpretation" enforced by Rome between the 2nd and the 5th centuries. Once the texts were "doctored" then almost all hope and "keys" to the proper interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom was lost to the "average" person. We must never forget that when told through the medium of legend and myth the identities of many of the characters of which we read were but anthropomorphic vehicles designed to express such Heavenly truths and were to be understood not as if "real people" or "historical characters". In other words these "gods" and "goddesses" and "godmen" were never real but expression of the "godman" in each of us when we come to understand that man truly is the "Temple of God" or the "Temple of the Holy Spirit". We are the Divine Himself trapped in matter through the Descent of the Soul from Heaven to matter....flesh. These concepts began with Egypt as did most of what we have hear taught in our churches today in one way or the other although most often than not they have lost their original understanding as taught by the Ancients who first gave mankind these Divine messages and truths. We have lost so much through the "literalization" of these Divine Allegories and Myths. That is why I present in Bet Emet the beginning studies and websites with a "literalistic" method of interpretation as that is where we both began our pilgrimage to God in our birth faith of Christianity. We must have a point of reference to where we are "at" in our lives at present. In so doing I chose to use this inherited "literalistic" method of interpretation to help the "babes in Christ" grow to see at first, for example, the beauty of Judaism as the legacy of Egypt since it is the best and truest expression of these Ancient religious beliefs and revelation of these Ancient Spiritual Masters that we have existing today in the world in my opinion. In this way we contrast the Hebrew "texts" with the forgery of them later in the Greek and later English translations of our Bibles done so in order to give a "literalist" view to this previous existing Divine Spiritual Allegories. In this way we can begin to see how our Christian Texts are "forged" in "very important places" and this purposeful mistranslation, misquotation, and pure invention of "Scripture" was done on purpose to distort the previous Divine Allegories and make it appear as if they were "historically" interpreted previously which our and your study will show you that they were not; not until the 2nd through the 5 century when Rome became the "forgery mill". There is no "literal" "godman" in Judaism unlike Christianity; their hoped for Messiah was only a "human being" anointed by God for a special task and he never appeared according to Judaism. Therefore there exists in Judaism no threat of idolatry unlike what we innocently inherited with our Roman Christianity and Protestantism and their "literalistic" and "historical" interpretation of this prior Spiritual Religious Allegory of the ancients. This enforced "literalism" of these Divine Concepts by Rome over this 300 year period of early Christian history is to be understood not as a blessing but as a curse when your depth of study advances to see the "Gnostic Christ" within which by the way modern scholarship teaches us today was the earliest understanding of "the Christ" or "God within mankind" as held by both Jewish and non-Jewish Gnostic Christians in the early Church. Let us not be so naive to not know that winners of wars write history from "their view" and that this has been done by Rome and the world fed "their book"...the New Testament which an insightful reader would notice the blending of both the "Gnostic Christ within" and the later created "historical Christ without". Rome should have done a better job editing it as they left trace evidences as to their forgery in the very texts they "doctored" over the early centuries. Archeology and the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls testifies to this Greek forgery in the beginning and the later incorporation of it into the Rome Bibles to which Rome only continued to contribute in their anti-Jewish and antinomian "reinterpretation" of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom which was built upon God's Order and Laws of the Cosmos which promote and maintain harmony between Heaven and Earth (mankind).

I use the "literal" method of interpretation in reaching the student "in the beginning" of our studies with the knowledge he needs concerning such areas of study found in the early websites which deal with Judaism vs Christianity, the Covenant of Noah, the Biblical Pattern of Worship as best expressed today for the non-Jew again as found in Judaism which is without the taint of idolatry, the adulteration and corruption of Christian Scriptures, both the Old and New Testaments, the Roman Re-interpreted Paul Problem, issues of the Messiah and Messianism as viewed from Judaism vs Christianity, Messianic prophecies, Daniel's 70 weeks prophecy, the Essenes and their corruption of the Hebrew Scriptures when they translated them into the Greek LXX, and finally the introduction of sunworship as applied to the Christian Jesus and his depiction in our New Testament. All of these sites are approached with a "literal" view in order to contrast the current understanding and teaching of them as viewed from the Christian viewpoint vs the contrasting points of view as we look at what exists concerning these same "religious views" and "religious beliefs" outside of the Christian viewpoint and how they were viewed before this Roman "literal reinterpretation"; in particular when looking at Judaism and literal sun worship. In so doing we see the contrasts as well as parallels that bring into question the validity and reliability of what we have received as Christian truth through "church tradition" and "Christian doctrine" and "Christian theology" concerning these above issues. This is done to make you THINK! I truly believe that if God is not the author of confusion then this expose has to be blamed on man...ie, primarily Rome and their replacement religion of Christianity of the 2nd through the 5th century, which took the place of Biblical Judaism for both the Jew and the non-Jew. Of great importance is the contrast of the "literal understanding" of the Sungods and Sunworship with the Christian Jesus. This is done to show the reader that there is very little if any difference between the Sungods of the Ancients, their stories, their lives, and their sayings and the Roman presentation of Jesus. We will come to see that unlike before, when these Sungods were NEVER understood as if "literal-historical" people that Rome will through their "reinterpretation" of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom completely "reinterpret" these Sungods as personification of the Descent of the Soul into mankind into a supposed "historical-literal" Savior (Jesus) to which the Salvation of the whole human race depends. Now you see how this "literal" interpretation must be used first to see and expose such plagiarism and the deception to which we have fallen as Christians who are taught since childhood to believe in one book "only"; the book that Rome forced upon the world at the point of a sword.

That is quite a study in itself; one which exposes the crafty manipulation of ancient Spiritual Texts and their later forgery and sad "reinterpretation" that allowed Rome to deceive millions and millions down through history. Such mind-control has never been found to this extent in the history of this planet and it passes for "Orthodoxy" Sunday after Sunday and few if any ever find the clarity of vision to even question it.

After seeing these things we move to a deeper understanding of "the Christ" when we look at Gnostic Christianity and their "Gnostic Christ"; the "Christ Within" which I believe to be not only the same understanding of "God Within" mankind as taught by these Ancients but the correct interpretation of "the Christ" as first held by the earliest followers of "the Christ" before he was "literalized", "carnalized", and "historicized" by Rome after the Jewish War of 70 A.D. It is here we vindicate the Paul which Rome previously mischaracterized. We vindicate the "real Gnostic Paul" now understanding that our previous attack upon him was due to Paul's presentation by Christianity as promoting a "historical and fleshly" Christ which in reality he did not. Now the real Paul can be seen and his 7 authentic epistles understood correctly and his religious views concerning "the Christ within" be exalted and promoted and given credit where credit is due but laurels to Paul can ONLY come after you have come to see the big difference between an "internalized Christ" and an "external Christ" made by Rome's forgery of his epistles and letters long after his death. We help contrast this "Roman reinterpretation" of Gnosticism and the Gnostic Paul with the earlier "Romanized Paul". This is why I take great pains to contrast the Hebrew Scriptures and religious teachings vs the "Roman Pauline Christology and theology" that we have inherited in our forged Christian Bibles and New Testaments. Let us not forget that the Roman New Testament is a "second edition" and "re-editing" of the prior Gnostic New Testament that NEVER taught a "literal-historical Christ". As I show you these earlier Gnostic Christians taught this same Ancient Spiritual Wisdom inherited since Ancient Egypt. Rome has done Paul a great disservice and dishonored his ministry and name for almost 2000 years presently and few know it due to their lack of study in these critical areas concerning the "Mystical Christ" and the "Gnostic Christ" within. It is in these studies we contrast the "literal interpretation" of "the Christ" (our first studies on this CD) with the "allegorical" interpretation of the Christ which we show goes back to the beginning of time as delineated on our Egypt Christian website as well as the Marcion New Testament Gnostic website. It is here that I expose the fallacy of the "literal" interpretation of "the Christ" and the deceptions behind the "historical Jesus" as a literary creation of Rome when they "carnalized the Christ within" over the 2nd through the 5th century of the emerging Gentile Church. It is here we don't hold back and with prior conditioning of the student and reader by study of the earlier websites I expose the sad facts that an unbiased study of History will show you that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence or any untampered or unforged evidence anywhere that the "Jesus Story" as we received it by Rome in their "book/Bible" originated as the biography of a man named Jesus, and quite a lot of evidence that it did not. Outside of this one forged book, the Roman Bible and the New Testament, there exists not one piece of unforged or unadulterated evidence for the historical existence of this man from Galilee. I go on to show the reader that an unbiased through study of Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology will reveal to you that the basic plot of the Jesus Story, from beginning to end, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions thousands of years prior to the alleged time of Jesus and if you continue such dedicated studies into the Astronomy and Solar Mythology websites you will find that beyond any doubt the "Jesus Story" is nothing more than an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the path of the Sun through the celestial sphere and the 12 Houses of the Zodiac during the year. Personification of the Sun through the sky, the Equinoxes and Solstices, (symbolic of the Divine Living Energy of the Cosmos that the Ancients called "God"), as found in the story of ancient solar and lunar gods, follow in chronological procession through the year, the exact chronology of the "Jesus Story" when personified from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew 28. Here you see for yourself that again our "Jesus Story" is nothing more than the personification of God's Sun, a symbol of Himself that ancient religions understood was symbolic for a Living Intelligent Energy which is this Cosmos itself.

For an educated man or woman to believe that all of this knowledge and evidence is but "coincidence" and there yet exits a "literal-historical" Jesus to which mankind's salvation depends stretches belief beyond limits of sanity. Besides any serious study of Egypt will show you that this "Jesus Story" existed on 2 levels: the Mystical and the Mythical and did so as far back as 10,000 B.C.E. Only later will Rome come and reinterpret these Divine Truths and forge them into a Historical time line with a fictitious person and in so doing destroy the Ancient truths and Divine Revelation given the Ancients who first developed these "religious doctrines" in the first place. So when you see this, and I mean all of this, then there is no room for a "Historical Jesus". Sad but true. Yet to teach these truths of ethics and morality that is found in the "mind of Christ" to the Gentiles due to the preconditioning of a Jesus-centric faith into which we are born it is necessary to teach through the vehicle of this "Jesus" as our example of the "indwelling Christ" and in so doing slowly begin to widen the scope of the reader's learning and gradually introduce him to these other concepts and origins of the "Mystical and Mythical" Christ and slowly expose the Historical Jesus for what it is; namely, just an ancient Spiritual allegory which was later literalized by forgery of previous ancient religious texts and a drastic "reinterpretation" of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom as we find in Rome's New Testament in their grand scheme of replacement religion. Sadly Egypt is destroyed today but her children and her truths live among her children, the Jewish nation and Biblical and Rabbinic Judaism. If you want to find the Messiah to come and the "mind of Christ" it is paramount to "unlearn" the errors you have been taught and begin to restore these ancient Divine Truths to their splendor as they once were when the truth was taught about the "Christ Within" by these early Chrestian/Christian Gnostics let alone much earlier in Judaism and ancient Egypt. Only in this way can we see clearly that this Jesus, even in as corrupted view that we received him from Rome, can yet be an "example to be emulated" but for this to happen where God's true salvation message to mankind is no longer connected to some supposed "historical-literal" person who never existed then then we must begin to look into Judaism and into Egyptian religious teachings as they existed before the rise of the Roman Empire. For it is opinion, after all of these years of study, that it is there we find "the mind of Egyptian Karast (Krst)" who is the original Christ, and it is here that we find that the Egyptian mysteries were continued by the Gnostic Christians and the authentic Paul who only wrote 7 epistles and who never taught a "fleshly Jesus Christ". Only when Rome forged the later anti-Gnostic religious writings is Paul given credit for belief in a "historical Christ" which again I and other scholars point out was never his belief nor the belief of any before the early 2nd century with the rise of "some" of the Early Church fathers which received the ancient "oral tradition" to which they begin to give a "drastic" reinterpretation like Ignatius and Justin Martyr and later Irenaeus. But that time it is too late to stop this juggernaut of error we call "literalistic" Roman Christianity and the Dark Ages are the result of such tragic misinterpretation of earlier Divine Wisdom. Only later do we tragically find that these metaphysical concepts revealing God to man, as coming down through recorded history from Egypt, to be destroyed when "literalized", "carnalized", and "Christianized" in Rome.

But some might wonder and ask "where did all this come from originally"? Well I deal with that also in revealing the "Mythical Christ" as taken from Astronomy and Astrology of the Ancients as they read the stars and Heavens and saw within them and the movements of the Cosmos the varied messages of the Creator to mankind as interpreted in the cycles, patterns, the path of the Sun, moon, planets, stars, constellations, risings, settings, eclipses, etc. We will eventually get to the study of the uranograph which is so fascinating. It is all there and the wonder never stops as these Ancient Spiritual Masters saw and understood "Divine Messages" in the Heavens which they brought down to earth and applied to the Soul of mankind and its pilgrimage and development into this "Karastlikeness" or "Christlikeness" which the Creator intended for mankind and his Spiritual Evolution.

All of this might sound impossible to one now who is not well versed in such areas of study mentioned above but believe me these teaching will take your breath away as you see the depth of spirituality of our Ancients compared with the religious fare we are fed today from our Christian pulpits and TV. If you ever wondered "where is the beef" you have found it here I promise you and the recommended book list on Egypt will feed you forever.

In closing it needs to be said that in approaching these sites it is best that you first read the attachment "websites" as I have reworked this presentation and it exists today as a "plan-o-gram" for your studies on the CD from beginning to end. it can be accessed at: http://www.christianjewishbible.netfirms.com Following this "plan-o-gram" will lead you from the beginning of our studies where we contrast various themes of study first using a "literal" hermeneutic in order to see if it can hold up to scholarly scrutiny of such study. Let me tell you right up front that it cannot; in other words what we have been taught in our "literal" and "historical" presentation of the "Jesus Story" cannot hold up to scholarly investigation when comparing many of our inherited Christian ideas and "spiritual concepts" as taken from our Roman Bibles are compared to modern scholarship let alone the pre-existing Hebrew Scriptures which state otherwise which are so tragically and purposefully misrepresented in our Christian Bibles. Let us never forget that our "religious beliefs" are based upon the "texts" and if our "texts" can be shown to be unreliable or forgeries then we have the cause for further study to find the "truth" now realizing maybe for the first time in seeing this information that "we don't have the truth". This is not "news" to the Jews who have for over 2,000 years denied the "literal" and "historical" Jesus as their "Messiah". But is "news" to the Christian Church and only so because we "studied" what was taken for granted by most. We approach many different thematic studies by this approach seeing if what we have told is "true" by our Christian tradition and texts and comparing these "beliefs" with other information that brings it into severe question. When hundreds of such things and "beliefs" which are taken for granted by most because they are "in our Christian Bible" are shown to be purposeful forgeries, purposeful mistranslations, purposeful misquotations, and pure Scriptural inventions when compared with the previous Hebrew Scriptures, then our "Literal" and "Historical Jesus", Rome's only way for man's salvation, fades into the background of a list of Roman deceptions too long to enumerate in this one article. But the "good news" and "great news" is that now our minds are open to consider these "higher truths" the eclipse Rome's perverted "gospel" and we begin to look for the first time at what really "lies behind our Jesus Story" which we can no longer believe to be limited to but one person or be "literal" or "historical". Now we find the highest Spiritual Truth ever given mankind that is hidden even in the teachings of this Jewish Christ. Here we find the "mystical" and later "mythological" and "metaphysical" interpretation of these Ancient Spiritual Wisdoms and their "Mystical Christs" that only dwell within mankind awaiting awakening. This is the only God man ever knew which Rome sent far into the heavens and in so doing separated mankind from God when the ancients always knew man and God are "ONE". This is the best way in my opinion to approach these varied subjects in order where you move from our inherited supposed "historical" view of "Christ Jesus" to the truer "Mystical Christ" and finally to the "Mythical Christ/Metaphysical Christ" which lives "in you" and in so doing keep an organized pattern of such study in order that the study does not get "lost" in such great amounts of information. Understand that this Spiritual deception of mankind by Rome did not occur overnight; it took centuries and no full disclosure of such deception and apostasy from Divine Truth and restoration of Divine Truth can be handled in just a few articles. This restoration of mankind to its True Self and Divinity by which he discovers that he is the incarnation of God's Divine Mind and "Christ" is the goal or all our studies and it can be accomplished quite easily if you do as I recommend and take these studies in order. We begin with a false premise of "literal" and "historical" and proving it a fallacy then we move to the "Mystical", "Mythological" and "Metaphysical" where the Divine Truth of God and man shines like the dawning Sun. It will only require your desire and time to accomplish these studies in full. This is the greatest truth mankind has ever lost and the hope of mankind's future. It is time for the truth and as a retired Pastor with no ambition for a big ministry but for "truth" then this is my gift to those who want to worship God in "Spirit" and in "Truth" the way it is supposed to be done and was done by the ancients who shame our Christian expression of our faith today. We have a lot of "unlearning" to do and a lot of "correct instruction" to comprehend if you want these truths to become alive in your life so lets begin.

Also attached in our websites is our "recommended book list" which you can find at: http://www.christianjewishbible.netfirms.com/recommended_books.htm This "recommended book list" shows you where you can go to examine these findings for yourself and I recommend many good books which I own and have devoured over these last 20 years. I have tried to acquire each of these books in my personal library and from them gleamed these hidden truths which I give you in these websites. I leave you with my blessings and again thank you for your gift and support of our small and humble attempt to restore the truth concerning God and His Christ in mankind to the world as He was first revealed to mankind in the beginning of recorded history before greed, ambition, antisemitism, and the agendas of men and religious politics robbed us of such wonderful truths concerning "the Christ within", our True Being!

Now when you get the CD there are several websites "listed". Open one at a time in the "order" given on the "website" attachment and follow the flow of "thought" from beginning to end to keep your study on track and organized. Remember we begin with a "literal" approach because that is what we are taught in Christianity as children and grow up with that mindset. Only by disproving that the "literal" and "historical" approach to the "Jesus Christ" is a falsehood can we ever hope of breaking down in our minds the walls of resistance and erroneously instruction we have most likely received our whole lives. Only then can we be objective as to the truth behind the "Mystical" and "Mythological" and "Metaphysical" truths that lie behind the texts of our Bible and New Testament which were never meant to be interpreted as if "literal" in the ways they have due to Rome's efforts. As you get to the later websites then the Divine Truths of such an interpretation of "the Christ" only as "Mystical" and "Mythological" and "Metaphysical" can be appreciated and seen for the Divine Truths that they always have held for mankind. After each "site" is opened "in order" then look for an "index" file. We are not looking for an "index.hmp" or an "index with a red logo that has a red 'IM' on it". We are looking for just a plain "index" with a logo on the left of it that is like so many other "logos" or "articles" in the same website as grouped together. Just "click" on this "index" and it opens to the "home page" of the website which is placed on the Internet. From this "index" most if not all the websites on the CD will go to a "second page" that follows the "introduction". It if from this "second page" that you will find your highway to other articles in each websites. The journey to truth is not short but remember that "Truth is the highest Religion ever given man by God". Now the rest is up to you. Enjoy.

Blessings

CONSTANTINE THE GREAT....ROMAN EMPEROR....SUN-WORSHIPPER... 307-337 A.D.

In 325 A.D. the Roman Catholic Church was created by a pagan emperor named Constantine. It was only superficially a Christian Church. The First Nicean Council as assembled to work out the details. While it was supposed to have been made up of Christian elders from five major Christian centers (Rome, Athens, Alexandria, Jerusalem and Antioch), it also included elders of all the major Pagan religions of Rome. Bishops from the cults of Mithras, Tammuz, Oannes (Dagon), Ceres, Janus, Bacchus, Apollo, Osiris, Jupiter, and Constantine's own religion: Sol Invictus, were invited. It was Constantine's wish that all of the Pagan religions, then at odds with each other, creating unneccesary conflicts, be unified into one "Catholic" church. "Catholic" means universal. The proceedings of that council were conducted by Constantine with an iron hand, and one of the positions which he insisted upon, and got, was to make Pistis a doctrine of the new church. Gnosticism could not be tolerated, because it encouraged its members to question authority. Pistis was thus politically expedient, because it forbade questioning.

This is a very common copper coin of the Roman emperor Constantine the Great who ruled 307 to 337 AD. This coin is 23 millimeters in diameter (almost an inch, like a quarter). It says his name and three titles on the obverse reading clockwise (the legend begins at 8:00):

CONSTANTINVS P F AVG

(The spaces between words do not usually appear on Roman coins.) Roman names usually end in "VS" which is the Roman way of writing "us" (as in the names Marcus and Lucius). We call him "Constantine," they called him "Constantinvs".

In the legend, "P F" abbreviates "Pius", which means "pious" or "dutiful", and "Felix," which means "happy". Finally, "AVG" abbreviates "Augustus", which is the Roman title for "emperor". Again, the "V" shape serves as the modern letter "u".

The reverse depicts a standing figure of Sol, the sun god, naked but for a cloak, raising his right hand in blessing and holding a globe in his left hand. Constantine invoked the support of the sun god before he converted to Christianity. Can you make out the letters in the reverse legend? It is around (beginning at 7:00), with PLG below, and S and F in the fields to the left and right of Sol. The legend translates to "Sol, invincible comrade (of Constantine)." The "PLG" mark is a mint mark of Lugdunum, now the modern Lyons in southern France. No one knows what the extra symbols S and F in the field mean, but they do distinguish this issue of coins from other similar issues.

So what we have here is evidence that although Constantine professed Christianity he maintained his pagan religious beliefs in the Sun-gods as well. This influence will be felt mightily at the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. for it is here, under Constantine's influence that the Jewish Jesus, and his faith, is transformed and made to mimic the already existing Gentile Pagan religious beliefs as held by Constantine.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST AS RECORDED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT....IS IT A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Answer for yourself: Would you think it strange if you found out that the time of the birth of many of the incarnated Gods and Saviors of antiquity was fixed at the same period, and this period known as the 25th of December, was celebrated all over Christendom as the birthday of Jesus Christ?

This is all the more strange when you discover that this period formerly dated the birth of a new year -- the birth of King Sol. And when we find that the ancient pagans were in the habit of celebrating this venerated the twenty-fifth of December as the birthday of their Gods in the same manner Christians now celebrate it as the birthday of Christ, we are driven to admit that something more than a mere fluky accident must be offered to account for this coincidence! Let see what it is!

Answer for yourself: Would a judical court, once knowing the facts of the matter, accept such as truth concerning Jesus Christ? What are the facts of this matter? Let us see what they are.

THE TESTIMONY OF SCHOLARS...WHAT DO THEY KNOW THAT WE DON'T?

According to Dr. Lightfoot, the temple of Jerusalem was employed in celebrating the birthday of a pagan God (Adonis) on the very night Christians assign for the birth of Christ.

The Reverend Robert Taylor (Diegesis) informs us that nearly all the nations of the East were once in the habit of rising at midnight to celebrate the birthday of their Gods, on the twenty-fifth of December. And to this statement Mr. Higgins adds that, "At the first moment after midnight of the twenty-fourth of December, the ancient nations celebrated the accouchement of the queen of heaven and celestial virgin, and the birth of the God Sol, the Infant Savior, and the God of Day" (Graves, The Sixteen Crucified Saviors, chapter 8)."

THE ROLL CALL IS IMPRESSIVE

Bacchus of Egypt, Bacchus of Greece, Adonis of Greece, Chrishna of India, Chang-ti of China, Chris of Chaldea, Mithra of Persia, Sakia of India, Jao Wapaul (a crucified Savior of ancient Britain), were all born on the twenty-fifth of December, according to their respective histories. Chrishna is represented to have been born at midnight on the twenty-fifth of the month Savarana, which answers to our December, and millions of his disciples celebrated his birthday by decorating their houses with garlands and gilt paper, and the bestowment of presents to friends. The Rev. Mr. Barret tells us, "It was once common for the women in Rome to perambulate the streets on the twenty-fifth of December, singing in a loud voice, "Unto us a child is born this day."

The twenty-fifth of December, then, it will be observed, was marked as the birthday of the incarnated Gods, Saviors, and Sons of God, of many of the religious systems of antiquity, long prior to the birth of Christ.

And why the birth of this Christ was fixed at that date is not hard to account for. You just have to know a little Astronomy and then you see it very plainly.

According to the celebrated Christian writer Mr. Goodrich, the Christian world had no chronology and recorded no dates for several centuries after the commencement of the Christian era (Goodrich, History of all Nations, p. 23.) No event of Christian history was marked by dates for nearly four hundred years. Hence, the time of Christ's birth is altogether a matter of conjecture, as is also every other event noticed in the Christian bible. This is proved by the fact that the ablest Christian writers and chronologists differ to the extent of thirty-five hundred years in fixing the time of every event in the bible. Kennedy presents us with three hundred different chronological systems, by different Christian writers, all founded on the bible, and proving that the date of its various events are inextricably involved in a labyrinth of doubt, darkness and uncertainty.

Relative to the time of Christ's birth, the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Christians count one hundred and thirty-three (133) contrary opinions of different authors concerning the year the Messiah appeared on earth -- many of them celebrated writers." (Art. Chron.) Mark the declaration -- one hundred and thirty-three different opinions as to the year Christ was born; one hundred and thirty-three different years fixed on by different Christian chronologists as the time of the birth of the most extraordinary and most noted being, as Christians would have us believe, that ever appeared on earth. Think of an omnipotent God descending from heaven, performing astounding miracles, and presenting other proofs of being a God, and yet not one of the three hundred writers of that era take any notice of him, or make any note of his birth or any event of his life. This circumstance is of itself sufficient to expel and dissipate all faith in his divinity or existence as it has come down to us.

As you well know, Christmas, December 25th, is a day which has been set apart by the Christian church on which to celebrate the birth of their Lord and Savior, Christ Jesus, and is considered by the majority of persons to be really the day on which he was born. This is altogether erroneous, as you are now beginning to see upon examination of the subject.

There was no uniformity in the period of observing the Nativity among the early Christian churches; some held the festival in the month of May or April, others in January (see Bible for Learners, vol. iii, p. 66; Chamber's Encyclopedia, Art, "Christmas").

MOST WHO PROFESS TO KNOW HIS BIRTHDAY....DON'T

The year in which he was born is also as uncertain as the month or day. " The year in which it happened," says Mosheim, the ecclesiastical historian, "has not hitherto been fixed with certainty, notwithstanding the deep and laborious researches of the learned" (Ecc. Hist., vol. i. p. 53. Quoted in Taylor's Diegesis, p. 104).

According to Irenaeus (a famous Church Father...A.D. 190), on the authority of "The Gospel," and "all the elders who were conversant in Asia with John, the disciple of the Lord, Christ Jesus lived to be nearly, if not quite, fifty years of age".

Answer for yourself: Did you catch that? Irenaeus, in 180 A.D., who gave the world the Second New Testament that replaced the Chrestians' First New Testament (they were Chrestians (Gnostics) before Christians) testifies that Jesus Christ did not die on the Cross but lived to be 50 years old! Amazing!

The Rev. Dr. Giles says:

"Concerning the time of Christ's birth there are even greater doubts than about the place; for, though the four Evangelists have noticed several contemporary facts, which would seem to settle the point, yet on comparing these dates with the general history of the period, we meet with serious discrepancies, which involve the subject in the greatest uncertainty" (Hebrew and Christian Records, vol. ii. p. 189)

Again he says:

"Not only do we date our time from the exact year in which Christ is said to have been born, but our ecclesiastical calendar has determined with scrupulous minuteness the day and almost the hour at which every particular of Christ's wonderful life is stated to have happened. All this is implicitly believed by millions; yet all these things are among the most uncertain and shadowy that history has recorded. We have no clue to either the day or the time of year, or even the year itself, in which Christ was born" (Hebrew and Christian Records, p. 194).

It is evident, from the facts just presented, that all systems of Christian chronology are founded on mere conjecture, and hence should be rejected as worthless.

Answer for yourself: What event of Christ's life, then, can be accepted as certain, when no record was made of it till the time was forgotten, and none for at least half a century after the dawn of the Christian era, according to Dr. Lardner, when nearly all who witnessed it must have been dead?

Sharon Turner, author of History of the Anglo-Saxons remarks: "We think the most reasonable conclusion in the case is, that Christ, instead of performing those Munchausen prodigies attributed to him -- such as casting out devils, raising the dead, controlling the elements of nature, etc. -- led such an ordinary, obscure life -- excelling only in healing the sick and other noble deeds of charity and philanthropy -- that he attracted but little notice by the higher classes, or by anybody but those of a similar turn of mind, till he was deified by Constantine, in the year 325 A.D. Hence, the time of his birth was not recorded, and was forgotten. Consequently, the twenty-fifth of December was selected as his birthday, because it was the birthday of other Gods, and because it was regarded by the heathen, from time immemorial, as the birthday of Sol, the glorious luminary of heaven, it being the period he is born again into a new year, and 'commences again his journey and his life;' and because, also, this epoch was, as Sharon Turner informs us, in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, the commencement of a new year up to the tenth century".

Answer for yourself: What is this "new life" that Sharon Turner speaks of above? Simply it is the path of the Sun through the Heavens as it ascends once again from the darkness and death of the Winter Solstice from which it is reborn on Dec. 25th.

These events signalized the twenty-fifth of December, and made it a period of sufficient importance to lead the early Christians to suppose it must have been the birthday of their Messiah. Mosheim, however, confesses that the day or the year in which it happened "has not been fixed with certainty, notwithstanding the profound researches of the learned." So that it is still an open question as to when Christ was born. What day of the month, what year, or what century it took place in, is still unknown. This circumstance is, as before suggested, sufficient of itself to utterly prostrate all faith in the divine claims for Jesus Christ. What would be thought of a witness who should testify in court to the truth of an occurrence of which he did not know the year, or even the century, in which it took place, or who could come no nearer than one hundred and thirty-three years in fixing or guessing at the time.

Answer for yourself: Would a judical court accept such testimony?

Answer for yourself: Is there a chance that what we have learned of the "Jesus Story" occurred in a different time and a different place? Could this even have happened in Egypt long ago and we not know it?

Some Christian writers fix the year 4 B.C., as the time when he was born, others the year 5 B.C., and again others place his time of birth at about 15 B.C. The Rev. Dr. Geikie, speaking of this, in his Life of Christ, says: "The whole subject is very uncertain. Ewald appears to fix the date of the birth at five years earlier than our era. Petavius and Usher fix it on the 25th of December, five years before our era. Bengel on the 25th of December, four years before our era; Anger and Winer, four years before our era, in the Spring; Scaliger, three years before our era, in October; St. Jerome, three years before our era, on December 25th; Eusebius, two years before our era, on January 6th; and Idler, seven years before our era, in December" (Geikie, Life of Christ, vol. i. p. 559).

Albert Barnes writes in a manner which implies that he knew all about the year (although he does not give any authorities), but knew nothing about the month. He says:

"The birth of Christ took place four years before the common era. That era began to be used about A.D. 526, being first employed by Dionysius, and is supposed to have been placed about four years too late. Some make the difference two, others three, four, five, and even eight years. He was born at the commencement of the last year of the reign of Herod, or at the close of the year preceding" (Barnes' Notes, vol. ii. p. 402).

"The Jews sent out their flocks into the mountainous and desert regions during the summer months, and took them up in the latter part of October or the first of November, when the cold weather commenced. . . . It is clear from this that our Savior was born before the 25th of December, or before what we call Christmas. At that time it is cold, and especially in the high and mountainous regions about Bethlehem. God has concealed the time of his birth. There is no way to ascertain it. By different learned men it has been fixed at each month in the year" (Barnes' Notes, vol. ii. p. 25).

Canon Farrar writes with a little more caution, as follows:

"Although the date of Christ's birth cannot be fixed with absolute certainty, there is at least a large amount of evidence to render it probable that he was born four years before our present era. It is universally admitted that our received chronology, which is not older than Dionysius Exignus, in the sixth century, is wrong. But all attempts to discover the month and the day are useless. No data whatever exists to enable us to determine them with even approximate accuracy" (Farrar, Life of Christ, App., pp. 673-674).

Bunsen attempts to show (on the authority of Irenaeus, above quoted), that Jesus was born some fifteen years before the time assigned, and that he lived to be nearly, if not quite, fifty years of age (Bible Chronology, pp. 73-74).

According to Basnage (Hist. De Juif) the Jews placed his birth near a century sooner than the generally assumed epoch. Others have placed it even in the third century B.C. This belief is founded on a passage in the "Book of Wisdom," written about 250 B.C., which is supposed to refer to Christ Jesus, and none other. In speaking of some individual who lived at that time, it says:

"He professeth to have the knowledge of God, and he calleth himself the child of the Lord. He was made to reprove our thoughts. He is grievous unto us even to behold; for his life is not like other men's, his ways are of another fashion. We are esteemed of him as counterfeits; he abstaineth from our ways as from filthiness; he pronounceth the end of the just to be blessed, and maketh his boast that God is his Father . Let us see if his words be true; and let us prove what shall happen in the end of him. For if the just man be the son of God, he (God) will help him, and deliver him from the hand of his enemies. Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we may know his meekness, and prove his patience. Let us condemn him with a shameful death; for by his own saying he shall be respected."

This is a very important passage. Of course, the church claims it to be a prophecy of what Christ Jesus was to do and suffer, but this does not explain it.

If the writer of the "Gospel according to Luke" is correct, Jesus was not born until about A.D. 10, for he explicitly tells us that this event did not happen until Cyrenius was governor of Syria. Now it is well known that Cyrenius was not appointed to this office until long after the death of Herod (during whose reign the Matthew narrator informs us Jesus was born), and that the taxing spoken of by the Luke narrator as leaving taken place at this time, did not take place until about ten years after the time at which, according to the Matthew narrator, Jesus was born (Josephus, Aniq. xviii.ch.i.sec.l.).

Eusebius was Bishop of Cesarea from A.D. 315 to 340, in which he died, in the 70th year of his age, thus playing his great part in life chiefly under the reigns of Constantine the Great and his son Constantius. Eusebius, the first ecclesiastical historian, places Jesus' birth at the time Cyrenius was governor of Syria, and therefore at about A.D. 10. Eusebius is known by many scholars to be one of history's biggest liars that ever lived. His words are as follows:

"It was the two and fortieth year after the reign of Augustus the Emperor and the eight and twentieth year after the subduing of Egypt, and the death of Antonius and Cleopatra, when last of all the Ptolemies in Egypt ceased to bear rule, when our Saviour and Lord Jesus Christ, at the time of the first taxing— Cyrenius, then President of Syria— was born in Bethlehem, a city Judea, according unto the prophecies in that behalf promised" (Eusebius, Ecc. Hist. Lib. 1. ch.vi.).

Had the Luke narrator known anything about Jewish history, he never would have made so gross a blunder as to place the taxing of Cyrenius in the days of Herod, and would have saved the immense amount of labor that it has taken in endeavoring to explain away the effects of his ignorance. One explanation of this mistake is, that there were two assessments, one about tile time Jesus was born, and the other ten years after; but this has entirely failed. Dr. Hooykaas, speaking of this, says:

"The Evangelist (Luke) falls into the most extraordinary mistakes through out. In the first place, history is silent as to a census of the whole (Roman) world ever having been made at all. In the next place, though Quirinius certainly did make such a register in Judea and Samaria, it did not extend to Galilee; so that Joseph's household was not affected by it. Besides, it (the census) did not take place until ten years after the death of Herod (Jesus would have had to be born already for Herod to seek his death), when his son Archelaus was deposed by the emperor, and the districts of Judea and Samaria were thrown into a Roman province. Under the reign of Herod, nothing of the kind took place, nor was there any occasion for it. Finally, at the time of the birth of Jesus, the Governor of Syria was not Quirinius, but Quietus Sentius Saturninus." (Bible for Learners, vol. iii. P. 56).

The institution of the festival of the Nativity of Christ Jesus being held on the 25th of December, among the Christians, is attributed to Telesphorrus, who flourished during the reign of Antonius Pius (A. D. 138-161), but the first certain traces of it are found about the time of the Emperor Commodus (A. D. 180-192) (Chamber's Encyclo., art. "Christmas").

"The pre-Christian Europeans practiced a variety of paganistic rituals that culminated each year, at the dawning of the winter type weather, on Dec. 25th. They celebrated this day as the day of the Birth or Resurrection of the Sun God. Not as a symbol. They actually looked upon Dec. 25 as the day when the Sun was Born anew-Resurrected into new life. This ritual worship of the resurrection (birth) of the Sun-God on Dec. 25th goes back thousands of years into pre-history" (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 10).

For a long time the Christians had been trying to discover upon what particular day Jesus had possibly or probably come into the world; and conjectures and traditions that rested upon absolutely no foundation, led one to the 20th of May, another to the 19th or 20th of April, and a third to the 5th of January. At last the opinion of the community at Rome gained the upper hand, and the 25th of December was fixed upon (Bible for Learners, vol. iii. p. 66). It was not until the fifth century, however, that this day had been generally agreed upon. By the firth century, however, whether from the influence of some tradition, or from the desire to supplant Heathen Festivals of that period of the year, such as the Saturnalia, the 25th of December had been generally agreed upon (Encyclopedia Brit., art. "Christmas"). How it happened, that this day finally became fixed as the birthday of Christ Jesus, may be inferred from what we shall now see as look to the pagan sanctification of the day long before Jesus' birth. This was a "pagan holy day that commemorated the birth of the Sun" as we have shown.

PAGAN ANTECEDENTS ... UNREFUTABLE EVIDENCE OF THE PAGANIZATION OF THE JESUS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

On the first moment after midnight of the 24th of December (i.e., on the morning of the 25th), nearly all the nations of the earth, as if by common assent, celebrated the child birth of the "Queen of Heaven," of the "Celestial Virgin" of the sphere, and the birth of the god Sol.

In India this is a period of rejoicing everywhere (Monier Williams, Hinduism, p. 181). You need to remember that these Indo-Europeans would only hand-down their Sun-Myths to the Aryans at a later time; therefore it is here we find the earliest record of such belief. It is a great religious festival, and the people decorate their houses with garlands, and make presents to friends and relatives. This custom is of very great antiquity (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 126).

In China, religious solemnities are celebrated at the time of the winter solstice, the last week in December, when all shops are shut up, and the courts are closed (Ibid. 216).

Buddha, the son of the Virgin Maya, on whom, according to Chinese tradition, "the Holy Ghost" had descended, was said to have been born on Christmas day, December 25th (Bunsen, The Angel-Messiah, pp. x-25, and 110, and Lillie, Buddha and Buddhism, p. 73).

Among the ancient Persians their most splendid ceremonials were in honor of their Lord and Savior Mithra; they kept his birthday, with many rejoicings, on the 25th of December.

The author of the Celtic Druids says:

"It was the custom of the heathen, long before the birth of Christ, to celebrate the birthday of their gods," and that, "the 25th of December was a great festival with the Persians, who, in very early times, celebrated the birth of their god Mithras" (Celtic Druids, p. 163; Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 272; Monumental Christianity, p. 167; Bible for Learners, vol. iii, pp. 66-67).

The Reverend Joseph B. Gross, in his Heathen Religion, also tells us that:

"The ancient Persians celebrated a festival in honor of Mithras on the first day succeeding the Winter Solstice, the object of which was to commemorate the birthday of Mithras" (The Heathen Religions, p. 287)

Among the ancient Egyptians, for centuries before the time of Christ Jesus, the 25th of December was set aside as the birthday of their gods. M. Le Clerk De Septehenes speaks of it as follows:

"The ancient Egyptians fixed the pregnancy of Isis (the Queen of Heaven and the Virgin Mother of the Savior Horus), on the last days of March, and towards the end of December they placed the commemoration of her delivery" (Relig. Of the Anct. Greeks, p. 214).

Mr. Bonwick, in speaking of Horus, says:

"He is the great God-loved of Heaven. His birth was one of the greatest mysteries of the Egyptian religion. Pictures representing it appeared on the walls and temples. One passed through the holy Adytum (the interior or sacred part of a heathen temple) to the still more sacred quarter of the temple known as the birth-place of Horus. He was presumably the child of Deity. At Christmas time, or that answering to our festival, his image was brought out of that sanctuary with peculiar ceremonies, as the image of the infant Bambino is still brought out and exhibited in Rome" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 157).

Rigford observes that the Egyptians not only worshipped a Virgin Mother "prior to the birth of our Savior, but exhibited the effigy of her son lying in a manger, in the manner the infant Jesus was afterwards laid in the cave at Bethlehem" (quoted in Anacalypsis, p. 102, vol. ii).

The Chronicles of Alexandria, and ancient Christian work, says:

"Watch how Egypt has constructed the childbirth of a Virgin, and the birth of her son, who was exposed in a crib to the adoration of the people" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 143).

Osiris, son of the "Holy Virgin," as they called Cerea, or Neith, his mother, was born on the 25th of December (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 99).

This was also the time celebrated by the ancient Greeks as being the birthday of Hercules. The author of The Religion of the Ancient Greeks says:

"The night of the Winter Solstice, which the Greeks named the triple night, was that which they thought gave birth to Hercules" (Relig. Anct. Greece, p. 215).

He further says:

"It has become an epoch of singular importance in the eyes of the Christian, who has destined it to celebrate the birth of the Savior, the true Sun of Justice, who alone came to dissipate the darkness of ignorance" (Ibid.).

Bacchus, also, was born at early dawn on the 25th of December. Sir. Higgins says of him:

"The birth-place of Bacchus, called Sabizius or Sabaoth, was claimed by several places in Greece; but on Mount Zelmissus, in Thrace, his worship seems to have been chiefly celebrated. He was born of a virgin on the 25th of December, and was always called the Savior. In his Mysteries, he was shown to the people, as an infant is by the Christians at this day, on Christmas-day morning, in Rome" (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 102; Dupuis, p. 237, and Baring Gould, Orig. Relig. Belief, vol. i. p. 322).

The birthday of Adonis was celebrated on the 25th of December. This celebration is spoken of by Tertullian, Jerome, and other Fathers of the Church (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 99), who inform us that the ceremonies took place in a cave, and that the cave in which they celebrated his mysteries in Bethlehem, was that in which Christ Jesus was born.

This was also a great holy day in ancient Rome. The Rev. Mr. Gross says:

"In Rome, before the time of Christ, a festival was observed on the 25th of December, under the name of 'Natalis Solis Invicti' (Birthday of Sol the Invincible). It was a day of universal rejoicings, illustrated by illuminations and public games (The Heathen Religion, p. 287). "All public business was suspended, declarations of war and criminal executions were postponed, friends made presents to one another, and the slaves were indulged with great liberties".

A few weeks before the winter solstice, the Calabrian shepherds came into Rome to play on the pipes. This practice is kept up to the present day.

The ancient Germans, for centuries before "the true Sun of Justice" was ever heard of, celebrated annually, at the time of the Winter solstice, what they called their Yule-feast. At this feast agreements were renewed, the gods were consulted as to the future, sacrifices were made to them, and the time was spent in jovial hospitality. Many features of this festival, such as burning the yule-log on Christmas-eve, still survive among us (Bible for Learners, vol. iii. p. 67).

Yule was the old name for Christmas. In French it is called Noel, which is the Hebrew or Chaldee word Nule (Chambers's, art. "Yule," and Celtic Druids, p. 163).

The greatest festival of the year celebrated among the ancient Scandinavians, was at the Winter solstice. They called the night upon which it was observed, the "Mother-night." This feast was named Jul—hence is derived the word Yule—and was celebrated in honor of Freyr (son of the Supreme God Odin, and the goddess Frigga), who was born on that day. Feasting, nocturnal assemblies, and all the demonstrations of a most dissolute joy, were then authorized by the general usage. At this festival the principal received presents—generally horses, swords, battle-axes, and gold rings—at their departure" (Mallet, Northern Antiquities, pp. 110, 355).

The festival of the 25th of December was celebrated by the ancient Druids, in Great Britain and Ireland, with great fires lighted on the tops of hills (Dupuis, 160; Celtic Druids, and Monumental Christianity, p. 167).

Godfrey Higgins says:

"Stuckley observes that the worship of Mithra was spread all over Gaul and Britain. The Druids kept this night as a great festival and called the day following it Nolagh or Noel or the day of regeneration and celebrated it with great fires on the tops of their mountains which they repeated on the day of the Epiphany or twelfth night. The Mithraic monuments which are common in Britain, have been attributed to the Romans but this festival proves that the Mithraic worship was there prior to theri arrival (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 99).

This was also a time of rejoicing in Ancient Mexico. Acosta says:

"In the first month which in Peru they call Rayme, and answering to our December, they made a solemn feast called Capacrayme (the Winter Solstice) wherein they made many sacrifices and ceremonies, which continued many days" (Hist. Indies, vol. ii. p. 354).

EVEN THE CHURCH FATHERS SPEAK OUT AGAINST IT...SOME FOR IT

The evergreens, and particularly the mistletoe, which are used all over the Christian world at Christmas time, betray its heathen origin. Tertullian, a Father of the Church, who flourished about A. D. 200, writing to his brethren, affirms it to be...

"rank Idolatry" to deck their doors "with garlands or flowers, on festival days, according to the custom of the heathen" (Middleton, Works, vol. i. p. 80).

St. Chrysostom, (A. D. 390), referring to this Pagan festival, says:

"On this day, also, the birth of Christ was lately fixed at Rome, in order that whilst the heathen were busy with their profane ceremonies, the Christians might perform their holy rites undisturbed" (Ibid.).

Add to this the fact that St. Gregory, a Christian Father of the third century, was instrumental in, and commended by other Fathers for, changing Pagan festivals into Christian holidays, for the purpose, as they said, of drawing the heathen to the religion of Christ.

These few examples show that the heathen in those days, did as the Christians do now.

Answer for yourself: What have evergreens, and garlands, and Christmas trees, to do with Christianity? Or with a Jewish Rabbi who preached repentance?

Simply nothing!

It is the old Yule feast which was held by all the northern nations, from time immemorial, handed down to, and observed at the present day. In the greenery with which Christians deck their houses and temples of worship, and in the Christmas-trees laden with gifts, we unquestionably see a relic of the symbols by which our heathen forefathers signified their faith in the powers of the returning sun to clothe the earth again with green, and hang new fruit on the trees. Foliage, such as the laurel, myrtle, ivy, or oak, and in general, all evergreens, were Dionysiac plants, that is, symbols of the generative power, signifying perpetuity of youth and vigor (Knight, Anct. Art and Mythol, p. 32).

Among the causes, then, that cooperated in fixing this period— December 25th—as the birthday of Christ Jesus, was, as we have seen, that almost every ancient nation of the earth held a festival on this day in commemoration of the birth of their virgin-born god.

On this account the Christians adopted it as the time of the birth of their God. Mr. Gibbon, speaking of this in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. ii. p. 383, says:

"The Roman Christians, ignorant of the real date of his (Christ's) birth, fixed the solemn festival to the 25th of December, the Brumalia, or Winter Solstice, when the Pagans annually celebrated the birth of Sol"

And Mr. King, in his Gnostics and their Remains, says:

"The ancient festival held on the 25th of December in honor of the 'Birthday of the Invincible One,' and celebrated by the great games at the circus, was afterwards transferred to the commemoration of the birth of Christ, the precise day of which many of the Fathers confess was then unknown" (King's Gnostics, p. 49).

As Dr. Hooykaas remarks:

"The church was always anxious to meet the heathen half way, by allowing them to retain the feasts they were accustomed to, only giving them a Christian dress, or attaching a new or Christian signification to them (Bible for Learners, vol. iii. p. 67).

In doing these, and many other such things, which we shall speak of in our next articles, the Christian Fathers, instead of drawing the heathen to their religion, drew themselves into paganism and instead of understanding the allegorical truths handed down through history

"literalized them" and created a false Christ. Christianity, instead of being "Jewish," is false. And it is these same "perverted truths and practices" handed down by Rome that people who confess that they love God continue to do today out of ignorance

It is evident, from the facts just presented, that all systems of Christian chronology are founded on mere conjecture, and hence should be rejected as worthless.

Answer for yourself: What event of Christ's life, then, can be accepted as certain, when no record was made of it till the time was forgotten, and none for at least half a century after the dawn of the Christian era, according to Dr. Lardner, when nearly all who witnessed it must have been dead?

Although I cannot agree with the entirety of the next quote as to the obscurity of Jesus (Sharon Turner, History of the Anglo-Saxons), yet it is yet worth reading especially in light of the reference to Sun Worship:

"We think the most reasonable conclusion in the case is, that Christ, instead of performing those Munchausen prodigies attributed to him -- such as casting out devils, raising the dead, controlling the elements of nature, etc. -- led such an ordinary, obscure life -- excelling only in healing the sick and other noble deeds of charity and philanthropy -- that he attracted but little notice by the higher classes, or by anybody but those of a similar turn of mind, till he was deified by Constantine, in the year 325 A.D. Hence, the time of his birth was not recorded, and was forgotten.....

Consequently, the twenty-fifth of December was selected as his birthday, because it was the birthday of other Gods, and because it was regarded by the heathen, from time immemorial, as the birthday of Sol, the glorious luminary of heaven, it being the period he is born again into a new year, and "commences again his journey and his life;" and because, also, this epoch was the commencement of a new year up to the tenth century" (Sharon Turner, History of the Anglo-Saxons).

These events signalized the twenty-fifth of December, and made it a period of sufficient importance to lead the early Christians to suppose it must have been the birthday of their Messiah. Mosheim, however, confesses that the day or the year in which it happened "has not been fixed with certainty, notwithstanding the profound researches of the learned." So that it is still an open question as to when Christ was born. What day of the month, what year, or what century it took place in, is still unknown. This circumstance is, as before suggested, sufficient of itself to utterly prostrate all faith in the divine claims for Jesus Christ.

Answer for yourself: What would be thought of a witness who should testify in court to the truth of an occurrence of which he did not know the year, or even the century, in which it took place, or who could come no nearer than one hundred and thirty-three years in fixing or guessing at the time.

Answer for yourself: Would the court accept such testimony? Should you?

DEATH ON A CROSS...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

EXAMPLES OF SAVIORS CRUCIFIED ON CROSSES FOR SALVATION

I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified, writes Paul in 1 Cor 2:2. The determination not to know anything but the crucifixion of Jesus Christ was narrowing down knowledge to rather a small compass. Evidently converts in Corinth were questioning, and Paul begins by establishing that questions are not allowed to Christians. Paul has to berate the wise and praise the foolish in this epistle. God chose the foolish things of the world not the wise. And so it has always remained —the most marvellous way of gulling the credulous. Anyway, already in the 50s of the first century some people were asking questions and one of the questions will have been whether Jesus was really crucified.

Irenaeus, one of the most frequently quoted Christian writers of the ancient bishops, declares upon the authority of the martyr Polycarp, who claimed to have got it from St John and all the elders of Asia, that Jesus Christ was not crucified, but lived to be about fifty years old. There must have been a large margin for distrusting the fact of the crucifixion.

Yet, if Jesus was a saviour, it is likely that he must have been crucified because other saviours of the same type were. Sacrilege! Paul's Christians, trained in foolishness, cry.

Jesus Christ was the only crucified saviour!

Sorry, many more saviours are suspected of crucifixion. Irenaeus might have felt it politic to deny it to distinguish the Christian saviour from the others!

Chrishna was depicted as if crucified. The Persian remembered only the atoning sufferings on the cross of Mithras the Mediator. Aztecs prayed for the return of their crucified saviour, Quexalcoatl, and were rewarded with Cortez. Caucasians chanted praises to their slain Divine Intercessor, Prometheus, for voluntarily offering himself upon the cross for the sins of a fallen race. Yet the Christian disciple hugs to his bosom the bloody cross of the murdered Jesus, confident that only one god ever died for the sins of man.

To retain their following, religions are based on unchangeable dogmas which disciples must accept to the exclusion of all knowledge adverse to their own creed. Whenever they are able they actually destroy contrary evidence for fear of rivalry. Then they magnify their own religion to a unique position above all others.

The earlier Christian saints, having determined like Paul, to know only Jesus Christ and him crucified, made stern efforts to obliterate from the page of history facts damaging to their case.

A report on the Hindu religion, made out by a deputation from the British Parliament, sent to India to examine their sacred books and monuments, was left in the hands of a Christian bishop at Calcutta, with instructions to forward it to England. On its arrival in London, it was so horribly mutilated as to be scarcely recognizable. The account of the crucifixion was gone. The inference is patent.

The disciples of the Christian faith have burnt books, blotted out passages and altered testaments which suggested the opposite of their belief. Not only that, they have demolished monuments showing crucifixions of previous atoning gods so that they are now unknown. Hence, the disbelief of Christians when other cases are mentioned.

Kersey Graves, in a well known book written over a century ago, gives examples of sixteen crucified gods or saviours. Most are very ancient and arguable, depending upon the interpretation of pictures or scriptures since no original written sources now exist, often victims of Christians determined to preserve the memory of only one crucified god.

For the same reasons the dates of their occurrence are doubtful and because chronology before the time of Alexander the Great (330 BC) is far from certain, and the dating of icons, especially from distant or isolated cultures is uncertain. Even mainstream studies of the ancient Near East are involved in controversy over dates, Peter James for example claiming in a well argued case that several centuries have been mistakenly inserted into near Eastern chronologies. It is certain these crucifixions occurred before the time of Christ, but their exact date cannot be fixed.

These crucifixions are not presented as actual occurrences. The objective is not to prove them real events but simply that the belief in the crucifixion of gods was prevalent long before the crucifixion of Christ. To establish this point then six will prove it as well as sixteen. Indeed, one case is sufficient. The reader is left to decide.

Tammuz of Mesopotamia 1160 BC.

Tammuz was a god of Assyria, Babylonia and Sumeria where he was known as Dumuzi. He is commemorated in the name of the month of June, Du'uzu, the fourth month of a year which begins at the spring equinox. The fullest history extant of this saviour is probably that of Ctesias (400 BC), author of Persika. The poet has perpetuated his memory in rhyme.

> Trust, ye saints, your Lord restored,
> Trust ye in your risen Lord;
> For the pains which Tammuz endured
> Our salvation have procured.

Tammuz was crucified as an atonement offering: Trust ye in God, for out of his loins salvation has come unto us. Julius Firmicus speaks of this God rising from the dead for the salvation of the world. This saviour which long preceded the advent of Christ, filled the same role in sacred history.

Wittoba of the Telingonesic 552 BC.

Wittoba is represented in his story with nail-holes in his hands and the soles of his feet. Nails, hammers and pincers are constantly seen represented on his crucifixes and are objects of adoration among his followers, just as the iron crown of Lombardy has within it a nail claimed to be of his true original cross, and is much admired and venerated for that reason. The worship of this crucified God prevails chiefly in the Travancore and other southern states of India in the region of Madura.

Iao of Nepal 622 BC.

Iao was crucified on a tree in Nepal. The name of this incarnate god and oriental saviour occurs frequently in the holy bibles and sacred books of other countries. Some suppose that Iao is the root of the name of the Jewish God, Yehouah (Jehovah), often abbreviated to Yeho.

Hesus of the Celtic Druids 834 BC.

The Celtic Druids depict their god Hesus as having been crucified with a lamb on one side and an elephant on the other, and that this occurred long before the Christian era.

The elephant, being the largest animal known, was chosen to represent the magnitude of the sins of the world, while the lamb, from its proverbial innocent nature, was chosen to represent the innocence of the victim, the god offered as a propitiatory sacrifice. We have the Lamb of God taking away the sins of the world. The Lamb of God could therefore have been borrowed from the Druids. This legend was found in Gaul long before Jesus Christ was known to history.

Quezalcoatl of Mexico 587 BC.

Historical authority of the crucifixion of this Mexican god is explicit, unequivocal and ineffaceable. The evidence is tangible, and indelibly engraven upon metal plates. One of these plates represents him as having been crucified on a mountain. Another represents him as having been crucified in the heavens, as St Justin tells us Christ was. Sometimes he is represented as having been nailed to a cross, sometimes with two thieves hanging with him, and sometimes as hanging with a cross in his hand.

Quirinius of Rome 506 BC.

The crucifixion of this Roman saviour is remarkable for the parallel features to that of the Judaean saviour, not only in the circumstances of his crucifixion, but also in much of his antecedent life.

He is represented, like Christ:

- As having been conceived and brought forth by a virgin.
- His life was sought by the reigning king, Amulius.
- He was of royal blood, his mother being of kingly descent.
- He was put to death by wicked hands or crucified.
- At his mortal exit the whole earth is said to have been enveloped in darkness, as in the case of Christ, Chrishna, and Prometheus.
- And finally he is resurrected, and ascends back to heaven.

Prometheus 547 B.C.

The crucifixion of Prometheus of Caucasus, described by Seneca, Hesiod, and other writers, states that he was nailed to an upright beam of timber, to which were affixed extended arms of wood, and that this cross was situated near the Caspian Straits. The modern story of this crucified God, which has him bound to a rock for thirty years, while vultures preyed upon his vitals, is a Christian fraud.

The poet, in portraying his propitiatory offering, says:

> Lo! streaming from the fatal tree
> His all atoning blood,
> Is this the Infinite?–Yes, 'tis he,
> Prometheus, and a god!
>
> Well might the sun in darkness hide,

And veil his glories in,
When God, the great Prometheus, died
For man the creature's sin.

It is doubtful whether there is to be found in the whole range of Greek letters deeper pathos than that of the divine woe of the beneficent demigod Prometheus, crucified on his Scythian crags for his love to mortals. When he dies:

- That the whole frame of nature became convulsed.
- The earth shook, the rocks were rent, the graves were opened, and in a storm, which seemed to threaten the dissolution of the universe, the solemn scene forever closed, and Our Lord and saviour Prometheus gave up the ghost.

The cause for which he suffered was his love for the human race. The whole story of Prometheus' crucifixion, burial and resurrection was acted in pantomime in Athens five hundred years before Christ, which proves its great antiquity. Minutius Felix, one of the most popular Christian writers of the second century addresses the people of Rome:

Your victorious trophies not only represent a simple cross, but a cross with a man on it, and this man St. Jerome calls a god.

These coincidences are more proof that the tradition of the crucifixion of gods has been very long prevalent among the heathen.

Thulis of Egypt 1700 BC.

Thulis of Egypt, whence comes Ultima Thule, died the death of the cross about thirty-five hundred years ago.

Ultima Thule was the island which marked the ultimate bounds of the extensive empire of this legitimate descendant of the gods.

This Egyptian saviour appears also to have been known as Zulis. His history is curiously illustrated in the sculptures, made seventeen hundred years BC of a small, retired chamber lying nearly over the western section of the temple. Twenty-eight lotus plants near his grave indicate the number of years he lived on the earth. After suffering a violent death, he was buried, but rose again, ascended into heaven, and there became the judge of the dead, or of souls in a future state. He came down from heaven to benefit mankind, and that he was said to be full of grace and truth.

Indra of Tibet 725 BC.

This Tibetan saviour is shown nailed to the cross. There are five wounds, representing the nail-holes and the piercing of the side. The antiquity of the story is beyond dispute.

Marvellous stories are told of the birth of the Divine Redeemer. His mother was a virgin of black complexion, and hence his complexion was of the ebony hue, as in the case of Christ and some other sin-atoning saviours. He descended from heaven on a mission of benevolence, and ascended back to the heavenly mansion after his crucifixion. He led a life of strict celibacy, which, he taught, was essential to true holiness. He inculcated great tenderness toward all living beings. He could walk upon the water or upon the air; he could foretell future events with great accuracy. He practised the most devout contemplation, severe discipline of the body and mind, and completely subdued his passions. He was worshiped as a god who had existed as a spirit from all eternity, and his followers were called Heavenly Teachers.

Alcestos of Euripides 600 BC.

A less usual crucified God was Alcestos, who was female, the only example of a feminine God atoning for the sins of the world upon the cross. The doctrine of the trinity and atoning offering for sin was inculcated as a part of her religion.

Attis of Phrygia 1170 BC.

Speaking of this crucified Messiah, the Anacalypsis informs us that several histories are given of him, but all concur in representing him as having been an atoning offering for sin. And the Latin phrase suspensus lingo, found in his history, indicates the manner of his death. He was suspended on a tree, crucified, buried and rose again.

Crite of Chaldaea 1200 BC.

The Chaldeans have noted in their sacred books the crucifixion of a god with the above name. He was also known as the Redeemer, and was styled the Ever Blessed Son of God, the saviour of the Race, the Atoning Offering for an Angry God. When he was offered up, both heaven and earth were shaken to their foundations.

Bali of Orissa 725 BC.

In Orissa, in Asia, they have the story of a crucified God, known by several names, including the above, all of which, we are told, signify Lord Second, his being the second person or second member of the trinity. Most of the crucified gods occupied that position in a trinity of gods, the Son, in all cases, being the atoning offering. This God Bali was also called Baliu, and sometimes Bel. Monuments of this crucified God, bearing great age, may be found amid the ruins of the magnificent city of Mahabalipore, partially buried amongst the figures of the temple.

Mithras of Persia 600 BC.

This Persian God was slain upon the cross to make atonement for mankind, and to take away the sins of the world. He was born on the twenty-fifth day of December, and crucified on a tree. Christian writers both speak of his being slain, and yet both omit to speak of the manner in which he was put to death. And the same policy has been pursued with respect to other crucified gods of the pagans, as we have shown.

Devatat of Siam, Ixion of Rome, Apollonius of Tyana in Cappadocia, are all reported to have died on the cross."

Ixion, 400 BC, was crucified on a wheel, the rim representing the world, and the spokes constituting the cross. He bore the burden of the world, the sins of the world, on his back while suspended on the cross. He was therefore called the crucified spirit of the world.

It is curious that Christian writers will recount a long list of miracles and remarkable incidents in the life of Apollonius of Tyana, the Cappadocian saviour, forming a parallel to those of the Christian saviour, yet say not a word about his crucifixion.

Christian writers find it necessary to omit the crucifixion of these saviours fearing the telling would lessen the spiritual force of the crucifixion of Christ, which has to be unique. They thus exalted the tradition of the crucifixion into the most important dogma of the Christian faith. Hence, their efforts to conceal from the public the fact that it is of pagan origin.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry says that Freemasons secretly taught the doctrine of the crucifixion, atonement and resurrection preceded the Christian era, and that similar doctrines were taught in all the ancient mysteries.

To those who say the ancient crucifixions of gods were mere myths or fables, having no foundation in fact, but added to their histories as mere romance, we reply that there is as much ground for suspecting the same thing as being true of Jesus Christ.

Many of the early Christians and contemporary Jews and Gentiles doubted it, and some openly disputed its ever having taken place. Others bestowed upon it a mere spiritual significance, and not a few considered it symbolical of a holy life. One circumstance, calculated to lead to the entire discredit of the story of the crucifixion of Christ, is the relation, in connection with it, of a violent convulsion of nature, and the resurrection of the long-buried saints, events not supported by any contemporaneous history, sacred or profane.

As these events must be set down as fabulous, they leave doubt about the crucifixion itself, especially when the many absurdities involved in the doctrine of the crucifixion are brought to view.

If the inhabitants of this planet required the murderous death of a god as an atonement, we must presume that all other inhabited worlds need a divine atonement. If there are millions of world inhabited by intelligent beings in the universe then they all need a saviour. Presumably there is only one Most High and it is he who has to be incarnated in each case. He begins to look a bit like a fetishist getting a kick out of slumming it in the worlds of the mortals. Or rather, it begins to make the whole concept look ludicrous.

The idea of gods coming down from heaven, being born of virgins and dying a violent death for the moral blunders of the people originated in an age of the world when mankind was savage and blood was the requisition for every offence. In those days no one had any idea of other possible worlds besides our own and the realms of the gods themselves. So the idea of the supreme god playing his tricks seemed reasonable. Today it does not to anyone with a remaining brain cell.

ORIGIN OF THE BELIEF OF THE CRUCIFIXION OF GODS

It has always been presumed that death, and especially death by crucifixion, involved the highest state of suffering possible to be endured by mortals. Hence, the gods must suffer in this way as an example of courage and fortitude which their followers must emulate. To do this they must be superior to their devotees. They must not merely die, but submit to the most ignominious mode of suffering death that could be devised—crucifixion. This gave the highest finishing touch to the drama.

And thus the legend of the crucifixion became the crowning chapter, the aggrandizing episode in the history of their lives. It was presumed that nothing less than a god could endure such excruciating tortures without complaining.

Hence, when the victim was reported to have submitted with such fortitude that no murmur was heard to issue from his lips, this circumstance of itself was deemed sufficient evidence of his godship. The story of the crucifixion, therefore, whether true or false, deified or helped deify many great men and exalt them to the rank of gods. Though some of the disciples of Buddhism, and some of the primitive professors of Christianity also (including, according to Christian history, Peter and his brother Andrew), voluntarily chose this mode of dying in imitation of their crucified Lord, without experiencing, however, the desired promotion to divine honours. They failed of an exaltation to the deityship, and hence are not now worshiped as gods.

The doctrine of salvation by crucifixion had, like most of the ancient forms of religious faith, an astronomical origin. People were saved by the sun's crucifixion or crossing over the equinoctial line into the season of spring, and thereby gave out a saving heat and light to the world and stimulated the generative organs of animal and vegetable life. The ancients would carve or paint organs of generation on the walls of their holy temples with this stimulation in mind. The blood of the grape, which was ripened by the heat of the sun, as he crossed over by resurrection into spring, i.e., was crucified, was symbolically the blood of the cross, or the blood of the Lamb.

Christian reader, what can you now make of the story of the crucifixion of Jesus Christ but a borrowed legend —at least the story of his being crucified as a god?

The Indian chief Red Jacket is reported to have replied to the Christian missionaries:

> Brethren, if you white men murdered the son of the Great Spirit, we Indians have nothing to do with it, and it is none of our affair. If he had come among us, we would not have killed him. We would have treated him well. You must make amends for that crime yourselves.

This view of the crucifixion, from the viewpoint of a people regarded as savage, is more sensible and rational than that of Christians, who make it meritorious and a moral necessity. If the act were a moral necessity then Judas as well as Jesus was a saviour, because without him in the Christian story the act which saved the world could not have happened. If it was necessary for Christ to suffer death upon the cross as an atonement for sin, then the act of crucifixion was right, and a monument should be erected to the memory of Judas for bringing it about. Only Christian logic can find a flaw in this argument. They say that even though it was God's fore-ordained plan, Judas could only have played his part because he was wicked! So the Christians finish up believing that the means justify the end, because their own Father would use a wicked man to achieve the salvation of the world. It is hardly any surprise that the Christian world remains so wicked despite being saved.

THE HEAVENLY HOST SANG PRAISES AT JESUS' BIRTH...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Luke 2:13-15 13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, 14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. 15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. (KJV)

Let us not also forget the "shepherds who watched their flocks by night," who by noticing this "announcing star." The writer of the Gospel of Luke would have us believe that these shepherds likewise were awakened to the asupicious time of the birth of the Sun-King. This star had alerted them of his birth and they knew that the Savior of Mankind was about to be born. These shephreds were attendants to a "free Heavenly concert." It makes a beautiful picture.

Such a story makes a Christian think of "Jesus" and his birth. But the sad fact is that although such story of a "heavenly choir announcing the births of Jesus isrecorded in a Christian's "infallible and inerrant New Testament," similar storiescan be found told about the births of pagan god-men since time immemorial.

In the Sanskrit Dictionary, compiled more than two thousand years ago, we find a full account of the incarnate deith Vishun, who appreard in human form as Chrishna. Vishnu, being moved to relieve the earth of her load of misery and sin, came down from heaven, and was born of the virgin Devaki, on the 25th of December. Chrishna's birth was announced in the heavens by his star, and a chorus of Devatas celebrated, with sone, the praise of Devaki (Morris, Aryan Sun-Myths And The Origin Of Religion, p. 37). Morris relates:

"The spirits and numphs of heaven danced and sang; and at midnight, when the Suppor of All was born, the clouds emitted low, pleasing sounds, and poured down rain of flowers" (Morris, Aryan Sun-Myths And The Origin Of Religion, p. 37).

The immortals of the Tusita-heaven decide that Buddha shall be born when the Flower-star makes its first appearance in the east. At his birth a host of angelic messengers descend and announce tidings of great joy: "A hero, glorious and imcomparable, has been born, a savior unto all nations of the earth" (Morris, Aryan Sun-Myths And The Origin Of Religion, pp. 50-51).

The Aryan Sun-Myths, as has been mentioned, went with the Aryans when they peopled Persia, and became the religion of the ancient Pasees. Mithras was the name which the Persians gave to the Sun. After ages had passed, it was utterly forgotten that Mithra was the Sun, and it was believed that he was the Only Begotten Son of God, who had come down from Heaven to be a mediator between God and man, to save man from theri sins. The 25th of December was said to be the day on which this God-man was born, and it was celebrated with great rejoicings. The legend was that the wondrous infant was visited soon after his miraculous birth, by wise men called magi, who brought gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. It was cutomary for the magi to ascend a high mountain, at early dawn on the 25th of December, and there, with their faces turned to the east, to wait anxiously for the first rays of the Sun, which they hailed with incense and prayer. The shepherds, also were in the habit of prostrating themselves and praying to their god, the Sun.

All nature smiles at the birth of the Heavenly Being. "To him all angels cry aloud, the heavens, and all the powers therein." "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men." "The quarters of the horizon are irradiate with joy, as if moonlight was diffused over the whole earth." "The spirits of the nymphs of heaven dance and sing." For the Lord Savior is born, "to give joy and peace to men and Devas, to shed light in the dark places, and to give sight to the blind."

Truly, there is nothing new under the sun.

JESUS IS RECOGNIZED AS THE DIVINE CHILD & PRESENTED WITH GIFTS AT HIS BIRTH...TRUTH...SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

The next in order of the wonderful events which are related to have happened at the birth of Christ, Jesus, is the recognition of the divine child, and the presentation of gifts.

We are informed by the Matthew writer, that being guided by a star, the Magi from the east came to where the young child was. The original word here is "magoi" from which comes our word "Magician." The persons here denoted were philosophers, priests, or astronomers. They word used refers to astronomers who lived chiefly chiefly in Persia and Arabia at the time. They were the learned men of the Eastern nations, devoted to astronomy, to religion, and to medicine. They were held in high esteem by the Persian court; were admitted as counselors, and followed the camps in war to give advice (Barne's Notes, vol. i. p. 25).

Matthew relates in 2:2:

"And when they were come into the house (not stable) they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him. And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense, and myrrh."

The Luke narrator, who seems to know nothing about the Magi from the east, informs us that shepherds came and worshipped the young child. They were keeping their flocks by night when the angel of the Lord appeared before them saying:

"Behold, I bring you good tidings, for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

After the angel had left them, they said one to another:

"Let us go unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us. And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger" (Luke 2:8-16).

The Luke narrator evidently borrowed this story of the shepherds from the "Gospel of the Egyptians," or from other sacred records of the biographies of Chrishna or Buddha.

It is related in the legends of Chrishna that the divine child was cradled among shepherds, to whom were first made known the stupendous feats which stamped his character with marks of the divinity. He was recognized as the promised Savior by Nanda, a shepherd, or cowherd, and his companions, who prostrated themselves before the heaven-born child. After the birth of Chrishna, the Indian prophet Nared, having heard of his fame, visited his father and mother as Gokool, examined the stars, etc., and declared him to be of celestian descent (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. pp. 129-130; Maurice, Hist. Hindostan, vol. ii. pp. 256, 257, 317; Vishnu Purana).

Not only was Chrishna adored by the shepherds and Magi, and received with divine honors, but he was also presented with gifts. These gifts were "sandal wood and perfume" (Oriental Religions, pp. 500-501).

Similar stories are related of the infant Buddha. He was visited, at the time of his birth, by wise men, who at once recognized in the marvellous infant all the characters of the divinity and was hailed god of gods (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 157).

Viscount Amberly, speaking of him, says:

"He was visited and adored by a very eminent Rishi, or hermit, known as Asita, who predicted his future greatness, but wept at the thought that he himself was too old to see the day when the law of salvation would be taught by the infant whom he had come to contemplate" (Amberly, Analysis, p. 177; Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 36).

"I weep (said Asita), because I am old and stricken in years, and shall not see all that is about to come to pass. The Buddha Bhagavat (God Almighty Buddha) comes to the world only after many kalpas. This bright boy will be Buddha. For the salvation of the world he will teach the law. He will succor the old, the sick, the afflicted, thy dying. He will release those who are bound in the meshed of natural corruption. He will quicken the spiritual vision of those whose eyes are darkened by the thick darkness of ignorance. Hundreds of thousands of millions of beings will be carried by him to the "other shore" and will put on immortality. And I shall not see this perfect Buddha, that is why I weep" (Lillie, Buddha and Early Buddhism, p. 76).

Now contrast that with Luke 4:18-19-18:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, 19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Coincidence?

He returns rejoicing, however to his mountain-home, for his eyes had seen the promised and expected Savior.

Now contrast that with Luke 2:25-27:

And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. 26 And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. 27 And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Coincidence?

EXAMINING THE EVIDENCE

Painting in the cave of Ajunta represent Asita with the infant Buddha in his arms (Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 36). The marvelous gifts of this child had become known to this eminent ascetic by supernatural signs.

Buddha, as well as Chrishna, was presented with "costly jewels and precious substances" (Beal, History of Buddha, p. 58).

Rama, the seventh incarnation of Vishnu for human deliverance from evil, is also hailed by "aged saints" who die gladly when their eyes see the long-expected one (Oriental Religions, p. 41).

How-tseich, who was one of those personages styled, in China "Tien-Tse," or "Sons of Heaven," and who came into the world in a miraculous manner, was laid in a narrow lane. When his mother had fulfilled her time: "Her first-born son (came forth) like a lamb, there was no bursting, no rending, no injury, no hurt, showing how wonderful he would be."

When born, the sheep and oxen protected him with loving care (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 200; Amberly, Analysis of Religious Belief, p. 226).

The birth of Confucius (551 B.C.), like that of all the demi-gods and saints of antiquity, is fabled to have been attended with allegorical prodigies, amongst which was the appearance of the Ke-lin, a miraculous quadruped, prophetic of happiness and virtue, which announced that the child would be "a king without a throne or territory." Five celestial sages, or wise men, entered the house at the time of the child's birth, whilst vocal and instrumental music filled the air (Thornton, History of China, vol. i. p. 152).

Mithras, the Persian Savior, the mediator between God and man, was also visited by "wise men" called Magi, at the time of his birth (King,Gnostics and their Remains, pp. 134, 149). He was presented with gifts consisting of gold, frankincense, and myrrh (Inman, Ancient Faiths, vol. ii. p. 353).

According to Plato, at the birth of Socrates (469 B.C.) there came Magi from the east to worship him, bringing gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii, p. 96).

AEsculapius, the virgin-born Savior, was protected by goatherds (shepherds present), who, upon seeing the child, knew at once that he was divine. The voice of fame soon published the birth of this miraculous infant, upon which people flocked from all quarters to behold and worship this heaven-born child (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 150).

Many of the Grecian and Roman demi-gods and heroes were either fostered by or worshipped by shepherds. Amongst these may be mentioned Bacchus, who was educated among shepherds (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. 398), and Romulus, who was found on the banks of the Tiger, and educated by shepherds (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii. p. 213. Paris, son of Priam was educated among shepherds (Ibid. vol. i. p. 47), and AEgisthus was exposed, like AEsculapius, by his mother, found by shepherds and educated among them (Ibid., p. 20).

Viscount Amberly has well said that:

"Prognostications of greatness in infancy are, indeed, among the stock incidents in the mythical or semi-mythical lives of eminent persons."

Answer for yourself: If you remember we stated earlier that if Christianity is to be believed to be a "Divine and unique revelation from God" then we should not expect to find the same things which make up it's core of "Divine Truth" existing prior to it. What are we to think now about not only this doctrine, but others as well?

Answer for yourself: Don't you think that if you desired the "truth" about Jesus you need to start looking elsewhere?

I have a suggestion. Try Second Temple Judaism and learn what was believed by this man before it is too late and then mould your life around Jesus the Jew, and not Jesus the Gentile's Sun-god.

ANGELS & SHEPHERDS VISIT THE INFANT SAVIOR...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

As soon as the God-begotten saviours were born into the world they were adored by shepherds from near by. In some cases they were also visited by wise men, or Magi, as the Persians and Brahmins called them, from far away. Sometimes the visitors were from even farther away, even angels leaving their heavenly ranks to wing their way to this rude tenement to adore its new born saviour.

Angels appeared to Confucius who was born in 598 BC as well as Christ. In both cases Magi also assembled to present their offerings to the infant God. Magi is used in the Apocryphal Gospels to designate the wise men who visited Christ at birth. Magi, Magic and Magician are derivations from the same root, all suggesting a wisdom correlated to the gods.

When Confucius was born five wise men from afar came to the house, celestial music was heard in the skies, and angels attended the scene. In Matthew the circumstances are the same (Mt 2:1). The only difference in the popular imagination is the number of wise men. Matthew does not say but popularly it is three. The Persian story also gives the number of Magi who visited the young saviour of that country as five.

Luke speaks of a multitude of the heavenly host praising God (Lk 2:13). Popularly the heavenly host was singing its praises so we have another way of saying that celestial music was heard. How complete the parallel!

Luke 2:13-15 13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, 14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. 15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. (KJV)

Let us not also forget the "shepherds who watched their flocks by night," who by noticing this "announcing star." The writer of the Gospel of Luke would have us believe that these shepherds likewise were awakened to the auspicious time of the birth of the Sun-King. This star had alerted them of his birth and they knew that the Savior of Mankind was about to be born. These shepherds were attendants to a "free Heavenly concert." It makes a beautiful picture.

It goes further. Confucius, like Christ, had twelve chosen disciples. He was descended from a royal house of princes, as Christ from the royal house of David, and like Christ was born poor. He had a disagreement with a monarch and retired for a long period from society into religious contemplative seclusion. He taught the same Golden Rule of doing to others as we desire them to do toward us, and other moral maxims equal in importance to anything in the Christian scriptures.

When Chrishna, the eighth avatar of India (1200 BC), was born he was inundated in flowers by angels (gods). Pipes and drums were played in the heavens, trees blossomed and pools were filled with clear water. The room was illuminated by his light, and the countenance of his father and mother shone with its brightness and glory. They had an image of him as a king and, realizing he was the preserver of the world, they began to worship him, but like the virgin Mary quickly forgot all this and soon regarded him as an ordinary infant!

It is related in the legends of Chrishna that the divine child was cradled among shepherds, to whom were first made known the stupendous feats which stamped his character with marks of the divinity. He was recognized as the promised Savior by Nanda, a shepherd, or cowherd, and his companions, who prostrated themselves before the heaven-born child. After the birth of Chrishna, the Indian prophet Nared, having heard of his fame, visited his father and mother as Gokool, examined the stars, etc., and declared him to be of celestial descent (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. pp. 129-130; Maurice, Hist. Hindostan, vol. ii. pp. 256, 257, 317; Vishnu Purana).

AEsculapius, the virgin-born Savior, was protected by goatherds (shepherds present), who, upon seeing the child, knew at once that he was divine. The voice of fame soon published the birth of this miraculous infant, upon which people flocked from all quarters to behold and worship this heaven-born child (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 150).

Many of the Grecian and Roman demi-gods and heroes were either fostered by or worshipped by shepherds. Amongst these may be mentioned Bacchus, who was educated among shepherds (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. 398), and Romulus, who was found on the banks of the Tiger, and educated by shepherds (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii. p. 213. Paris, son of Priam was educated among shepherds (Ibid. vol. i. p. 47), and AEgisthus was exposed, like AEsculapisu, by his mother, found by shepherds and educated among them (Ibid., p. 20).

In Luke's gospel an angel is reported to have saluted his mother (Lk 1:28):

> Hail, thou that art highly favored; the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women.

And in the next chapter the angel joins with the heavenly host in praising God. The same is found in the Ramayana, when Brahma and Siva, with a host of attending spirits, came to the mother of the eighth saviour and sang,

> In thy delivery, O favored among women, all nations shall have cause to exult.

The ninth avatar of India, Buddha (600 BC), is similar. On a silver plate in a cave in India is an inscription stating that a saint in the woods, at the time of the advent of Buddha, learned by inspiration that an avatar had appeared in the house of Rajah of Lailas. He flew through the air to the place beheld the new-born saviour. He declared him to be the great avatar destined to establish a new religion.

When the fame of Pythagoras (600 BC) reached Miletas and neighboring cities, their wise men came to visit him. In the Anacalypsis Magi came from the East to offer gifts at Socrates' birth, bringing gold, frankincense and myrrh, the very same offerings given to Christ. Gold, frankincense and myrrh were traditionally offered as gifts to the sun in Persia more than three thousand years ago; and in Arabia about the same time. Zoroaster of Persia (1,000 BC), says he also was visited by Magi at his earthly advent.

It seems odd that the divine Father chose to reveal the birth of his son, Jesus, to heathen idolaters hundreds of miles distant in Persia.

Answer for yourself: And why should a skill in astrology give them the privilege of seeing the world saviour at birth while people of God's own election—His Chosen—were denied the honor?

There are so many incongruities in divine revelation that it becomes knavery to dismiss them as god's mysterious ways, as Christians and Jews do. Yet both agree that God gave us reason.

Answer for yourself: So why doesn't He expect us to use reason when He chooses to reveal something to us?

SO WHAT WAS SEEN IN THE STARS ANYWAY?

Now lets examine the astrological evidence for the "three shepherds" from which these stories originated. The constellation of Orion has for millennia been recognized as a group of stars which herald the coming of winter, on Dec. 22, and the birth of the Sun (Son) God, three days later. It is the most glorious constellation in the sky! The legend of the three wise men has, for ages, been connected with the three stars in the Belt of Orion, Mintaka (the belt), Alnilam (string of pearls), and Alnitak (the girdle). These three stars (three wise men) sit proximate to the celestial equator and are easily recognizable, by all.

Answer for yourself: Can we who are "Christians" and followers of the real Yeshua be so sure that they have not been hoodwinked by anti-Semitic Gentiles who only "replayed their Sun Myths" as they played God and changed what was known once about the Rabbi from Galilee? If we can see that errors have been represented as truth in the New Testament as non-Jews changed the text of the "revelation" about Yeshua and altered the text of the documents (New Testament), then what other places could there be such gross errors as we not know it?

If you truly want the truth, and you may not, then there is so much truth to reclaim and Bet Emet stands ready to help you separate the lies from the truth in hopes your worship of the Father be in Truth and Spirit. Shalom.

JESUS BETRAYED FOR THIRTY PIECES OF SILVER...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH?

Matt 26:14-16 14 Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, 15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. 16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him. (KJV)

Matt 26:20-21 20 Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. 21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. (KJV)

The twelve disciples of Jesus (the personified Sun) are the twleve signs of the Zodiac.

The Sun (personfied Jesus) was betrayed by one of his Disciples (zodiac signs). According to the dictionary, the word "betrayed" means "to deceive, to lead astray, to deliver into the hands of ones enemy." This clearly refers to the Sign (at the autumnal equinox) that leads the Sun (Father) into the hands of the enemy (below the celestial equator), where Darkness rules (where night is longer than day time).

The Ancients wrote that the payment of Judas for his crime was thirty pieces of silver. They used the term "Silver" as a metaphor for Degrees. One sign of the Zodiac covers thrity degrees (thirty pieces) of arc. Thus we see that 12 Signs equals 360 Degrees which is EXACTLY the total arc made by the twelve Signs of the Zodiac and encircles the globe exactly.

JESUS CRUCIFIED AT THE PLACE OF THE SKULL...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Mat 27:22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified. Mat 27:23 And the governor said, Why, what evil bath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

Mat 27:28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe. Mat 27:29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews! Mat 27:30 And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head. Mat 27:31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him. Mat 27:32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross.

John 19:14 And it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! John 19:15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Caesar. John 19:16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away. John 19:17 And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

Answer for yourself: Is the account in the inspired, infallible, and inerrant New Testament concerning the place of the crucifixion of Jesus nothing more than a Solar-myth retold and we not know it?

THE ASTRONOMICAL ANALOGY EXPOSED

This word Golgotha is Connected to the Sign of Capricorn.

A definition pertaining to the Skull is found within both of the words, Capricorn and Golgotha. Let us look at the definition of Golgotha from my Holman's Bible Dictionary:

GOLGOTHA (gahl' guh thuh) Place name transliterated from Aramaic and or Hebrew into Greek and then into English meaning, the skull.

Also let us look from my American Heritage Dictionary and let us pay special note to definitions 4 & 5,

Cap~ri~corn (kap~ri-korn') also Cap~ri~cor~nus (kap'ri-kor~nes) --n.

1. A constellation in the equatorial region of the Southern Hemisphere, near Aquarius and Sagittarius.

2.a. The tenth sign of the zodiac in astrology.

b. One who is born under this sign. Also called Goat. [Middle English Capricorne, from Latin Capricornus:

caper, capr-, goat + cornu, horn; see ker- below.]....

4. Suffixed extended form *krrs-no-. CRANIUM; MIGRAINE, OLECRANON, from Greek kranion, skull, upper part of the head.

5. Suffixed form *kr-e.

a. CHARIVARI; CHEER, from Greek hare-, kara, HEAD;

b. CAROTID, from Greek karoun, to stupefy, be stupefied ("to feel heavy-headed");

So the message is crystal clear, Jesus (Sun) being crucified at the Place of the Skulls (Golgotha = Capricornus) is when the Sun (Christ) meets it's death at the winter solstice in December, in the sign of Capricorn (Golgotha).

The word Capricorn is very intriguing. Research this word with a good dictionary and you will discover some wisdom from the Ancients. The zodiacal sign of Capricorn (where Christ (the Sun) was killed) contains, in it's etymology, clues to it's hidden meaning. The word is divided into two parts, Capri means Goat, and Corn means (derived and associated) Horn.

Now pay close attention. One of the definitions of the word Goat is Scapegoat, and a definition of Horn is a symbol (person) of high honor and authority, a King, Prince. So here we have in the esoteric meaning of this Sign Capricorn; A King that is made into a Scapegoat (a sacrificial lamb, that dies so that others may live).

Answer for yourself: Did you understand what was just said?

If you have followed our ministry any length of time you hopefully have seen how the concepts of Biblical Atonement were negated by the Gentile writers of the New Testament and likewise how the Torah was made to be "passed away." It is in this Holy Word of YHVH that we find the methods given by the Divine Creator for atonement for sin; many of which do not require blood. This was know by the Jews who throughout their history often because of captivity, as well as distance, were not left without methods of atonement and ways to be right with God following their repentance from sin.

What we have written into the New Testament are concepts of "Capricorn atonement" held sacred by the Gentile star-gazers. You can thank Rome and its Sun-worshipping predecessors for this. Since Jesus' death was at this time of the year, they simply read their superstitions from their astrology into the life of Jewish Rabbi's death. His murder was made sacrificial and given ideas that related more to astrology and the Torah. You should think deeply and sky yourself what the "scapegoat," which is involved in Yom Kippur, has to do with Passover? Nothing! Atonement was to found in the fall at the High Holy Days as given by God; specifically Yom Kippur. Passover has nothing to do with atonement and atonement was never connected with it! Again we have been duped into following in the footsteps of the pagans for which Israel was to be their light and deliverance from such falsehoods.

JESUS CHRIST AS CREATOR....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Christian dogma teaches that it was not "God the Father,: but "God the Son" who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is.

The writer of the fourth Gospel says:

"All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made" (John. 1:8).

Again:

"He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10).

Again we can read many passages indicating the same...that creation was the work of the "Son of God and not God the Father":

Heb 1:2 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; (KJV)

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is the the only account of a human "Creator" or could have the same religious ideas been later applied to a man from Galilee which had been told in legends for hundreds of years previously?

EXAMINING THE EVIDENCE

Samuel Johnson, D. O. Allen (Allen's India, pp. 137 & 380), and Thomas Maurice (Indian Antiquities, vol. ii. p. 288), tell us that, according to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna, the Son, and the second person in the ever-blessed Trinity, "who is the origin and the end of all the worlds; all this universe came into being through him, the eternal maker" (Oriental Religions, p. 502).

In the holy book of the Hindoos, called the Bhagvat Geeta, may be found the following words of Chrishna, address to his "beloved disciple" Ar-jouran:

"I am the Lord of all created things" (Lecture iv. p. 51). "Mankind was created by me of four kinds, distinct in their principles, and in their duties; know me then to be the Creator of mankind, uncreated, and without decay" (Geeta, p. 52).

In Lecture VII, entitled: "Of the Principles of Nature, and the Vital Spirit," he also says:

"I am the creation and the dissolution of the whole universe. There is not anything greater than I, and all things hang on me."

Again in Lecture LX., entitled, "Of the Chief of Secrets and Prince of Science," Chrishna says:

"The whole world was spread abroad by me in my invisible form. All things are dependent on me." "I am the Father and the Other of this world, the Grandsire and the Preserver. I am the Holy One worthy to be known; the mystic figure O.M. (the Hindoo ineffable name and the mystic emblem of deity which is never uttered aloud, but only mentally by the devout....it signifies Brahma, Vishnou, and Siva, the Hindoo Trinity)..I am the journey of the good: the Comforter; the Creator; the Witness; the Resting-place; the Asylum and the Friend" (Geeta, p. 80).

In Lecture X., entitled, "Of the diversity of the Divine Nature," he says:

"I am the Creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Those who are endured with spiritual wisdom, believe this and worship me; their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice amongst themselves and delight in speaking of my name, and teaching one another my doctrine" (Geeta, p. 84).

Innumerable texts, similar to these, might be produced from the Hindoo Scriptures, but these are sufficient to show, in the words of Samuel Johnson quoted above, that, "According to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna who is the origin and the end of all the worlds;" and that "all this universe came into being through him, the Eternal Maker."

The Chinese believed in One Supreme God, to whose honor they burnt incense, but of whom they had no image. This "God the Father" was NOT the Creator, according to their theology or mythology; but they had another god, of whom they had statues or idols, called Natigai, who was the god of all terrestrial things; in fact, God, the Creator of this world which was inferior or subordinate to the Supreme Being from whom they petition for fine weather, or whatever else they want. He was their mediator.

According to ancient Persian mythology, there is one supreme essence, invisible and incomprehensible, named "Zeruane Akerene," which signifies "unlimited time," or "the eternal." From him emanated Ormuzd, the "King of Light," the "First-born of the Eternal One," etc. Now, this "First-born of the Eternal One" is he by whom all things were made, all things came into being through him; he is the Creator.

A large portion of the Zend-Avesta, the Persian Sacred Book or Bible, is filled with prayers to Ormuzd, God's First-Born. Let us look at just a couple of examples:

"I address my prayer to Ormuzd, Creator of all things; who always has been, who is, and who will be forever; ..."

"O Creator, I obey thy laws..."

The writer of the Gospel of John copies the same invocation as you can see in the following where he says that Jesus taught that prayers are to be offered in his name as was the pattern of Sun-worship above.

John 14:13 13 And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. (KJV)

Yet this is a direct contradiction to the teachings of Jesus:

Luke 11:1-2 1 And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples. 2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth. (KJV)

According to the religion of the ancient Assyrians, it was Marduk, the Logos, the Word, "the eldest son of Hea," "the Merciful One," "the Life-giver," etc., who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 404).

Adonis, the Lord and Savior, was believed to be the Creator of men, and god of the resurrection of the dead (Dunlap, Mysteries of Adoni, p. 156).

Prometheus, the Crucified Savior, is the divine forethought, existing before the souls of men, and the creator Hominium (Ibid., p. 156).

The writer of "The Gospel according to St. John," has made Christ Jesus co-eternal with God, as well as Creator, in these words:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God". "The same was in the beginning with God" (John 1:1-2).

Again, in praying to his Father, he makes Jesus say:

"And now, O father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was" (John 14:5).

Paul is made to say:

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Again:

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday , to-day, and forever" (Heb. 13:8).

St. John the Divine, in his "Revelation," has made Christ Jesus say:

"I am the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end"..."which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty" (Rev. 1:8, 22, 13)...."the first and the last" (Rev. 1:17, Rev. 12:13).

Hindoo Scripture also makes Chrishna "the first and the last," "the beginning and the end." We read in theGeeta, where Chrishna is reported to have said:

"I myself never was not" (Geeta, p. 35). "Learn that he by whom all things were formed " (meaning himself) "is incorruptible" (Geeta, p. 36). "I am eternity and non-eternity" (Lecture IX, p 89). "I am before all things, and the mighty ruler of the universe" (Lecture X. p. 83). " I am the beginning, the middle, and the end of all things" (Lecture X, p. 85).

Ar-jouan, his disciple, address him thus:

"Thou are the Supreme Being, incorruptible, worthy to be known; thou are prime supporter of the universal orb; thou art the never-failing and eternal guardian of religion; thou art from all beginning, and I esteem thee" (Lecture IX. p. 91). "Thou art "the Divine Being, before all other gods" (Lecture X. p. 84).

In another Holy Book of the Hindoos, called Vishnu Purana, we also read that Vishnu, in the form of Chrishna, "who descended into the womb of the (virgin) Devaki, and was born as her son" was "without beginning, middle, or end" (Vishnu Purana, p. 440).

Buddha is also Alpha and Omgea, without beginning or end, "The Lord," "the Possessor of All," "He who is Omnipotent and Everlastingly to be Contemplated," "the Supreme Being, the Eternal One."

Lao-Kiun, the Chinese virgin-born God, who came upon earth about six hundred years before Jesus, was without beginning. It was said that he had existed from all eternity (Prog. of Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 200).

According to the Zend Avesta, Ormuzd, the first-born of the Eternal One, is he "who is, always has been, and who will be forever" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. ii. p. 207).

Zeus was Alpha and Omega. an Orphic lines runs thus:

"Zeus is the beginning, Zeus the middle, out of Zeus all things have been made" (Muller, Chips, vol. ii. p. 15).

Bacchus, was without beginning or end. An inscriptions on an ancient medal, referring to him, reads thus:

"It is I who leads you; it is I who protects you, and who saves you. I am Alpha and Omega."

Beneath this inscription is a serpent with his tail in his mouth, thus forming a circle, which was an emblem of eternity among the ancients.

Without enumerating them, we can from the evidence say that the majority of the virgin-born gods were like Christ Jesus...without beginning or end..and that many of them were considered Creators of all things. This has led M. Dridon to remark (Hist. de. Dieu) that in early works of art, Christ Jesus is made to take the place of the Father in creation and in similar labors, just as in heathen religions an inferior deity does the work under a superior one.

Now this Redeemer and Savior was, as you have seen, is the Sun, and Prof. Max Muller tells us that in the Vedic mythology, the Sun is not the being Deva only, "who performs his daily task in the sky, but he is supposed to perform much greater work. He is looked upon, in fact, as the Ruler, as the Establisher, and the Creator of the World " (Muller,Origin of Religions, p. 264).

Having been invoked as the "Life-bringer," the Sun is also called, in the Rig Veda, "the Breath of Life of all that move and rest;" and lastly he becomes "The Maker of all things," by whom all the worlds have been brought together (Muller, Origins of Religions, p. 268).

There is a prayer in the Vedas, called "Gayatree," which consists of three measured lines, and is considered the holiest and most efficacious of all their religious forms. Sir William Jones translated it thus:

"Let us adore the supremacy of that spiritual Sun, the godhead, who illuminates all, who re-creates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return; whom we invoke to direct our undertakings aright in our progress toward his holy seat."

With Seneca (a Roman philosopher, born at Cordova, Spain, 61 B.C.) then we can say:

"You may call the Creator of all things by different names (Bacchus, Hercules, Mercury, etc.), but they are only different names of the same divine being, the Sun."

Now we find the exact same things said about Jesus in the New Testament as its writers attribute "creation" to the Son of the Sun; to Jesus:

Again, we have the "pattern" of Sun-worship reapplied to the life of a Jewish Rabbi and hoped for Messiah by the Gentile Church....Judaism, the faith of Jesus, teaches monotheism and that all things were created by God the Father only:

- Gen 1:1 1 In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. (KJV)
- Gen 1:21 21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen. 2:3 3 And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made. (KJV)
- Gen 2:4 4 These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens, (KJV)
- Gen 5:1 1 This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 6:7 7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them. (KJV)
- Deut 4:32 32 For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? (KJV)

As if you didn't notice God existed long before the "sun" which He created later:

- Gen 1:14-19 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: 15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. 16 And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. 17 And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, 18 And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good. 19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day. (KJV)

But primitive man, knowing God through what he could only see, fashioned myths and beliefs involving the cosmos to explain to himself the God he could not see, and we have this legacy in the Roman New Testament in which we are lead to believe as did the ancients that "Sun became the Son."

THE ONLY SENSIBLE CONCLUSION THAT CAN BE MADE BY THE THINKING BELIEVER

THE APPLICATION OF GENTILE SUN-MYTHS HAS BEEN APPLIED TO THE LIFE OF JESUS AS DEPICTED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

Sometimes it is better to read one's conclusion before one reads the evidence for them. Let me say from my heart that I believe every Christian wants to know the truth about the Jewish Jesus. Without a doubt this is unquestionable. However, as you can see, because of the corruption of the oral traditions as held about Jesus by his earliest Gentile followers, what we have inherited today is anything but the truth. Today we are the beneficiaries of the sciences of Archeology, Anthropology, Astronomy, Astrology; beneficiaries of increased knowledge of Biblical History, Biblical Language, Biblical Culture, etc. We live with the added knowledge contributed by the discoveries made available by the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Nag Hammadi Library whose secrets have been available for over 50 years at present. We must not live in ignorance of such momentous advancements in knowledge if we want to know the "truth" about this man from Galilee.

After the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E., and with the vacuum created by the dispersion of the Jewish nation, the ordained authorities for the Jesus Movement were scattered and almost ceased to exist. In this wake of the absence of Jewish authority for a Gentile mission would surface a Gentile Movement which no longer paid regards to its "mother church." Unbridled, the Gentiles and anti-Semitism, mixed with improper understanding of the Jewish doctrines associated with Jesus, would culminate in a Gentile Church which would revert back to its pagan heritage. Along with that will come the corruption of the oral traditions and this will unfortunately be recorded finally in documents which today are sadly accepted as "infallible, inerrant, and inspired." Such documents you now have seen are a mixture of truth and the error of Sun Worship personified in the life of a Jewish Rabbi named Yeshua.

SO WHAT DID WE SEE IN THESE ARTICLES?

According to the Bible, Mankind was created in the image of God. This poses a very interesting question as to the descriptive "appearance of God." If we are, indeed, fashioned in the image of God, does this mean therefore, that God is Man, or does He (God) have the appearance of Man? Now, if we envision God in the likeness of Man, does this include human frailties? We, as humans, are depended upon the universe for our survival. We cannot exist without: Fire, Earth, Air, and Water. Primitive man understood this as the first "Trinity" where Earth, Air, and Water were "All in All" within Fire as symbolized by the Sun. Again, like before we find that the Ancients personified the forces of nature as shown by this sculpture from India as we find these three forces in the form of a "man."

Since Mankind was made in the "image of God" is it possible that the Creator God could be likewise dependent upon these same elements? These verses are unequivocal and clear. And according to these verses, Mankind "looks" like God and have the "characteristics" of God Almighty. Mankind has His image.

If we look up the word "image" in the American Heritage Dictionary we find:

1. A reproduction of the form of a person or an object, especially a sculptured likeness

2. Physics, an optically formed duplicate, counterpart, or other representative reproduction of an object, especially an optical reproduction of an object formed by a lens or mirror

3. One that closely or exactly resembles another, a double

Mankind has God's likeness.

If we look up the word "likeness" in the American Heritage Dictionary we find:

1. The state, QUALITY, or fact of being like; resemblance

2. An imitate appearance; a semblance

3. A pictorial, graphic, or sculptured representation of something, an image

If we attempt to further our understanding by identifying synonyms: likeness, similarity, similitude, resemblance, analogy, affinity. These nouns denote agreement or conformity, as in character, NATURE, or appearance between persons of things. Likeness implies close agreement.

I am not making a play on words. These definitions get to the heart of what the Biblical verses in Genesis actually means:

Gen 1:26-27 26 And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)

The two words, Image and Likeness, define not only appearance but even the Nature and Quality of the Creation (Image).

Can you imagine the Creator God being subject to the same needs, weaknesses, and limitations that we endure? I most certainly cannot.

Some say that Man's likeness to God refers to the spirit and not to the flesh. The English word Spirit is derived from the Latin, spiritus, which means breath or to breathe, the act of inhaling and exhaling. So what are we saying, that God breathes as we do? Again, we are making God dependent upon a product of His creation, that is to say air, which is the vital constituent of human respiration?

Let us define the word spiritual:

1. Of, relating to, consisting of, or having the nature of spirit; not tangible or material, IMMATERIAL

2. Of, concerned with, or affecting the soul

3. Of, from, or relating to God, deific

4. Of or belonging to a church or religion; sacred

5. Relating to or having the nature of spirits or a spirit, supernatural

The word spiritual seems to indicate that which is unseen and immaterial, unearthly, that which relates to our soul, and what is Soul?

Again, for the last time let us understand the word "soul" as taken from the American Heritage Dictionary:

Soul:

1. The animating and vital principle in human beings, credited with the faculties of though, action, and emotion and often conceived as an immaterial entity

2. The spiritual nature of human beings, regarded as immortal, separable from the body at death, and susceptible to happiness or misery in a future state

3. The disembodied spirit of a dead human being; a shade

Take note that the definition of the word, soul, goes to our actions, our thoughts, our emotions. Should we conclude that our emotional makeup is an accurate reflection of God's demeanor? Could God be subject to the same emotional hang-ups as we?

Not only we, but primitive man struggled with understanding what it meant to be "created in the Image of God." Mankind knew he possessed a spirit, which was corruptible. But can God, a Spirit Himself, be corruptible as Man? Surely not. Thus you can see that early Mankind was struggling to understand, what it meant to be created in the Image of God. As you can see I could go on for hundreds of pages, trying to explain with accuracy, in what manner Mankind, was created in the Image of God, and not come to a definitive solution; that is, if we try to make our conclusions agree with traditional Western religious precepts. We must never forget the Bible was not written with a Western mind-set!

TO UNDERSTAND CORRECTLY ...WE MUST PUT OURSELVES IN THE SHOES OF THOSE WE READ

As with many of our commonly accepted religious concepts in Christianity, our traditional beliefs and understandings of being created in the Image of God are in error. Being created in the Image of God does not mean what most of us have believed throughout our lives. When the Ancients wrote that we were created in God's Image, they were propounding a hypotheses based on human correlations to the Cosmos. Correlations that are Exact to the smallest detail.

The Ancients discovered undeniable correlations between the biology of the human species and the movements of celestial bodies within the stellar and solar universe. Correlations proportionately related in Time (duration) and Chronology (sequence) of Time. These correlations exist between the human species and the total universe, inclusive of the Solar System, and of the Solar System to the expanded universe (infinity).

What is said next is very important for you to understand. The Ancients saw the universe and their immediate environment as well as the capacities embodied within their own intellect as the most trustworthy representations of the Creator God.

The Universe (terrestrial and celestial) appeared to our ancestors as the ONLY authentic image of the Father.

The Cosmos was undoubtedly His Handiwork, and we, the Human creation was likewise the Handiwork of the Almighty. In consequence, when our fathers discovered that they were indeed biologically and chronologically correlated to the Cosmos, they transposed this knowledge to the written word and language as.....We (humanly) are created in the Image and the Likeness of God. One of the most noticeable correlations involves the life and light cycles of the female species of mankind to the moon. The Ancients discovered that the life (menstrual) cycle of the woman ran 28 days in correspondence with the light (phase) cycle of the moon, which also runs at 28 days intervals. They notices likewise that the phases of the woman's cycle and the moon's cycle were relational. They reasoned: "The New Moon begins in darkness and waxes to its's Fullness at 14 days (midway through the cycle of light). When the moon reaches it's fullness, after 14 days of growth (waxing), it then commences to discharge it's light so that by the end of the 28 day period all light has been shed (flushed) from it's celestial body. The life (menses) cycle of the woman of the species likewise begins in darkness (undeveloped). At the beginning of the cycle (out of darkness, undeveloped) the egg begins to grow within the ovary until it reaches maturity (fullness) at 14 days, at which point it (the egg) is released and flows toward the uterus from whence it shall be discharged (shed) from the body. If the egg is fertilized, it shall be discharged after an appointed time (280 days, the natural period of human gestation) as a new individual. If the egg is not fertilized, it shall be discharged in one tenth of the appointed time (28 days, the nature period of human menstruation) as the dead remains of a once fertile germ of life (light)" (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, 1995, p. 7-8).

In other words, primitive man interpreted his life as seen in the stars. In fact the whole of Mankind's "life-cycle" could be understood by him by the pattern of the Cosmos.

The Ancients studies ever further into the relational parallels between the human species and the Solar System which they understood as the Handiwork of the Creator God. You can now see that in many ways early Mankind saw themselves "in the stars" and interpreted this as how they were, in many ways, created in the Image of God (the universe being a symbol of God to them). Within the chronology of the Solar System, they found analogies, than can only be described as astounding and categorically conclusive in proving the correlative link between humanity (the microcosm) and the universe (the macrocosm).

As the Ancients looked to the stars in hopes of "uncovering more knowledge of God" they took notice that the Sun passed yearly through the twelve constellations of the Zodiac. The Zodiac is a system of astronomical symbols and emblems employed for the purpose of teaching and illustrating two great truths:

1. The existence of the ONE Spiritual, invisible, omnipresent, and omnipotent God, and

2. The immortality of the soul of man

This might surprise you but these two doctrines were originally taught in all the ancient Mysteries of the Gentiles in the beginning, but over time degenerated into a corrupt system of Solar Worship. The Sun, originally intended as a symbol only of the true God, was in time confounded with the person of God Himself, and thus itself worshipped as a god (Brown, Stellar Theology and Masonic Astronomy, Kessinger Pub. Co., p. 16-17). Over time, as in Greece and India, so also in ancient Egypt, the "symbols for God" became in the popular mind actual gods, and the people degenerated into gross idolatry" (Brown, Stellar Theology and Masonic Astronomy, Kessinger Pub. Co., p. 19).

Rom 1:20-25 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: 21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. 22 Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, 23 And changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. 24 Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves: 25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen. (KJV)

Through the benefit of Archeology we know for a fact that the ancient Mysteries of the Gentiles originally taught the unity of God, and that their moral code was both pure and exalted, but over time, as stated, these ancient Mysteries became corrupt in their turn. Their crowning secret knowledge was the existence of the ONE and ONLY God and they "represented Him" through various symbols (i.e., Sun) which were later to be "personified, glorified, and deified." Originally the Sun was only a symbol of the great Creator, and not itself a divine being. Again, as you have seen the Sun becomes the "Son" and we as followers of Jesus have inherited a religious belief system that equates the two as "one" thus making such ones "idolators."

TYING IT ALL TOGETHER FOR THE CHRISTIAN

As said earlier, primitive man interpreted his life as seen in the stars. In fact the whole of the "life-cycle" of Mankind could be understood by him by the pattern of the Cosmos. The problem is when these simple "understandings" degenerated over time into false beliefs that contradicted the Revelation from God as well as His Word do we have problems. Many of these degenerated and subsequent evolutions of Gentile "Solar Myths" and their "interpretations" have found their way into your "inspired and infallible New Testament." The Gentile writers of the New Testament have written into the life of a Jewish Rabbi named Jesus many of these "degenerated Solar Myths" which often are deceptive and misleading to those wishing to know the truth about this man and his message. It is these "Solar Cycles" which were written into the accounts of Jesus' life by Gentile reactors and editors of the New Testament which not only confuse the truth but often mask it from the reader.

Sometimes these "Solar Myths" which have been applied to Jesus' life in the New Testament are harmless; however, at times that are a direct negation of the Revelation from God and a direct contradiction of the Jewish Masoretic Text and the Bible Jesus' used and tragically those who believe such and follow such in faith end up in sin and never know it until they die.

I wish to share some closing thoughts.

Throughout the whole of the legends we have seen, Christ Jesus is the toiling Sun (being made equal with God) laboring for the benefit of others, not his own, and doing hard service for a mean and cruel generation. Watch his sun-like career of brilliant conquest, checked with intervals of storm, and declining to a death clouded with sorrow and derision. He is in constant company with twelve apostles, the twelve signs of the zodiac. The number twelve appears in many Sun-Myths. It refers to the twelve hours of the day or night, or the twelve moons of the lunar year (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 165; Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175). Osiris, the Egyptian Savior, had twelve apostles (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175). In all religions of antiquity the number twelve, which applies to the twelve signs of the zodiac, are reproduced in all kinds and sorts of forms. For instance, such are the twelve great gods; the twelve apostles or Osiris; the twelve apostles of Jesus; the twelve sons of Jacob; the twelve tribes; the twelve altars of James; the twelve labors of Mars; the twelve brothers of Arvaux; the twelve gods Consents; the twelve governors in the Manichean System; the adectyas of the East Indies; the twelve asses of the Scandinavians; the city of the twelve gates in the Apocalypse; the twelve wards of the city; the twelve sacred cushions, on which the Creator sits in the cosmogony of the Japanese; the twelve precious stones of the rational, or the ornament worn by the high priest of the Jews, etc. (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, pp. 39-40).

Speaking of the Sun in allegorical terms, "During the course of his life's journey across the sky as seen daily he is called "The God of Earthly Blessing," "The Savior through whom a new life springs," "The Preserver," "the Redeemer," etc. Almost at his birth the Serpent of darkness attempts to destroy him. Temptations to sloth and luxury are offered him in vain. He has his work to do, and nothing can stay him from doing it, as nothing can arrest the Sun in his journey through the heavens. Like all other solar heroes, he has his faithful women who love him, and the Marys and Martha here play the part. Of his toils it is scarcely necessary to speak in detail. But a thousand variations on the story of the great conflict which all the Sun-gods wage against the demon of darkness. He astonishes his tutor when sent to school. This we might expect to be the case, when an incomparable and incommunicable wisdom is the heritage of the Sun. He also represents the wisdom and beneficence of the bright Being who brings life and light to men. As the Sun wakens the earth to life when the winter is done, so Chrishna, Buddha, Horus, AEsculapius, and Christ Jesus were raisers of the dead. When the leaves fell and withered on the approach of winter, the "daughter of the earth" would be spoken of as dying or dead, and, as no other power than that of the Sun can recall vegetation to life, this child of earth would be represented as buried in a sleep from which the touch of the Sun alone could rouse her" (Doane,Bible Myths, p. 498).

Christ Jesus as portrayed in the Gentile New Testament, then, is the Sun, in his short career and early death. He is the child of the Dawn, whose soft, violet hues tint the clouds of early mornings; his father being the Sky, the "Heavenly Father," who has looked down with love upon the Dawn, and overshadowed her. When his career on earth is ended, and he expires, the loving mother, who parted from him in the morning of his life, is at his side, looking on the death of the Son whom she cannot save from the doom which is on him, while her tears fall on his body like rain at sundown. From her he is parted at the beginning of his course; to her he is united at its close. But Christ Jesus, like Chrishna, Buddha, Osiris, Horus, Mithras, Apollo, Attys, and others, rises again, and thus the myth takes us a step beyond the legend of Serpedon and others, which stop at the end of the eastward journey, when the night is done.

According to the Christian calendar, the birthday of John the Baptist is on the day of the summer solstice, when the sun begins to decrease. How true to nature then are the words attributed to him in the fourth Gospel, when he says that he must decrease, and Jesus increase.

John 3:30 30 He must increase, but I must decrease. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence?

Among the ancient Teutonic nations, fires were lighted, on the tops of hills, on the 24th of June, in honor of the Wending Sun. This custom is still kept up in Southern Germany and the Scotch highlands, and it is the day selected by the Roman Catholic Church to celebrate the nativity of John the Baptist (Mallet, Northern Antiquities, p. 505).

Mosehim, the church historian, speaking of the uncertainty of the time when Christ Jesus was born, say:

"The uncertainty of this point is of no great consequence. We know that the Sun of Righteousness has shone upon the world; and although we cannot fix the precise period in which he arose, this will not preclude us from enjoying the direction and influence of his vital and salutary beams."

These sacred legends abound with such expressions as can have no possible or conceivable application to any other than to the "God of day." He is "light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory (or brightness) of his people."

Notice the similarity with Luke 2:32:

A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. (KJV)

He is come "a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in him should not abide in darkness"...John 12:46...

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. (KJV)

He is "the light of the world"...John 9:5:...

As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. (KJV)

He "is light, and in him no darkness is"... I Jn. 1:5....

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. (KJV)

"All are agreed," says Cicero, "that Apollo is none other than the Sun, because the attributes which are commonly ascribed to Apollo do so wonderfully agree thereto."

Just so surely as Apollo is the Sun, so is the Lord Christ Jesus as depicted in the New Testament is the Sun. That which is so conclusive respecting the Pagan deities, applies also to to the God of the Christians; but, like the Psalmist of old, they cry, "Touch not my Christ..."

Many Christian writers of antiquity, as well as today, have seen that the history of their Lord and Savior is simply the history of the Sun, but they either say nothing, or, like some, claim that the Sun is a "type" of the true Sun of Righteousness. Mr Lundy, with whom I strongly disagree says, in his Monumental Christianity:

"Is there no bright Sun of Righteousness, no personal and loving Son of God, of whom the material Sun has been the type and symbol, in all ages and among all nations? What power is it that comes from the Sun to give light and heat to all created things? If the symbolical Sun leads such a great earthly and heavenly flock, what must be said to the "true" and only begotten Son of God? If Apollo was adopted by early Christian art as a type of the Good Shepherd of the New Testament, then this interpretation of the Sun-god among all nations must be the solution of the universal mythos, or what other solution can it have? To what other historical personage but Christ can it apply? If this mythos has no spiritual meaning, then all religion becomes mere idolatry, or the worship of material things" (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, p. 117).

Mr. Lundy's premise is that Christianity "purified" paganism. Hogwash!!!!

The problem with such a noble hypothesis is that it can be shown that Yeshua, a Jewish Rabbi, who is the center of the Christian faith, never believed or adhered to the very core doctrines of this "purifying" Gentile Christian Church.

In fact it can be easily proven that the historical Jesus of Second Temple Judaism believed opposite to hundreds of current Gentile Christian teachings of today!

Lundy's premise cannot hold up under scrutiny. According to this theory, the whole Pagan religions was typical of Christ and Christianity. Sadly I must agree that today Christianity and Pagan religion of antiquity are basically the same, but again a Jewish Rabbi is the heart and center of such Christianity today and he never believed what current Christians teach and believe because he knew what few of us today know...that the roots of such teachings are heathen and stem from Sun worship and are at their core idolatrous!

If men like Lundy and television evangelists and Gentile Pastors are correct then answer me the biggest question in the world.

Answer for yourself: Why then were not the Pagans the Lord's "chosen" people instead of the children of Israel which rejected and yet reject such "Christian teachings?" THINK!

The Jews as a nation, Jews like Jesus, were to be a light to those of us who still believe the lies of our Gentile forefathers! It is Israel who God called His Holy Nation and His Royal Priesthood and not the Aryan nations. It was Israel who was chosen to lead the Gentile peoples away from pagan superstitions and Sun Worship. Sadly, the vast majority of the Gentile nations of the world flounder in the same Sun Worship today....it is called Christianity!

The early Christians were charged with being a sect of Sun worshippers (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 283). Mr. King says, in his Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 68: "There can be no doubt that the head of Serapis (Sun god) marked as the face is by the grave and pensive majesty, supplied the first idea for the conventional portraits of the Savior."

Read that again!

The Imperial Russian Collection boasts of a head of Christ Jesus which is said to be very ancient. Mr. King says of it: "It is in reality a head of Serapis, seen in front and crowned in Persia boughs, easily mistaken for thorns, through the bushel on the head leaves no doubt as to the real personage intended" (Ibid. p.137).

It must not be forgotten, in connection with this, that the worshippers of Serapis, or the Sun, were called "Christians" (History of Our Lord in Art, vol. i. p. 31).

Read that again!

Thus we see that the Christians took the paintings and statues of the Sun-gods Serapis and Apollo as models, when they wished to represent their Savior Jesus. Mr. King, speaking of this god, and his worshippers, says:

"There is very good reason to believe that in the East the worship of Serapis was at first combined with Christianity, and gradually merged into it with an entire change, not substance, carrying with it many of its ancient notions and rites" (King, Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 48).

Read that again!

Again he says:

"In the second century the syncretistic sects that had sprung up in Alexandria, the very hotbed of Gnosticism, found out in Serapis a prophetic type of Christ, of the Lord and Creator of all" (Ibid. p. 68).

Dear ones the facts are hard to avoid.

The early Gentile Christians, or worshippers of the Sun, under the name of "Christ," had, as all Sun worshippers, a peculiar regard to the East, the quarter in which their god arose, to which point they ordinarily directed their prayers (Bell, Pantheon, vol. i. p. 13).

The followers of Mithra always turned towards the East, when they worshipped; the same was done by the Brahmans of the East and the Christians of the West. In the ceremony of baptism, the catechumen was placed with his face to the West, the symbolical representation of the prince of darkness, in opposition to the East, and made to spit towards it at the evil one, and renounce his works.

Tertullian says, that Christians were taken for worshippers of the Sun because they prayed toward the East, after the manner of those who adored the Sun. The Essenes, whom Eusebius calls Christians, always turned to the east to pray. The Essenes met once a week, and spent the night in singing hymns which lasted till sun-rising. As soon as dawn appeared, they retired to their cells, after saluting one another. Pliny says the Christians of Bithynia met before it was light, and sang hymns to Christ, as to a God. After their service they saluted one another. Surely the circumstances of the two classes of people meeting before daylight, is a very remarkable coincidence. It is just what the Persian Magi, who were Sun worshippers, were in the habit of doing.

When a Manichaean Christian came over to the orthodox Christians, he was required to curse his former friends in the following terms:

"I curse Zarades (Zoroaster) who, Manes said, had appeared as a god before his time among the Indians and Persians, and whom he calls the Sun. I curse those who say Christ is the Sun, and who make prayers to the Sun, and who do not pray to the true God, only towards the East, but who turn themselves round, following the motions of the Sun with their innumerable supplications. I curse those person who says Zarades and Budas and Christ and the Sun are all one and the same"

THE LAMB OF GOD AND THE CONSTELLATION ARIES

There are not many circumstances more striking than than of Christ Jesus being originally worshipped under the form of a Lamb, the actual Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world. It was not until the Council of Constantinople, called In Trullo, held so late as the year 707, that pictures of Christ Jesus were ordered to be drawn in the form of a man. It was ordained that, in the place of the figure of a Lamb, the symbol used to that time, the figure of a man nailed to a cross, should in the future be used. From this decree, the identity of the worship of the Celestial Lamb and the Christian Savior is certified beyond the possibility of doubt, and the mode by which the ancient superstitions were propagated is satisfactorily shown. Nothing can more clearly prove the general practice than the order of a council to regulate. This decree is today in the Vatican library. What is even more startling when you come to know it is that most of the Sun-gods were represented as the "Lamb of God" as seen in the picture of Chrishna.

The worship of the constellation of Aries was the worship of the Sun in his passage through that sign. "That constellation was called by the ancients the Lamb of God. He was also called the Savior, and was said to save mankind from their sins. He was always honored with the appellation of Dominus or Lord. He was called The Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world (remember this terminology was long prior to the historical Jesus by thousands of years). The devotees addressed him in their litany, constantly repeating the word, "O Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Grant us thy peace."

On an ancient medal of the Phenicians this Lamb of God is described with the Cross and the Rosary, which shows that they were both used in his worship long before the historical Jesus.

Yearly the Sun-God, as the zodiacal horse (Aries) was supposed by the Vedic Aryajs to die to save all flesh. Hence the practice of sacrificing horses. The "guarding spirits" of the prince Sakya Buddha sing the following hymn:

"Once when thou was the white horse

In pity for the suffering of man,

Thou didst fly across heaven to the region of the evil demons,

To secure the happiness of mankind.

Persecutions without end,

Revilings and many prisons,

Death and murder;

These hast thou suffered with love and patience

Forgiving thine executioners" (Lillie, Buddha and Early Buddhism, p. 93).

The solar horse, with two serpents upon his head (the Buddhist Aries) is Buddha's symbol, and Aries is the symbol of Christ (Lillie, Buddha and Early Buddhism, p. 110).

THE SYMBOL OF THE FISH AND THE CONSTELLATION PISCES

Christ Jesus was also symbolized as a fish, and that it is to be seen on all the ancient Christian monuments.

Answer for yourself: But what does the Christian Savior have to do with a fish? Why was he called a "fish"?

It is because the fish was another emblem for the Sun. Abarbanel says:

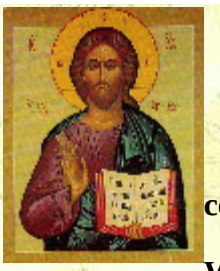
"The sign of Christ's coming is the junction of Saturn and Jupiter, in the Sign Pisces" (King, Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 138).

Apply the astronomical emblem of Pisces to Jesus, does not seem more absurd than applying the astronomical emblem of the Lamb. They applied to him the monogram of the Sun, IHS, [notice the Sun and the Cross] the astronomical and alchemical sign of Aries, or the ram, or Lamb; and, in short, what was there that was Heathenish they they have not applied to him?

The preserving god Vishnu, the Sun, was represented as a fish, and so was the Syrian Sun-god Dagon, who was also a Preserver or Savior. The Fish was sacred among many nations of antiquity, and is to be seen on their monuments.

Thus we see that everything at last centers in the Sun!

THE INFLUENCE OF CONSTANTINE...THE POWER THAT GUARANTEED YOU WON'T KNOW THE TRUTH TODAY



Simply said Constantine was a Sun worshipper before his "conversion" to the Christian faith as well as afterwards as well! These are the facts of history if you care to look.

Constantine, the first Christian emperor, had on his coins the figure of the Sun, with the legend: "To the invincible Sun, my companion and guardian," as being a representation, says Mr. King, "either of the ancient Phoebus, or the new Sun of Righteousness, equally acceptable to both Christian and Gentile, from the double interpretation of which the type was susceptible" (King, Gnostics, p. 49).

The worship of the Sun, under the name Mithra, "long survived in Rome, under the Christian emperors, and, doubtless, much longer in the remoter districts of the semi-independent provinces (Ibid. p. 45).

THE DEPICTION OF CHRIST WITH A HALO

One only needs to look at early Christian art to know theology. Christ Jesus is represented with a halo of glory surrounding his head, a florid complexion, long golden locks of hair, and a flowing robe. Now, all Sun-gods, from Chrishna of India to Baldur of Scandinavia, are represented with a halo of glory surrounding their heads, and the flowing locks of golden hair, and the flowing robe, are not wanting. But we must not forget that Jesus's depiction by the Gentile Church is nothing more than the carrying over of ancient Sun-Myths as seen in this example of Chrisina with a corresponding halo or Sun-burst 800 years before Jesus.

We must remember that "long, flowing golden locks of hair on these crucified Sun-gods was indicative of the rays of the Sun. Indra, the crucified Sun-god of the Hindus, was represented with golden locks (Cox, Aryan Myths. vol. i. p. 341). Mithras, the Persian Savior, was represented with long flowing locks. Izdubar, the god and hero of the Chaldeans, was represented with long flowing locks of hair (Smith, Chaldean Account of Genesis, p. 193), and so was his counterpart, the Hebrew Sampson. The Sakya-prince (Buddha) is described as an Aryan by Buddhistic tradition; his face was reddish, his hair of light color and curly, his general appearance of great beauty (Bunsen, The Angel-Messiah, p. 15). Serapis has, in some instances, long hair formally turned back, and disposed in ringlets hanging down upon his breast and shoulders like that of a woman. His whole person, too, is always enveloped in drapery reaching to his feet (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. 104). As for yellow hair, there is no evidence that Greeks have ever commonly possessed it; but no other color would do for a solar hero, and it accordingly characterizes the entire company of them, wherever found (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 202). Helios (the Sun) is called by the Greeks the "yellow-haired" (Goldzhier, Hebrew Mythology, p. 137). The Sun's rays is signaled by the flowing golden locks which stream from the head of Kephalos, and fall over the shoulders of Bellerphon (Cox, Aryan Mytho., vol. i. p. 107). Perseus, son of the Virgin Danae, was called the "Golden Child" (Ibid. vol. ii. p. 58). The light of the early morning is not more pure than was the color of his fair cheeks, and the golden locks streamed bright over his shoulders, like the rays of the sun when they rest on the hills at midday (Tales of Ancient Greece, p. 83). The Savior Dionysus wore a long flowing robe, and had long golden hair, which streamed from his head over his shoulders (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 293). Ixion was the "Beautiful and Mighty," with holden hair flashing a glory from his head, dazzling as the rays which stream from Helios, when he drove his chariot up the heights of heaven; like the vesture which the Gun-god gave to the wise maiden Medeia, who dwelt in Kolchis (Tales of Ancient Greece, p. 47). Theseus enters the city of Athens, as Christ Jesus is said to have entered Jerusalem, with a long flowing robe, and with his golden hair tied gracefully behind his head (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 63).

Thus we see that long locks of golden hair and a flowing robe, are mythological attributes of he Sun. By a process of metaphor, the rays of the Sun were changed into golden hair, into spears and lances, and robes of light.

We see, then, that Christ Jesus, like Christ Buddha, Chrishna, Mithra, Osiris, Horus, Apollo, Hercules and others, is none other than a personification of the Sun as depicted in much of the New Testament, and that the Christians, like their predecessors the Pagans, are really Sun worshippers in many ways. The Sun-Myth has been added to the histories of these personages, in a greater or less degree, just as it has been added to the history of many other real personages. It it be urged that the attribution to Christ Jesus of qualities or powers belonging to the Pagan deities would hardly seem reasonable, the answer must be that nothing is done in his case which has not been done in the case of almost every other member of that great company of the gods. The tendency of myths to reproduce themselves, with differences only of names and local coloring, becomes especially manifest after perusing the legendary histories of the gods of antiquity. It is a fact demonstrated of history, that when one nation of antiquity came in contact with another, they adopted each other's myths without hesitation. After the Jews had been taken captives to Babylon, around the history of their King Solomon accumulated the fables which were related of Persian heroes. When the fame of Cyrus and Alexander became known over the then known world, the popular Sun-Myth was interwoven with their true history. The mythical history of Perseus is, in all essential features, the history of the Attic hero Theseus, and of the Thebian CEdipus, and they all reappear with heightened colors in the myths of Hercules. We have the same thing again in the mythical and religious history of Chrishna; it is, in nearly all its essential features, the history of Buddha, and reappears again, with heightened colors, in the history of Christ Jesus. The myths of Buddha and Jesus differ from the legends of the other virgin-born Saviors only in the fact that in their cases it has gathered round unquestionable historical personages.

In other words, an old myth has been added to names undoubtedly historical. Such is the case for Jesus!

In closing, as a Christian and one who honestly desires to be a follower of Jesus, then you should be constantly asking yourself two questions:

1. What does any of this have to do with a Jewish Rabbi which preached repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God?

2. Where in the religion of this Jewish Rabbi does a non-Jew, a Godfearer, find his place?

If you would like more information on how you, a non-Jew, can be assured that you are a true follower of Yeshua then let us know and we will share with you things that will strengthen your walk with God. Shalom.
